This led to a discontinuance of the use of whisky at barn-raising in the county. Her sons grew up, strong, vigorous men, and did good work in helping to civilize and Christianize the world; their descendants are all of a high type of intellectual and moral men and women. If she had yielded this little point they might have become, like many of their neighbors, drunkards.

Our stout-hearted pioneer forefathers redeemed the land and drove out the wild beasts and serpents; but there are vices and malignant customs still to be conquered, for which we need women of high souls and gentle spirits, like Christiana Dickson.—Sel.

EDUCATIONAL.

—The following colleges have reported more than 1,000 students: Harvard, 1,690; Columbia, 1,489; University of Michigan, 1,475; Oberlin, 1,302; Yale, 1,134; Northwestern, 1,100; University of Pennsylvania, 1,069.

—Pres. L. N. Stratton reports from the Wesleyan churches of the East which he is visiting, a good degree of interest in the Theological Seminary at Wheaton. The Educational Board selected Rev. J. N. Bedford of Lindenwood, Ill., to assist in the instruction of the seminary next year.

—The colleges of Michigan are overwhelmingly prohibition in sentiment. The following colleges are specimens of proof. Kalamazoo took a vote of 105 for prohibition to one against it; at Ypsilanti Business College two-thirds of the students are for prohibition; the State University at Adrian has a prohibition club of 200 members; Hillsdale College a club of 70 and the State Normal 60; Albion College has a club of 60, while the Agricultural College prohibition club has 100 members.

—The academy at Dunlap, Kansas, where S. A. Starr was almost killed by a stone thrown from a mob, is under the charge of the Associate Synod. The annual report is regarded as encouraging. Mr. Andrew Atchison, who has been giving himself with astonishing Christian self-sacrificing devotion to the school work at Dunlap, has been re-elected for the coming year, or until a suitable and available person can be found to take his place. This is a work that loudly calls for the united sympathies, prayers, and efforts of the entire membership of the Associate Church.

—Mr. Moody's Bible School for college students from June 30 to July 12, opened with a large attendance, between 400 and 500 young men being present, representing, it is said, every State in the Union and several foreign countries. Formality was discarded as much as possible, and much of the teaching was conducted under the shade of large trees, and plenty of time was allowed for athletic exercises. At the opening meeting Prof. Henry L. Drummond, author of "Natural Law in the Spiritual World," Dr. Broadus, of Kentucky, and Mr. Moody spoke; Prof. Towner, who had organized a choir of the students, having charge of the singing.

—Nowhere in Europe have so many ladies crowded into the university lecture-rooms as in Russia. This the statistics prove. In 1886, there were 779 women students at the Russian universities. Of these, 243 were in the philosophical department; 500 in the physico-mathematical department, 36 studied only mathematics. Of these 779, there were 587 members of the Greek Orthodox Church; 137 were Jewesses; 748 were single, and 31 were married. The majority were daughters of noble political and military officials—namely, 437; 84 were clergymen's daughters; 125 merchants' daughters, etc. Fully 85 passed the final examinations at the close of the semester. In addition to these there are several hundred Russian ladies studying at non-Russian universities, principally in Switzerland and in Paris. The majority study medicine.

—The fifteenth annual report of the Commissioner of Education presents a very comprehensive and encouraging view of the progress of education throughout the country. The school population is for thirty-eight States, 16,863,565; for ten Territories, 306,126, or a total of 17,169,391. Of this total 11,169,923 were enrolled in the public schools. The army of public school teachers numbers 319,549. The Commissioner says: "The amount of school attendance is undoubtedly increasing, but improvement in regard to regularity of attendance is not so decided as could be wished. One of the chief hindrances to the progress of our common schools is the multiplicity of school districts and of independent and local authorities, with the inevitable result of small schools, low standards, low wages for teachers, poor supervision or none at all, and waste of funds. Wherever these 'petty school sovereignties' have been abandoned the schools are flourishing; wherever they are maintained the reverse is true." After taking a comparative view of the schools in the various groups of States, the report discusses the educational condition and wants of the South. The entire school population of the former slave States is 6,359,322 of whom 2,043,696 are colored. The enrollment in the public schools is 3,709,374—2,676,911 white and 1,030,463 colored. The total public school expenditure for both races was $17,227,373. The expenditure for schools has increased in all the States from which reports were received. In eight of the sixteen States considered, the local school tax has increased. There are localities in which there has been little if any advance made, and the South is still far from being on an equality with the North as regards provisions for the instruction and enlightenment of the entire population. In North Carolina alone there are 1,500 districts destitute of school houses, and in Virginia 1,095 schools are still needed to give equal school facilities to all the children. The average length of the school year in the twelve Southern States, including Kentucky, the Virginias, the Carolinas, Tennessee, and Texas is 98.5 days. In other words, the children in the South for whom education is provided have only two-thirds as much schooling as those in the North. "While both races are affected by these drawbacks," says the Commissioner, "it is the colored people whose welfare is most seriously threatened."

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—The late Synod of the Associate Presbyterian church voted to engage in the solemn ordinance of public covenanting, on the opening of the next meeting of that body in May, 1888.

—Four young women who have had their expenses paid at Wellesley College for four years past with the expectation that they were to go out as missionaries, will not be allowed to go as it has been discovered after graduation that they believe in probation after death.

—Rev. Robert A. Hume, over whose religious teachings there has been so much controversy in the American Board, started lately back to India to resume his missionary work. At the farewell reception given to him at the United Church, New Haven, Rev. Dr. T. T. Munger made an address expressive of the highest esteem for, and confidence in, Mr. Hume. If Mr. Hume wishes to secure the confidence of the American churches he should look for more orthodox endorsement than Mr. Munger.

—The total membership of the Evangelical Association is reported at 138,514, which represents an increase of 5,806 members during the year.

—The forty-first annual session of the Northwestern Association of the Seventh-day Baptist church met June 23 in Dodge Center, Minn. Among the delegates present were Revs. J. W. Morton of Chicago, W. W. Ames of Menomonee, Wis., and N. Wardner of Milton Junction, Wis. The Association adopted the following, among other resolutions:

"Resolved, That we bear unqualified testimony against secret societies, and earnestly entreat our brethren to keep aloof from everything of the kind."

—Mr. and Mrs. William J. Pettitt of Ravenswood, Ill., have begun suit for $10,000 damages in the Superior Court of Chicago against the Rev. William A. Lloyd, the pastor, and S. F. Chaplin, the clerk, of the Ravenswood Congregational church. Mr. and Mrs. Pettitt were members of the church but withdrew. After they left it they say Pastor Lloyd and Clerk Chaplin caused to be published in a church paper a statement that they had been excommunicated. They denounce the statement as false and claim it has been a source of great injury to them, and they sue for libel.

—Dr. D. W. Collins, one of the editors of the Christian Instructor, accompanied by his wife, and her sister, Mrs. Mary Anderson of Xenia, and some others, have sailed for Liverpool, to be gone some months. Their visits will be chiefly confined to England, Ireland, Scotland and Wales.

—The members of Dr. Thomas H. Hanna's congregation in Monmouth, Ill., have raised a sufficient sum of money to build an elegant, new stone church. The congregation is constantly increasing in numbers and is in a very prosperous condition.

—Dr. C. W. Ketcham, presiding elder, describes in the Western Christian Advocate a singular development of fanaticism in Cincinnati. It began about two years ago. "The leading characters are Mrs. Martin, who claims to be God the Father, and her sister, Mrs. Brooke, who claims to be the Christ, or a second incarnation of Jesus Christ. Around them have been gathered near forty followers from the Methodist Episcopal church, the Congregational, the Protestant Episcopal, the Presbyterian, and possibly one or two other churches." They denounced the church as Babylon, but they would not "come out" of it, so at last disciplinary proceedings were taken in the Methodist Episcopal church, and a number of the troublers in Israel were expelled.

—Professor Drummond told the gathering of college students at Northfield, Mass., about the religious movement which has been in progress some time in Edinburgh University, which was formerly a very irreligious place. The work of young Studd and Stanley Smith following Mr. Moody's meetings in the city was wonderful, and the meetings then begun have gone on for three years, deepening in intensity all the while; delegations were sent to sister universities composed of students and instructors. There was one disqualification against holding the office; if a man was eloquent he was withdrawn. Medical students were preferred, because it surprised one to see a pious medical man. This system of going out became an established thing and is now termed the holiday mission, men giving up their outgoings to go out through the villages of England, Scotland and Wales, and holding meetings of young men. Another outgrowth of the movement was the exercises held in the hospitals and infirmaries of Edinburgh every Sabbath.

—Until within a few years one of the most celebrated schools in Japan, Mr. Fukuzawa's, was avowedly infidel. Last year some missionaries were employed as instructors, and now there are fifty converts among the students.

—The receipts of the American Bible Society for June were $38,027.02. The issues from the Bible House during the same time were 100,226 volumes, making the whole number of issues since April 1st, 312,285 volumes.

—The New York Chinese mission has between 4,000, and 5,000 Celestials in its Sabbath-schools. About sixty have joined the various churches. The first Sabbath-school for these people was founded in New York eighteen years ago.

—In an address on missions at Mr. Moody's Bible School at Northfield, Joseph Cook said, to the classes in India who were tending to agnosticism, he would send Professor Drummond; to the great mass of mixed population speaking English, he would send Mr. Moody.

—Rev. George Muller, founder of the Bristol Orphanage, has just returned to England from a tour around the world, occupying ten years, during which time he traveled over 130,000 miles in the United States, New Zealand, Australia, the Malayan Peninsula, China, Japan and Europe. Mr. Muller is now eighty-two years of age, and is reported to be in splendid condition. His united congregations during the tour amount to over a million persons.

—From all appearances it would seem evident that the much talked of union between the two native Protestant churches of Italy, the Waldensians and the Free Church, will not be consummated. The two parties cannot agree on the name of the one united church.

—A conference of the committees on Christian Union appointed by the American Christian Convention, says the Independent, the General Christian Union Council, and the Ohio State Christian Association, is called to meet in Covington, Ohio, July 26. The design of the respective committees is, so far as possible, to make practical the proceedings of the American Christian Convention and the Christian Union Council.

—The American Baptist Mission among the German-speaking people of Europe now reports thirteen associations, 168 churches and 33,451 members; 1,289 stations and outstations, 157 chapels; baptized last year, 2,530; contributions for religious objects, $98,900., which is nearly three dollars per member. Of the churches, 101 are in Germany, five in Hungary, four in Switzerland, one in Holland, twenty-nine in Russia, two in Roumania, one in Bulgaria, twenty-two in Denmark, three in South Africa. There are 248 preachers, pastors, missionaries and colporteurs, and 454 other helpers.

—The latest statistics of the American Missionary Association present these interesting facts. Church work at the South: churches, 124; members, 7,571; added during the year, 1,272; Sabbath-school scholars, 13,149. Educational work South: Normal and graded schools, fourteen; common schools, twenty-three; instructors, 239; pupils, 8,753; theological students, 118; law, seventy-eight; college, fifty-three; college preparatory, ninety-five; normal, 799; schools in which industries are taught, sixteen; special industrial teachers, ten; teachers combining industrial and other work, twenty-one. Work among the Indians: Churches, five; members, 348; schools, fifteen; missionaries and teachers, fifty-six; pupils, 685. Work among the Chinese: Schools, eighteen; missionaries, thirty-four; pupils enrolled, of whom 122 are Christians, 1,279. The field thus defined contains a population of 19,749,599, of whom 13,249,942 are white, 6,039,657 colored, 260,000 Indians and 125,000 Chinese. At least twelve millions of these are the legitimate objects of the Association's mission. Three-fourths of the nation's illiteracy are in the Southern States. In the North there are 1,442,064 illiterates; in the South, 4,808,228. Taken as a whole, forty per cent of the South's population are illiterate. The percentage of illiteracy among the colored people in some sections is as high as eighty. Of the 2,000,000 illiterate voters in the United States, 1,500,000 are in the South.—Advance.

LODGE NOTES.

"If T. V. Powderly does not resign at the next meeting of the general assembly at Minneapolis," said a prominent member of district assembly 24 yesterday, "he will be made to do it. Powderly is an aristocrat, a sickly, vain man, who cares more for the opinion of the newspapers and 'nice' people than for that of members of the order. It is true the order has decreased numerically, and a general dissatisfaction is manifest. The man who will succeed Powderly will be one of the following: George E. McNeill of Boston, Joseph R. Buchanan of Chicago, William H. Barrett of Philadelphia, Richard Trevellick of Pittsburgh, T. B. Barry of Detroit, or A. A. Carlton of Boston. The motto of a great majority of the Knights of Labor now is 'Powderly must go!' They dislike his protectionism, his religious views which he tried to force upon the order, his Know-Nothingism, and his untrustworthiness, as it seems, tongue. The delegates to the general assembly from district assembly 24 will vote as a unit against T. V. Powderly in the coming convention."

The Knights of Labor practically deny that freedom of contract which is one of the fundamental principles of our political system. What they propose is to put this freedom under intimidation and compulsion, thereby violating the rights alike of the employer and the employee.—Independent.

The Grand Lodge of the International Order of Odd-fellows for the State of Wisconsin, of Milwaukee, without capital stock, filed articles of incorporation July 20 at Madison. This organization is formed by secessionists from the Odd-fellows, who do not propose to abide by the mandate of the Supreme Council, declining to recognize the Patriarchal Circle as forming part of the Odd-fellows. The dissensions in the ranks of the Odd-fellows thus made public promise to grow and become national in character.

Suit for $10,000 damages was entered in the Circuit Court in Chicago by Michael Reirke against the International Beer Brewers and Malters' Union No. 1, and Peter Jung. Reirke says he is an expert beer brewer, and that he was a member of the union until June 3, but because of non-payment of dues he was expelled. Before expulsion he tendered his dues, but they were not accepted. He claims that Jung, as walking delegate, went to Bemis & McAvoy, where he was working, and ordered the proprietors to dismiss him instantly, or he would cause a strike among the employees. His employers discharged him through fear, and he has been unable to secure employment since. This is a suit to test the rights of the union to do such an act.

At the session of the colored Knights Templar at St. Louis last week reports of committees were received and routine business was transacted. Six commanderies made up the procession which marched through the principal streets.

It is stated that plans for the organization of women and girls in trade unions are being quietly perfected at Boston, which city expects to be pioneer in a movement to spread to other cities.

THE RESORTS OF COLORADO.

Colorado has become famous for its marvelous gold and silver production, for its picturesque scenery, and its delightful climate. Its mining towns and camps, its massive mountains, with their beautiful green-verdured valleys, lofty snow capped peaks and awe-inspiring canyons, together with its hot and cold mineral springs and baths, and its healthful climate are attracting, in greater numbers each year, tourists, invalids, pleasure and business seekers from all parts of the world.

The journey from Chicago, Peoria, or St. Louis and other Chicago, Burlington and Quincy R. R. stations to Denver (the great distributing point for Colorado), if made over the Burlington Route, C. B. & Q. R. R., will be as pleasant and gratifying as it is possible for a railroad trip to be. At all principal ticket offices will be found on sale, during the tourist season, round-trip tickets via this popular route at low rates to Denver, Colorado Springs and Pueblo, Colorado. When ready to start call on your nearest ticket agent, or address Paul Morton, General Passenger and Ticket Agent C. B. & Q. R. R., Chicago, Ill.

ANTI-LODGE LYRICS.

Singing the Reform Into the Hearts of the People

One of the most popular books against lodgery is the latest compilation of

George W. Clark,

The Minstrel of Reform:

A forty-page book of soul-stirring, conscience-awakening songs, appropriate for lectures, conventions and the home circle. What can add more to the interest of a meeting than a song well sung? What means will more quickly overthrow the power of the secret lodges than to sing the truth into the popular conscience?

Get this little work and use it for God and home and country. Forty pages.

The Christian's Secret

A Happy Life.

28th THOUSAND.

Baptist Commendation.

"We are delighted with this book. It reaches to the very core of Christian experience, and is eminently experimental in its teachings. It meets the doubts and difficulties of conscientious seekers after the bread and water of life, who whose efforts result only in alternate failure and victory. The author, without claiming to be a theologian, sends out the results of a happy and rich experience to help others into a happy Christian life."—Christian Worker.

Presbyterian Endorsement.

"The book is so truly and reverently devoted to its spirit that it disarms criticism. It contains so much that is sound and practical, so much that, if heeded, will make our lives better, happier and more useful, that the intelligent reader who really wishes to lead a life 'hid with Christ in God' can scarcely fail to derive profit from its perusal."—Interior.

Methodist Word of Praise.

"We have not for years read a book with more delight and profit. It is not a theological book. No effort is made to change the theological views of any one. The author has a rich experience, and tells it in a plain and delightful manner."—Christian Advocate.

United Brethren's Approval.

"We have seldom met with a more interesting volume, abounding throughout with apt illustrations; we have failed to find a dry line from title-page to title."—Religious Telescope.

Congregational Comment.

"It contains much clear, pungent reasoning and interesting incident. It is a practical and experimental treatise on the life of God's people. It is worthy of universal circulation."—Church Union.

This enlarged edition is a beautiful large 12mo volume of 540 pages.

IN THE COILS;

OR—

The Coming Conflict,

A NEW AND STRANGE STORY BASED ON STARTLING FACTS, VIVIDLY PORTRAYING A MYSTERIOUS AND DANGEROUS POWER AT WORK IN THE GOVERNMENT, THE CHURCH, AND THE HOME.

"All will agree that this is a powerfully written story."—Evangelist, (Chicago, Ills.)

"A book which we trust may have a wide circulation."—National Baptist, (Philadelphia.)

"So intensely interesting did I find it that it was hard to pause until the last sentence was read. This work places the author high among the writers of fiction."—W. W. Barry, D. D. in Christian Instructor, (Philadelphia.)

"Unless we are greatly mistaken, the work will do more to awaken the American church and people to the evils of Freemasonry than any other book recently published."—Evangelical Repository.

"The book will create a sensation in Masonic circles, and evoke criticism of a most relentless character. The courage of the author in attacking such a rock-ribbed bulwark as Freemasonry is something to admire. Fantastic though he be."—Nebraska Watchman.

"Light is needed on this subject and needed badly, and we welcome this contribution to the literature of anti-sectarianism, and cordially commend it to the favorable attention of our readers."—United Presbyterian, (Pittsburgh.)

"A charming work, fit to be classed with 'Uncle Tom's Cabin'; it is indeed less a work of fiction. The volume is as valuable as a work of reference as it is agreeable, truthful and useful. Our young folks will not leave the book until they begin it, till they 'see how it turns out.'"—Cynosure, (Chicago, Ills.)

HOME AND HEALTH.

ADVICE ABOUT DRINKING.

THE USE OF ICE WATER.—The following suggestions, which we find floating uncredited, seem to us sound, with the proviso that every one observe carefully the effect in his own case, and act accordingly. "One man's meat is another man's poison," and many have undoubtedly harmed themselves with ice water, while for others, as our own experience testifies, it is almost indispensable to health in summer weather.

Many objections have been raised against ice water and cold drinks generally. Most of these have no real foundation. When digestion is in progress there is a large flow of blood towards the stomach. The lining of that organ is in a state of congestion. The presence of a little ice water or the like can scarcely be felt for a moment when millions of blood vessels are carrying the blood to and from it at a tremendous speed, and that at a temperature of 100 degrees Fahrenheit. The effect would be simply a little stimulation, increasing rather than retarding the digestive process. Of course no one advocates the filling of the stomach with ice water or other fluid at any temperature during the digestive process, but a moderate amount of the former can do no harm—in fact, is rather beneficial. This cannot be said of alcoholic in any form, or of hot or of very warm beverages. All these interfere more or less seriously with digestion, as experiments have abundantly demonstrated.

DRINK MORE WATER.—Our dry eastern climate calls for extra water to "moisten our clay." Physicians generally agree that the American people are physically too dry, and would be the better for a large addition to the fluids of the body. We offer a marked contrast in fluid fullness to the denizens of moister climates. Eastern men undergo a wonderful transformation in the moist atmosphere of the Pacific coast. Do not be afraid, in warm and thirsty weather, to drink all the water you want, with due attention to the effect produced. The water craved is all needed, and is craved because it is needed, to supply the large drafts made by perspiration and evaporation from the skin. In cool weather also it is good for our dried-up anatomy to practice a system of drinking independent of thirst. We add remarks quoted without credit from a medical writer, which strike us as judicious and forcible:

"That water promotes appetite and digestion when taken with meals is shown by the fact that no 'anti-fat' system of diet is so remarkably successful as that in which no drinks are permitted to be taken with meals or until two hours after them. When it is an object to reduce the amount of the blood, as in certain heart affections, a dry diet system is of great service, but the kidneys must be in excellent working order or this system must prove injurious. As a matter of fact, however, a considerable number or people in every community take too little fluids of any kind. When the supply of liquids is much below the actual demand the greatest dangers are incurred from the accumulation of waste materials, which are naturally removed by the skin and kidneys, [through the medium of the water supply] besides the still graver (immediately) risks of sunstroke and heat exhaustion. Liver and kidney troubles, headaches, neuralgia, etc., are often to be traced to avoidance of fluids. It is probable that a large proportion of the benefit derived from mineral springs is to be attributed to the taking of unusual quantities of water. Hence the reputation of many a health resort is based upon drinking water, not upon any real virtue resident in any special quality of that imbibed." But above all things let your drinking water be "first pure," then plentiful, etc.

DRINKING BEFORE MEALS.—In the morning the stomach contains a considerable quantity of mucus spread over and adherent to its walls. If food enters at this time, the tenacious mucus will interfere to some extent with the direct contact between the food and the stomach necessary to provoke the secretion of gastric juice. A glass of water taken before breakfast passes through the stomach stretching and to some extent obliterating the rugæ; it thins and washes out most of the tenacious mucus; it increases the fullness of the capillaries of the stomach, directly if the water is warm, and indirectly in a reactionary way if it is cold; it causes peristalsis of the alimentary tract, wakes it up, so to speak, and gives it a morning exercise and washing.

Care must be taken not to give cold water when the circulation, either local or general, is so feeble as to make reaction improbable. We should not risk it in advanced age, nor in the feeble, whether old or young, nor should it be given in local troubles like chronic gastric catarrh. In these cases it is best to give warm or hot water. The addition of salt is very beneficial. Such a time-honored custom as eating soup at the beginning of a meal could only have been so persistently adhered to because of it having been found by experience to be the most appropriate time. It does exactly what warm or hot water with the addition of salt does, and more, in that it is nutritive and excites the flow of gastric juice.—Dr. Leuf in the Medical News.

Old Age and How to Enjoy It.

A most appropriate gift book for "The Old Folks at Home."

Compiled by REV. S. G. LATHEROP.

Introduction by
REV. ARTHUR EDWARDS, D. D.,
(Editor N. W. Christian Advocate.)

The object of this volume is to give to that great army who are fast hastening toward the "great beyond" some practical hints and helps as to the best way to make the most of the remainder of the life that now is, and to give comfort and help as to the life that is to come.

"It is a tribute to the Christianity that honors the gray head and refuses to consider the old man a burden on an obstacle. The book will aid and comfort every reader."—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

"The selections are very precious. Springing from such numerous and pure fountains, they can but afford a refreshing and healthful draught for every aged traveler to the great beyond."—Witness.

Labor Troubles,

BY REV. C. C. BROWN.

The Danger—The Laborer's Grievance—The Laborer's Foe—The Laborer's Fallacy—The Laborer's Hope—Mind and Muscle—Co-Laborers.

TIMELY TALKS ON AN IMPORTANT SUBJECT.

The Papers Say of this Book:

"It is well to remind the world of the great law of human brotherhood, but how to make the 'more general application of it?' 'Aye, there's the rub!' Our author contributes his mite in that direction, and his voice and reasoning will reach some ears and perhaps touch some understandings and move some selfish hearts that are hurried up very closely and hedged around by over much respectability and comfortable prosperity."—Chicago Tribune.

"The writer does his work in a way remarkable alike for its directness, its common sense, its impartiality, its lucidity and its force. He has no theories to support; he deals with facts as he finds them; he fortifies his assertions by arrays of demonstrative statistics. The work is affecting to the heart of the kind it is not the heat that we have seen. While it is scarcely possible for it to be put in the hands of all our wage-workers, we think it could be read by every one of them."—Chicago Interior.

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Grandditch, his subsequent conveyance by Freemason to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and it doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. [Chicago, National Christian Association.] Single copy, 5 cents.

NATIONAL SUICIDE,
AND
ITS PREVENTION.

BY OSCAR F. LUMRY, PH. D.

Prof. Lumry's book, "National Suicide and Its Remedy," will be read with profit even by those who do not accept its doctrine, that taking interest for money loaned, one or more percent, is sin, taking something for nothing. For, as Goldsmith said of his Vicar of Wakefield, "Even his fallings lean to virtue's side."

—Cynosure.

Dr. Lumry is a man of ideas and never fails to make his readers understand just what they are. Every sentiment he writes has such an air of honesty that it will in a measure disarm those who read to criticize. It is a good book to set people to thinking, whether they believe his theories or not. The book is well worth a careful reading and study.—Inter Ocean.

On all the points named they differ radically from those which prevail in the organization of society. Either they are true or false. It is a curious fact that all of them have been stigmatized as crazy, and yet nearly all of them have been for some years steadily gaining the adherence of men of intellectual ability.—Times.

Such was to Freemasonry the great NATIONAL CONVENTION held in Batavia, N. Y., September, 1882. It gave the world

Thurlow Weed's Great Letter

On the abduction and murder of WILLIAM MORGAN in 1826, which has been the most widely published of any Anti-masonic document. The dedication of a noble granite monument to the memory of Morgan, and the able and eloquent addresses of the Convention make this a most valuable pamphlet.

SEE WHY.

It contains—
1. Portrait of Morgan.
2. Portrait of Thurlow Weed.
3. Fine picture of the Monument.
4. The great letter of Thurlow Weed and his affidavits—almost the last public act of his life.
5. Address by J. E. Roy, D. D.
6. The monument erected by Pres. C. A. Blanchard.
7. Addresses on "Christian Politics" by Pres. J. Blanchard, on "The Character of Freemasonry" by Prof. E. J. Bailey, on the "Freemasonry and Secret Societies" by H. H. Higgins, and very interesting personal and historical reminiscences.

FARM AND GARDEN.

FRONT YARDS.

Now the question will come, how shall I go to work to improve my grounds? Many times only a slight change will work wonders in the appearance of a place, the cutting out of a few trees, the leveling and turning over of broken banks and lawns, with application of good fertilizers and grass seed, the judicious planting of a few new shrubs and trees, the rearrangement of the garden on an improved plan, the purchase and use of lawn mower and pruning shears, will all or each go to improve a place and make it pleasing for all who see it.

Where an extensive change is to be made, we must first investigate the surface soil, as it is of the greatest importance, for good results cannot be obtained on a poor soil, and the soil cannot be too good.

There should be a foot at least of good soil where a lawn and flowering plants are desired; if such a soil is not there naturally, it should be made. But it is seldom the case on small places that there is not soil enough. If the ground is to be broken for a new house, the good soil from the cellar should be placed where it can be used, not covered up, as it often is, with the gravel below. In old places the walks and drives are often built on a bed of good soil that may be removed and used, and its place taken by stones and gravel, that will make a better road.

When walks and drives are to be located, they should be placed only where they will be required for every day use, and as direct from one place to another as practicable—not necessarily straight, but on graceful sweeps and curves which are so much more pleasing. The ground should be graded in graceful slopes away from the house; the higher it stands the more necessity there is to avoid terraced banks, for they have the effect of making the house appear to stand higher than it does.—Vick's Magazine

WHY DO BEES AND WASPS STING?

Their weapons often serve to protect them from their enemies, but with bees, especially the Honey or Hive bees, at the approach of winter, the drones or males are no longer of any use, and are killed off by the stings of the workers, to save the stores of honey they would otherwise consume. With many of the wasps their stings are food preservers. The large wasps which make their holes in the ground, and some bees, like the Carpenter bees, which cut circular holes in boards, or other wood deposit an egg in each of these holes, place food for the grub that will hatch from this egg to feed upon, and when this grub has made its growth, it goes into the chrysalis state, and in time comes out a perfect bee, or wasp, as the case may be. But you will ask, "what has this to do with the sting?" A great deal. If the caterpillar or other insect intended as food for the young bee or wasp were dead when stored away it would decay and be useless. The effect of the poison of the sting is to keep it in a semi torpid existence, alive, but still dormant, and thus preserve the food in a proper condition to be eaten by the grub of the bee or wasp. In this respect we can see that the sting plays a very useful part, but when the sting is employed upon ourselves, we fail to see what good end is accomplished. Even when a bee-keeper is doing his best for the comfort and welfare of his bees, they will often turn upon and sting him most needlessly and painfully.—American Agriculturist.

SLUGS AND ANTS.

Slugs are troublesome both in the open ground and in the greenhouse. Salt is certain death to them, even in smallest quantities, and when in the open garden a slight sprinkling of salt over the ground is effectual; but the sprinkling, it must be remembered, must be very slight, as salt, if put on even as thick as sand is usually sown on a floor, will kill almost any kind of vegetation. In our greenhouses, the slugs usually feed at night, getting under the benches during the day. We have found a most effectual remedy in strewing a thin line of salt on edge of bench; this makes a complete "dead line" for the slugs and snails, for they cannot cross it and live. Another plan is to slice up potatoes, carrots, cabbage, or lettuce leaves to feed on, for which they will leave all other plants. Examine these traps daily and destroy the captives. Of all insect pests on lawns or sandy soils, ants are the most troublesome, and when these are on such large areas, any remedy as yet known is almost futile to destroy them. When on small areas, outside or in the greenhouses, we find about the best plans are to lay fresh bones or paper covered with molasses around their haunts; these they will come to in large numbers; they should be removed daily and burned or otherwise destroyed. Another method that we have found more destructive to them than any other, is to puff pyrethrum or Persian insect powder from a strong bellows among them. The smallest particle of this powder at once chokes and kills them, though it must strike them dry to be effective; for we find that when the powder lies damp on the floor, they will run over it and even burrow in it with impunity. Nothing I have ever tried will "poison" ants. Either their instinct causes them to avoid it, or else they are not affected by it.—Peter Henderson.

ON FREEMASONRY.

Freemasonry Illustrated. A complete exposition of the seven degrees of the Blue Lodge and Chapter. Profusely illustrated. A historical sketch of the institution and a critical analysis of the character of each degree, by Pres. J. Blanchard, of Wheaton College. Monitorial quotations and nearly four hundred notes from standard Masonic authorities confirm the truthfulness of this exposition and show the character of Masonic teaching and doctrine. The accuracy of this exposition is fully attested by J. O. Doebner, Past Master of No. 191, Holland, Mich., and others. This is the latest, most accurate and complete exposition of Blue Lodge and Chapter Masonry. Over one hundred illustrations—several of the full-page size—a pictorial representation of the lodge-room, chapter and principal ceremonies of the degrees, with the dress of candidates, signs, grips, etc. Complete work of 640 pages, in cloth, $1.00.

Ex-Complete John Quincy Adams Letters on the Nature of Masonic Oaths, Obligations and Penalties. Thirty most interesting, able and convincing letters on the above general subject, written by this renowned statesman to different public men of the United States during the years 1831 to 1833. With Mr. Adams' address to the people of Massachusetts upon political aspects of lodge-ry; an Appendix giving obligations of Masonry, and an able Introduction. This is one of the most telling anti-secrecy works extant, aside from the Expositions. Price, cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $9.00. Paper, 35c. per dozen; per dozen, $3.50.

Freemasonry Exposed. By Capt. William Morgan. The genuine old Morgan book republished in its original form, showing the lodge-room, dress of candidates, signs, the guards, grips, etc. This revelation was so accurate that Freemasons murdered the author for writing it. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.50.

Finney on Masonry. The character, ideal and practical workings of Freemasonry. By Pres. Charles G. Finney, of Oberlin College. President Finney was a "bright Mason," but left the lodge when he became a Christian. This book opened the eyes of multitudes. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper cover, 35c. each; per dozen, $3.50.

Masonic Oaths Null and Void; or, Freemasonry Self-Convicted. This is a book for the times. The design of the author is to refute the arguments of those who claim that the oaths of Freemasonry are binding upon those who take them. His arguments are conclusive, and the forcible manner in which they are put, being drawn from Scripture, makes them convincing. The minister or lecturer will find in this work a rich fund of arguments. 297 pp., postpaid, 40c.

College Secrecy. Their enacts a character, and the efforts for their suppression. By H. L. Zellweg. Containing the opinion of many prominent college presidents, and others, and a full account of the murder of Mortimer Leggett. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.50.

Five Rituals Bound Together. "United Loyalty Illustrated," (old work), "United Templarism Illustrated," "United Templarism Illustrated," "Exposition of the Grange," and "Ritual of the Grand Army of the Republic," are sold bound together in cloth for $1.00; per dozen, $9.00.

Sermon on Masonry. By Rev. James Willard. Preaching Elder of Dakota District North western Iowa Conference, N. E. Church—a record the Master Mason. Published at the special request of nine clergy men of different denominations, and others. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75c.

Thirteen Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason. By Rev. Robert Armstrong. This author states his reasons clearly and carefully, and any one of the thirteen reasons, if properly considered, will keep a Christian out of the lodge. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50c.

Ritual of the Grand Army of the Republic. With signs of recognition, passwords, etc., and the ritual of the Mechanists and Blacksmiths (the first two bound together.) 10 cents each; per dozen, 75c.

National Christian Association. 221 W. Madison St., Chicago, Ill.

Morgan's Exposition, Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. Composed of "Freemasonry Exposed," by Capt. Wm. Morgan; "History of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan," by Rev. J. H. Brown; "Valuable Consideration of the Character of Capt. Wm. Morgan," by Bernard's Reminiscences of Morgan; "Times," and Oaths and Penalties of 33 Degrees. 501 pages, 50c.

In the Collis; or, the Coming Confidant. By "A. Pandel." A historical sketch, by the author, of the origin and development of the working of Secretism in the various relations of everyday life, and showing how individual domestic, social, religious, professional and public life are tainted and biased by the baneful workings of the lodge. Being presented in the form of a story, this volume will interest both old and young, and the moral of the story will not have to be searched for. $1.50 each; $15.00 per dozen.

Light on Freemasonry. By Elder J. D. Bernhart. To which is appended "A Revelation of the Mysteries of Odd-fellowship" (old work), by a Member of the Craft. The whole containing over five hundred pages, lately revised and republished. In cloth, $1.50 each; per dozen, $15.00. The first part of the above work, Light on Freemasonry, 410 pages, 75c. each; per dozen $7.50.

Secret Societies, Ancient and Modern. A book of great interest to officers of the army and navy, the bench and the clergy. TABLE OF CONTENTS: The Antiquity of Secret Societies, The Life of Julian, The Eleusinian Mysteries, The History of Masonry, Was Washington a Mason? General Washington Opposed to Secret Societies. This is a republication of Governor Joseph B. Titmer's "Indication of General Washington's Opposition to the Signs and Oaths of Secret Societies," communicated to the House of Representatives of Pennsylvania, March 28, 1835, at their special request. To this is added the fact that the only such Masons were the only persons who opposed a vote of thanks to Washington on his retirement to private life—unhappily because they considered him a seceding Freemason. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75c.

Grand Lodge Masonry. Its relation to civil government and the Christian religion. By Pres. J. Blanchard, at the Monmouth Convention. The un-Christian, anti-republican and despotic character of Freemasonry is proved from the highest Masonic authorities. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50c.

The Master's Carpet, or Masonry and Baal Worship identical. Explains the true source and nature of every ceremony and symbol of the lodge, and proves that Modern Masonry is identical with the "Ancient Mysteries" of Paganism. Bound in fine cloth, 430 pp., 75c.

Masonry a Work of Darkness. adverse to civilization to render it more perfect. By Rev. Lebbeus Armstrong (Presbyterian), a seceding Mason of 21st degree. This is a very telling work and no honest man who reads it will think of joining the lodge. 5c. each; per dozen, $1.25.

Freemasonry Self-Convicted. By Rev. J. W. Bain. A careful and logical statement of reasons why secret orders should not be fellowshiped by the Christian Church, and by the United Presbyterian Church in America. Paper covers; price, 20 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Adoptive Masonry Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of the five degrees of Female Free Masonry, by Thomas Lowe; comprising the degree of Jephtha's Daughter, Ruth, Esther, Martha and Electa, and known as the Daughter's Degree, Widow's Degree, Wife's Degree, Sister's Degree and the Benevolent Degree. 20 cents each; per dozen, $1.75.

Stearns' Inquiry into the Nature and Tendency of Freemasonry. With an Appendix containing the address of Stearns' Exposition and containing remarks on various points in the character of Masonry, and a Dialogue on the necessity of exposing the lodge. 338 pages; cloth, 60 cents each; paper, 50c. Paper covers, 40 cents each; per dozen, $4.00.

The Broken Seal; or, Personal Reminiscences of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan By Samuel D. Greene. One of the most interesting books ever published. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper covers, 40 cents; per dozen, $4.00.

Exposition of the Grange. Edited by Rev. A. W. Hewitt. Illustrated with engravings, showing lodge-room, signs, signals, etc. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.50.

Good Templarism Illustrated. A full and accurate exposition of the degrees of the Lodge, Temple and Council, with engravings showing the signs, grips, etc. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.50.

A full and complete illustrated ritual of "The Temple of Honor and Temperance," commonly called the Temple of Honor, a historical sketch of the order, and an analysis of its character. A complete exposition of the Subordinate Temple, and the degrees of Love, Purity and Fidelity, by a Templar of Fidelity and Past Worthing Chief Templar. 25 cents each; per dozen $2.00.

Knights of Pythias Illustrated. By Past Chancellor. A full illustrated exposition of the three ranks of the order, with the addition of the Amended Pythian and a new ritual. The lodge-room, signs, counter signs, grips, etc., are shown by engravings. 25 cents each; per dozen $2.00.

Sermon on Secret Societies. By Rev. Daniel Dew. Goodspeed Cong. The special of of this sermon is to show the right and duty of Christians to examine into the character of secret societies, no matter what the objects of their professed aims. 8 cents each; per dozen, 50c.

History of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. As prepared by seven committees or citizens, appointed to ascertain the fate of Morgan. This book contains indisputable, logical evidence from the records of the abduction of Wm. Morgan, for no other offense than the revelation of Masonry. It contains the sworn testimony of over twenty persons, including Morgan's wife, and no candid person, after reading this book, can doubt that many of the most respectable Freemasons in the Empire State were concerned in this crime. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.50.

Judge Whitney's Defense before the United States Circuit Court. Judge Daniel H. Whitney was Master of the lodge when S. L. Felth, a member of his lodge, murdered Ellen Slade. Judge Whitney, by attempting to bring Felth to justice, brought on himself the vengeance of the lodge but he boldly replied to the charges against him and afterwards renounced Masonry. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.50.

A Masonic Conspiracy. Resulting in a fraudulent divorce, and various other outrages upon the rights of a defenseless woman. Also the account of a Masonic murder, by two eye-witnesses. By Mrs. J. A. Walker. This is a truth to justice, eating, true narrative. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Pres. H. H. George on Secret Societies. A powerful address, showing clearly the duty of Christian churches to disfellowship secret societies. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75c.

Discussion on Secret Societies. By Elder M. S. Newcomer and Elder G. W. Wilson, a Royal Arch Mason. This discussion was first published in a series of lectures in the Church Address. 25 cents each; per doz. $2.00.

Freemasonry a Fourfold Conspiracy. Address of Pres. J. Blanchard, before the Pittsburgh Convention. This is a most convincing argument against the lodge. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50c.

Holden With Cords. ON THE POWER OF THE SECRET EMPIRE. A faithful representation in story of the evil influence of Freemasonry. By E. Flagg, author of "Little People," "A Sunny Life," etc. This is a thrillingly interesting story accurately true to life, and a tribute to justice, historical facts. In cloth $1.00; paper 50c.

Secrecy vs. the Family, State and Church. By Rev. M. S. Drury. The antagonism of organized secrecy to the welfare of the family, state and church is clear. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75c.

Sermon on Masonry. By Rev. J. Day Broward. In reply to a Masonic Oration by Rev. Dr. Mayer, Wellsville, Ohio. An able sermon by an able man. 5 cents each; per dozen 50c.

Sermon on Secrecism. By Rev. R. Theo. Cross, pastor of Canton, N. Y. This is a very clear array of the objections to Masonry that are apparent to all. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50c.

Freemasonry at a Glance. Illustrates every sign, grip and counter sign of the first three degrees. Paper covers, 10 cents. Single copy, 5c.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

COUNTRY.

The number of actual deaths from sunstroke in Chicago reported Wednesday was 168. At that time 578 deaths were reported since the weekly report made Saturday. This is ninety more than the total deaths last week, which, up to that time, was the largest number ever known in the history of the city.

A fierce rainstorm at Pittsburg, Pa., Wednesday night caused a loss of $100,000. Streets and cellars were flooded, and in the Butchers' Run district many houses were washed from their foundations. For a time a panic prevailed, but no person was injured.

The fire in the Standard Oil Works at Constable Hook, N. J., Wednesday morning destroyed two large warehouses, three huge tanks, four docks, and 10,000 barrels of oil. The loss is placed at $1,000,000 with no insurance.

Nine hundred thousand dollars has already been subscribed for next year's Cincinnati centennial exposition, $25,000 more has been promised, and it is expected that before the close of the week the necessary million dollars will be subscribed.

It is stated that the Canadian Pacific Railroad has contracted to carry hundreds of car-loads of Australian wool from Victoria, British Columbia, to Boston. This wool was formerly carried by the Northern Pacific Line.

After his race Friday at Peoria, Ill., Glen Miller, a trotting stallion, was given a drink of ice water, which resulted in his death Sunday. He had a record of 2 18, and was valued at $10,000.

Since June 1, 137 children under 5 years of age have died at Pittsburg and Allegheny City, of whom 75 per cent were under 2 years.

Baltimore, Md., was swept by a tornado Tuesday morning. Many structures were unroofed, and trees in the parks leveled. The rainfall in twelve hours was nearly 1 1/2 inches.

The town of Bacarac, Mexico, has been reduced to ruins by a succession of earthquake shocks. It is twenty miles from Bavispe, the destruction of which from the same cause was recently reported.

The business men of Buffalo, N. Y., are about to subscribe $100,000, which will be offered as a prize for the best invention for utilizing the water-power of Niagara Falls.

Queen Kapiolani sailed for Honolulu Tuesday on the Australia, having concluded not to wait for the United States cruiser on which accommodation had been tendered her.

R. M. T. Hunter, ex-Speaker and ex-Senator, Confederate Secretary of State, and a member of the Peace Commission which met President Lincoln in Hampton Roads, died Tuesday evening at his home in Mount Hill, Va., aged 78.

A hailstorm passed over Wabash, Ind., late Monday night, destroying all the vegetation on which it fell. The damage will amount to $30,000.

Near Joliet, Ill., Tuesday, Morrizz Eckhart blew the top of his head off. In his room were found anarchistic documents, a stand of arms, and other things that led the coroner's jury to believe the suicide had been a dangerous character.

The Chamber of Commerce of San Francisco petitions Congress, at its next session, to take such steps as will encourage the laying of a telegraph cable to the Hawaiian Islands and Australia.

The National Agricultural Department reports corn in a high average condition, nearly 98 per cent, with a heavy increase in acreage. In winter wheat there has been a decline in condition, more especially in Kansas and California, the average falling off being over 1 per cent since the June report. The condition of spring wheat has been reduced nearly 10 per cent, the effect of drought and insects, the present condition being four points lower than for July, 1886.

The Chicago, Wilmington and Vermilion Coal Company's powder storehouse, at Streator, Ill., was struck by lightning at 2:30 Thursday morning and exploded, killing one man, injuring five persons and demolishing property for blocks around.

Word from Mankato, Minn., says that chinch-bugs appeared there and the air swarmed with them. They came from the northeast. Small grain is so well advanced it is thought to be beyond their power to do much damage. Chinch-bugs swarmed into Arnorra, Minn., in such numbers that it had the appearance of a snow shower, so completely was the air filled with the pests. Much damage to grain is feared.

Georgia regulators have undertaken a crusade against Mormon missionaries near Gainesville. The missionaries will resist and bloodshed is feared.

The Chicago express on the Erie road, when a few miles outside of New York Thursday morning ran into a gang of Italian laborers, killing from twelve to fifteen outright and mangle many others.

Fire at Buffalo Thursday afternoon destroyed Ziegele's brewery. The blaze communicated to the car barns of the Buffalo Street Railway Company, doing heavy damage; total loss $300,000.

Twenty-five houses in Chinatown, Los Angeles, Cal., occupied by about one thousand Celestials, were destroyed by fire Sunday morning. The firemen made no effort to extinguish the flames.

W. J. McGargle, the convicted hoodler, escaped from the custody of Sheriff Matson Saturday night. Visiting his home in Lake View in the Sheriff's custody he was accorded leave to have a bath in the bathroom, and took advantage of this to make his escape.

FOREIGN.

A dispatch from Vienna says the Bulgarian government is intercepting telegrams to and from the Bulgarian capital. There have been violent scenes in the Sorbanje, the members of the opposition, including ex-Premier Radoslovich, being forcibly expelled. The troops at Rustchuk made a hostile demonstration against Ferdinand of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha. Led by officers of the army they parade the streets uttering cries of "Long live Russia."

The French and Newfoundland fishermen are raising another fishery question. The Commander of the French war ship Droc drove Newfoundland fishers from the coast at the point of the bayonet.

In November last, on the banks of the Yukon river in Alaska, miles from any human habitation, Bishop Seghers, a Catholic missionary, was murdered by his companion and servant, Frank Fuller, of Portland, Oregon. The murderer gave himself up, and is now in prison at Sitka, where he will be tried.

Advices received at Constantinople indicate that the Bulgarians are about to proclaim their independence.

Forty-nine new cases of cholera and twenty-two deaths were reported at Catania, Spain, on Saturday. A few deaths were reported in other towns.

THE SECRET ORDERS
OF

BY J. AUGUSTUS COLE, OF SHAINGAY, WEST AFRICA.

Bishop Flickinger of the U. B. church says that, "This volume will well repay a careful reading not only for its discussion and exposition of these societies, but because it gives much valuable information respecting other institutions of that great continent."

J. Augustus Cole, the author of this pamphlet is a native of Western Africa, and is of pure negro blood. He has given much time and care to the investigation of the secret societies and heathen customs of Western Africa. He joined several of the secret orders for the purpose of obtaining full and correct information regarding their nature and operation. His culture and superior powers of discrimination render what he has written most complete and reliable.

The "International Review" which zealous military men are making up for Chicago has had a ridiculous episode. Its manager, a "General" C. S. Bentley, announced officially that colored troops would not be permitted in the affair. He evidently thought he was proclaiming for some secret lodge, with its immaculate white members. But Mr. Bentley woke up in a few days when the papers began to clamor about "an outrage," and his executive committee made him take back his black order. It is an unalloyed pleasure to note the hearty condemnation of this order by the press; but when word comes that the colored ex-soldier will be shut out of the Grand Army meeting at St. Louis next month, and that influential black men are organizing a league against the discrimination against their race in all the secret lodges—then there is a blank silence. Pray, gentlemen of the press, why is not a black man as good in a lodge as in a military shop, and why do you not defend his right to be there?

The officers of the late Union Army have their secret order, the rank and file have another, their sons have a third, their female relatives two Relief Corps and Ladies of the Grand Army, and now their daughters have organized a "Daughters of Veterans" lodge with a "national camp" over which a California woman, Mrs. Sarah M. Steele, flourishes with the grand title of "Commander in Chief." With what admiration must her husband regard that powerful attachment! But Mrs. Steele has issued her orders, and asks all daughters of Union soldiers to meet her in St. Louis next month and come into her secret chambers. She wants all the various rituals and "secret work" used by the lodges of her order compared, and will probably try to make her birds pipe to the same whistle. But it is pitiful to see the infatuation of such people. They are in an agony to save the country and find the only way to promote "patriotism, education, charity, and loyalty" is by means of a secret order, when if they were not morally blind they might see clearly that from nothing is our country in so great danger to-day as from these secret lodges.

To a New York reporter Mr. Moody said the other day that he had not yet made any definite plans for evangelistic work this fall. "The first thing I ought to do," said he, "is to evangelize the reporters and newspaper men. They are sadly in need of some influence to make them stop printing Sunday papers. Its influence is bad; I never read one. Another thing I want to stop is Sunday excursions. I think the people should have a whole day on Saturday and go on excursions then. I see revolution and anarchy ahead. It will begin in the cities. The people are straying from righteousness, and while that continues this young republic of ours is growing weak. Show me a strong nation that has disregarded righteousness. France? Well, it is a republic, but is it a great nation? We must change or else our republic will go to ruin, and revolution will be triumphant." The great evangelist is right. No class of public men have so great influence and use it so recklessly as our journalists. The press should be one of the great moral forces of the country. It is too often leading in immorality. The Sunday paper has none but a mercenary excuse, and Mr. Moody will exceed almost all his other works for men if he can begin a successful crusade against it.

The Irish Coercion bill, which passed the House of Commons after a protracted and bitter struggle, had the Queen's assent on the 19th of July, and already the whole of Ireland has been proclaimed under it. It provides for speedy trial and punishment of those who conspire against the land laws, who engage in riots, resist eviction from rented premises, or take part with "dangerous associations," like the Fenians, White Boys, Invincibles, etc. It is regarded by its opponents, and others, as opening the doors to gross abuse and injustice. Even its friends fear as much, for after its passage the Government Land bill was modified to meet in large degree the demands of the Parnell party. The recent elections in England promise a strong return of the popular vote to the Liberal party, and Mr. Gladstone is hoping that his party will soon return to power. His late speeches have a confident tone, and the possible dissolution of Parliament at an early day may give the people one more opportunity to place their "Grand Old Man" once more at the head of the British government.

The trial of the Cook county "boodlers" is almost as great a sensation in Chicago as that of the Anarchists a year ago. After the conviction of McGarigle and McDonald, the warden and engineer of the county hospital, a second trial came on in which several of the County Commissioners were among the twelve accused. Three weeks were taken up in securing a jury, and 720 men were examined. Among them was the past-master of one of the Chicago Masonic lodges whom Mr. Grinnell, the prosecuting attorney, had to set aside for a very good cause. More than a week has been used in taking testimony, and the defense began its witnesses Tuesday. As day by day passed the evidence against the thieves piled higher, and one of the Commissioners finally broke down and pleaded guilty. The rest are bracing up to their fate which must come soon. But the transactions of the crowded court have been almost eclipsed by the sensational escape of McGarigle from Sheriff Matson. The ex-warden and ex-chief of police had a friend in a Dr. St. John and a hospital employee named Dell, the one part owner of a vessel just ready to leave port, the other the driver of a buggy. With the aid of these two the runaway got on board the schooner Blake, escaped the conveniently negligent detectives at Mackinaw, transferred to the schooner Marsh and was landed at Sarnia Sunday morning; not, however, so happy as the slave used to set foot in the Queen's Dominions, for the shrewd boodler is not yet through with this business. But there are a hundred suspicious points in his case. The gentle sheriff wasted several hours before he reported the escape to the police. These gentlemen, the private detectives, attorney Grinnell—everyone immediately interested in the case has shown a studied negligence in the pursuit. The newspapers only have followed sharply. The officers of the law seem to be careful only to keep out of the way of public suspicion, their tardy rewards and slow wits commending them as good friends of McGarigle. There is but one reasonable explanation of the whole affair. McGarigle is a member of Lincoln Park Masonic Lodge, Grinnell is a Knight Templar and Matson is an Odd-fellow and probably also a Mason. No doubt the lake captains and other conspirators are lodge men. We have no doubt the whole affair is but another beautiful instance of Masonic charity.

"LITTLE HORNS."

In the prophecy of Daniel (7: 25) is described the character of "the little horn" of the "fourth beast," in these words:

"He shall speak great words against the Most High,
And shall wear out the saints of the Most High,
And think to change times and laws;
And they shall be given into his hand," etc.

Whether this prophecy has, as yet, been fulfilled, or not, or whether it describes some person or party who is yet to live, or not, there is a close resemblance between this description and that of the papacy in general, and between it and the practices of Masonry.

First of the papacy. The first characteristic indicates blasphemy. During the pontificate of Pope Gregory XVI., he issued a notable "Encyclical Letter of our Most Holy Lord, Gregory XVI., by Divine Providence Pope," which is certainly usurping a title of the Deity, and blasphemously claiming Divine authority for his acts. Further, in the same Encyclical Letter, he declares: "It is easy to conceive the state of anguish into which our soul is plunged day and night, as we, being charged with the superintendence of the whole fold of Jesus Christ, and the care of all the churches," etc. If this is not blasphemy, it is arrogance.

This personage was to "wear out the saints of the Most High." Fifty millions of martyrs—Christians in name and in spirit—bear witness to the truth of this prediction.

He was to "think to change times and laws." It was Pope Gregory XVI., also, who established the present system of months and seasons, known as the "Gregorian Calendar," which begins the year with the first of January instead of the 21st of December, or the astronomical date of the winter solstice. And it is notorious that he not only regulated the seasons for the whole world, but we all know with what a multitude of saints' days the papists have lumbered up their own ecclesiastical calendar.

"He shall change laws." We quote again from Pope Gregory's Encyclical: "The Roman Pontiff alone is by right universal. In him alone is the right of making laws. Let all kings kiss the feet of the Pope. His name alone shall be heard in the churches. It is the only name in the world. It is his right to depose kings. His word is not to be repealed by any one. It is to be repealed by himself alone. He is to be judged by none. The Church of Rome has never erred, and the Scriptures testify it shall never err."

In the same prophecy it is foretold that this "little horn" shall have dominion for a season, the duration of which is uncertain; after which—let us thank God and take courage—"the judgment shall sit," and his dominion shall cease and be consumed and destroyed unto the end.

In the meantime we may indeed watch the course of impending events in this direction with interest—it may be with dread—but, at all events in the spirit of Christian prayer and devotion to duty, knowing, as the same prophecy assures us, that "the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey him."

I have spoken of the practices of Masonry as resembling the results that shall flow from the reign of "the little horn." The constant readers of the Cynosure can draw the comparison for themselves without much effort. The assumptions of the Masonic leaders and the secret influences of the order upon the government of towns, counties, States and the nation, have been time and time again set forth and proven; the persecutions heaped upon their opponents are matters of history; and the disposition to encourage works of darkness, and to call the darkness light, is no less manifest in Masonry than in the papacy. OLD AMERICAN.

THE MINISTER AND THE MASSES.

BY E. E. FLAGG.

A great reform movement has always important results aside from what it immediately accomplishes, for it is a protest against materialism. It preaches that the life is more than meat; that ideas are worth dying for; and, what is perhaps harder, worth living for; and it takes for its text, "Man shall not live by bread alone." This is the kind of preaching which is wanted—in the pulpit, the home, the Sabbath-school class, and the marts of trade. For so rapidly has the secularizing policy gone on; so faithfully have the nation's leaders and teachers taught us by word and example the opposite of God's Word, the opposite of Christ's example, that our American people, making allowance for the anachronism, would be wanting the saving salt of these great moral movements, quite able to shake hands with Babylon or Tyre, or any of those old empires which, built on the sands of a mere material civilization, sit-to-day in ruins, their knell only tolled by the passing waves or the wind of the desert sighing through broken arches and fallen colonades.

Just now the question is much discussed by ministers' meetings and religious papers why the masses do not go to church, and the answers would be amusing if they were not sad as revealing such a thorough misunderstanding of the whole subject. They do not go because their clothes are not good enough, because they are not made welcome, because they want the day for recreation, and so on ad infinitum. But the truth is the masses want to be taught and they know when they are not taught. They want to be fed and they know when they are not fed. The way to fill up the pews is to preach to the pews, and the more sermons I hear the more I am convinced that this is very little done. To be talked to or read to in a moral, scientific or even religious way is not necessarily to be preached to. The laboring man is not always given stones and scorpions when he goes to church and asks for bread. It is more often—at least when the minister is a man who cares less for the truth than for a big salary, sumptuous living, soft clothing and "society" smiles—a diet of thistles, and I cannot blame him if he is not enough of a donkey to like it. What gave such wonderful power to Savonarola? The world had no mortgage on him. He had put it behind his back, and so his pulpit horizon had no place for Florentine dukes as dukes, or street lazzaroni as such, but only for human souls to speak God's truth to without any leaven of worldly compromise,—and that is preaching. Moral cowardice is fatal to all pulpit power. The working class will not follow for spiritual guides men who show the white feather. They despise pusillanimity, and it is right they should. Men who labor from dawn till dark in mines and shops and factories with a Damocles sword suspended over their heads—the possibility that any moment an explosion of fire damp, or a false step, or a weak spot in a boiler will launch them into eternity—can feel only contempt for a cowardly time-server, commissioned to speak God's truth but afraid to speak it, lest he should have to forego a little popularity and live a little plainer in consequence.

A muzzled pulpit will never save the world; will never save our country. The curse of materialism is the Nessus garment, in which hope dies, patriotism shrivels, and faith turns to ashes. And it is the business of preaching to pierce that refuge of lies through and through, and show men the true life which is not meat, which is not fine clothes, which is not living in merchant's palaces, but is righteousness and peace and joy in the Holy Ghost. Wellesley, Mass.

It is high time that employers should assert their rights against the most intolerable despotism of modern times. The Knights of Labor declaim loudly against despotism, yet the facts show that they themselves are despots of the worst kind, alike in respect to workmen and employers. They practically enslave the former, and assume the right to dictate to the latter the terms upon which, and the manner in which, they shall conduct their business. They are tyrants and disorganizers of society, under the pretense of promoting the interests of wage-earners. They have damaged these interests a thousand times more than they have benefited them. —Independent.

"MY FATHER WORKETH HITHERTO AND I WORK."

BY A. B. CURTIS.

No matter what else the world may say of our God they cannot call him lazy. The heavens declare the glory of God and the firmament showeth his handiwork.

Did you never indulge in the habit of building air-castles? How often you caused your childhood hours to pass pleasantly by this means. You never for one moment thought that your creations would ever become real. Yet you delighted in them. You made your imaginations self-consistent, and as you indulged your thoughts they seemed to make themselves. This and that imaginary person would seem to do things and say things entirely independent of yourself. For the time being you were as happy with this fiction as though it were real, perhaps even more so because to most of us "nothing is so good as it seems beforehand."

God is infinite. Suppose he had only imagined our world to exist, and never materialized his thought. Suppose you and I were only pieces of one of God's air-castles. Could not God who is infinite be as well pleased with such imaginary worlds as with real ones, and have saved himself the work and trouble of creating these great planets? Suppose he had so done; suppose God were not the untiring worker that he is, what would life have meant to you and me? I imagine a fly walking over the paper on which I am writing. Do you suppose that fly that I imagine there is enjoying life? Do you suppose that he gets any pleasure out of the sugar I imagine him eating? Do you think that Deacon B., as he sat napping in his pew last Sabbath, would have derived any consolation from that nap if God only imagined Deacon B. and his nap, too? "My father worketh hitherto." God used his hands and made you and me, combinations of spirit, soul, flesh, blood and bone. You and I are realities, not fictions. One hundred years ago David Hume tried to make men believe that they were fictions, that they only imagined that they lived. But he did not succeed. Mark this fact: no matter how near nothing a man may become you cannot make him believe he is only a ghost.

"Tell me not in mournful numbers
Life is but an empty dream,
For the soul is dead that slumbers
And things are not what they seem.

"Life is real; life is earnest
And the grave is not its goal.
Dust thou art, to dust returnest,
Was not spoken of the soul."

Life is a reality. Life is a reality, bounded by eternity. Life is real for us because God is not lazy, because he not only planned but executed. "I exist," proves that God works. "God works" proves that God is. Logito ergo sum voices a principle as well as a fact. I think: I am. God works: God is. Why does he work? What are his wages? God works: what does he work for? Is it a sin to work? Was it sin that made work necessary? "My Father worketh hitherto and I work." Christ's work diminished sin; Christ's work lightened pain and sweetened existence. Work. Work. Materialize thought in deeds of righteousness. Spiritualize things in lofty ideals and examples. Inactivity is the thief of the Gospel. May the time soon come when work shall be so pure in aim and righteousness so full of doing that "work" and "righteousness" will be synonymous terms.

OATH-BOUND SECRECY IN INDIA.

The rapidly developing interest in the lodge discussion in foreign lands has a valuable addition in the following letter from the United Presbyterian Mission in India to the editor of The Midland, and author of "In the Coils." We suspect it is written by Prof. Robert Stewart, who was one of the secretaries of the famous Boston convention. It will be noted how the observation of the writer corroborates the views of our Bombay correspondent published in the Cynosure of July 7th:

REV. E. B. GRAHAM, Dear Brother:—Accept my thanks and the thanks of my brethren for a copy of your book, "In the Coils," which you sent to the library of the Theological Seminary. I hope it will do good.

You wish me to write something about the secret orders of India for the columns of the Midland.

My acquaintance with secret orders in this country is not very extensive; but that they do exist here—Freemasonry in particular—every one knows. There is a lodge of Masons in Sialkot cantonment, and probably there is not a settlement of Europeans or Eurasians in India, of any great size, whether civil or military, where one or more lodges may not be found.

The comparatively isolated condition of the English and other Europeans here seems to favor the establishment of lodges and the spread of the order among this class of people. They want some bond and pledge of brotherhood in a strange land—some friend who will care for them and theirs in life or death. They are not satisfied with the military or governmental bond by which most of them are connected together, and through which they get care, support and society. Much less are they satisfied with the associations and obligations of the church; for many of them have only a form of religion, if they have even that.

The fact, too, that Masonry is favored by the nobility, and that one of England's princes (high in the order) is now in India, adds something, no doubt, to the aggrandizement of the order. The Prince of Wales, heir apparent to the throne, is Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of England, and his younger brother, Major General the Duke of Connaught, who now commands the Bombay army, holds office in the lodge. Citizens of a Republic cannot understand the full force of such attractions, but that they have a great influence on the subjects of Her Majesty cannot be denied. Even missionaries, from this and other causes, are led to become Masons.

Masonry, however, is not the obtrusive, arrogant, noisy, braggart institution here which it is in some parts of the world. It seldom figures in dedications, excursions, grand demonstrations, or newspaper reports. Now and then we hear of some movement within its circles—the establishment of a new lodge, or a visit of a distinguished brother—but generally it makes no sign to the outside world and carries on its business in strict secrecy. Even advertisements of lodge meetings are seldom seen in the newspapers.

Nor has it made any great impression on the native mind, or drawn within its pale many Hindus or Mohammedans. The classes of the people chiefly affected, perhaps, are native Christians of position and persons of other faiths who have been educated away from their own religion, or have virtually discarded it. Orientals cannot understand how a man can have two religions at the same time, and they refuse even to eat with persons of a different faith from their own. Looking then upon Freemasonry as a foreign religion, which indeed it is, or at least a very close alliance with persons professing a foreign religion, they cannot be brought to take part in it. To become members of the lodge would seem like an abandonment of their own faith, a union with unbelievers.

Persons, however, who have become skeptics through education, who regard Hinduism, Christianity and Mohammedanism alike as superstition, or who, after professing Christianity have been taught to think and believe, as many nominal Christians in America and England have been taught to think and believe, may possibly be brought to imitate the example of their white neighbors and superiors and enter the procession that leads to darkness rather than light.

Secrecy, no doubt, from the earliest days has in some form cursed the land of India, as it has cursed almost every nation on the earth. Thugery was only one of its numerous brood. But secrecy, as we have referred to it in this letter, is of Western origin, a foreign vice—if we may so term it. Its spread, therefore, is quite limited in extent, because the influence of the foreigner penetrates but a small distance into the depths of society. When this influence increases, unless it becomes sanctified meanwhile by the Spirit of holiness, we may expect greater prosperity in the lodge.

A PASTOR'S EXPERIENCE.

It was on the occasion of a pastoral call on one of his lady parishioners. The pastor is a good man over a good church in this city [Washington]. In the course of a friendly conversation the woman said:

"I would like to ask you if you know anything about Freemasonry, and what you think of it."

The pastor hesitated a moment, and then, with some apparent embarrassment, said: "I must confess I have been a Freemason. I was forced to join the order to maintain my standing. I discovered that the lodge controlled appointments to such an extent that a minister who was not a member of the order stood little chance."

He did not realize the evil of the order till he was once summoned to the death-bed of a brother Mason. After some conversation with the man, trying to point him to Christ, he offered to pray with him.

"No," said the dying man, "I do not care to have you pray for me. I have religion enough. I am dying on the square."

Nothing which the pastor could say seemed to move the man from the conviction that "living up to Masonry" was the road to eternal salvation. This experience opened his eyes and alarmed him. He had not supposed that men could be so deluded by the claims of the lodge as to trust their eternal welfare to it.

What can this man, who is now pastor of a church in this city, do? If he states this fact publicly and gives his unbiased opinion of the lodge, he will be driven from the ministry. If he keeps still about it the lodge will point to him as an evidence that it is a good order or such good men would not be members. What can the dear man do?

What is the fate of a man deluded into the false hope of the lodge? How many men are trusting to this hope? They hear it said almost daily that if they "live up to Masonry" they will be safe. If they believe this declaration they must inevitably die resting in a false hope.—American.

THE INFLUENCE OF SECRET SOCIETIES ON THE CHURCHES.

ADDRESS OF BISHOP MILTON WRIGHT IN THE CHRISTIAN CONGRESS, MARCH 31, 1887.

This Congress of Churches and Christians, at the call of many able educators and divines, is assembled "to consider the nature and principles of the secret lodge system, and its influence on the Christian religion and civil liberty." Nor is it strange that this representative body of ministers and people should so assemble. The secret lodge system gathers millions of revenue annually and includes a vast number of people in the lodge, commanding much of their time and labor and influence. It builds costly temples, sets up a rival system of worship, and yet, strange to tell, includes in its communion a large number of ministers and members of the Christian church! So it might be naturally expected that thoughtful Christians everywhere would be concerned about its influence on both church and state. Indeed this subject has received the profound attention of the ablest statesmen and divines in England and America. At one time in this country, enlightened public opinion and conscience broke the shackles of nine-tenths of the lodge membership. But now, like idolatry in the days of Jezebel, it flourishes again.

As a part of the great questions stated in your call, I invite your attention to the theme,—The Influence of Secret Societies on the Churches.

Among matters most important to any part of the Christian Church, are unity of faith, unity of worship, and unity of brotherhood. If secret societies materially affect these, it is to the church a matter of grave concern. How can the essential elements of secret societies fail so to effect them? Secret societies in general aim to embrace in their membership persons of all theistic views of religion. These may be Christians, deists, Jews, and even Mohammedans. If so, the lodge must conciliate deists and Jews, many of whom are Freemasons, Odd-fellows, and members of other secret orders. Hence it is quite natural that other secret societies should, in this respect, be modeled after Freemasonry. And the constitution of that order, as published by themselves, says: "Though in ancient times, Masons were charged to comply with the religious opinions and usages of the country or nation where they sojourned or worked, yet it is now thought most expedient that the brethren in general should only be charged to adhere to the essentials of religion, in which all men agree, leaving each brother to his own judgment as to particular forms." (Craftsman and Freemason's Guide, page 213.)

Then Freemasonry holds that, in the essentials of religion, all men agree—whether Jews, deists, Christians, or Mohammedans. So they hold that belief in Christ or in God's Word is not essential. What is this but the broadage, Unitarian creed? But this is in harmony with Masonic teaching, as well as Masonic practice. Mr. Mackey, in his Lexicon, page 402, says: "The religion of Masonry is pure theism, on which its members graft their own peculiar opinions, but they are not permitted to introduce them into the lodge." Chase, in his Digest of Masonic Laws, page 206, says: "It is Anti-masonic to require any religious test other than the candidate should believe in a God, the Creator and Governor of the Universe." So according to Mackey and Chase, high Masonic authorities, the faith of Freemasonry is deism, and nothing more. And the Mystic Star, a Masonic monthly of Chicago, a few years ago declared the phrase, "earth's Creator and man's Redeemer, Jesus Christ," used by Grand Orator Kending of Iowa,—"purely sectarian, and hence, Anti-masonic."

Nor is the faith of Odd-fellows less deistic than that of Freemasonry. Its article of faith, as given in one of its lodges, says: "To become a member of this lodge, the applicant must believe in the existence of a Supreme Being—Creator, Preserver, and Governor of all things." What less does a deist, Jew, or Mohammedan believe? It is not strange, therefore, that Odd-fellows should publish, for their use at the laying of a corner-stone, an ode of which this is one stanza:

"A temple where no narrow creed Protects a chosen few;
But holds alike deserved meed
To Christian, Turk, or Jew."

See Odd-fellows' Pocket Companion, page 291. On page 243 of this same book, it says, that if their prescribed form of funeral prayer is not used, "they are required to refrain from using any." And that printed form is Christless! Truly Odd-fellowship is as purely deistic as Freemasonry. Nor, except a few secret orders, like those of the papal church, or of atheistic school, we know not of any secret order that is not built on deistic grounds.

Freemasonry, in the Royal Arch degree, even twice strikes the name of our Lord Jesus Christ from its quotation from the third chapter of the Second Epistle to the Thessalonians! See Craftsman, page 137; also Sickle's Monitor. It is but one of their efforts to establish a religious fellowship of those of faith as wide apart as nadir and the zenith. They can never bridge the gulf of disfellowship between deism and sincere Christianity. For "what communion hath light with darkness? and what concord hath Christ with Belial? or what part hath he that believeth with an infidel?"

When church members join the lodge, they thereby subscribe to its religious creed. Thomas Paine could have consistently subscribed to the Masonic or Odd-fellow's creed. Those creeds purposely omit all declaration of belief in Christ or in the inspiration of the Scriptures. This, in the face of Christian light, is a virtual denial of Christ and revelation. Christians who enter into such lodge fellowship, and join in such lodge worship, thereby stultify themselves. They also drink in the liberalistic spirit of the lodge and carry it back into the churches. How insidious, widespread, and poisonous must the influence be on the churches. If angels and men and devils could be gathered in one vast assembly, and the prince of darkness should propose that all should unite in fellowship and worship on the basis of doctrines on which angels, saints, deists, and devils were all agreed, and to the exclusion of heaven's King and man's Redeemer, how many, think you, would remain, of angels or saints, to complete the organization?

None, except it were saints who had been tempered to kindred fellowship and worship in the lodge!

But Freemasonry teaches doctrine very different from evangelical Christianity. The latter teaches that faith, repentance, regeneration, and an indwelling Saviour are essential to salvation. But eminent authorities in Freemasonry teach salvation by works alone. Cornelius Moore, a high Masonic authority, says in the Craftsman, page 28: "The common gavel is an instrument made use of by operative Masons, to break off the superfluous corners of rough stones, the better to fit them for the builder's use; but we, as free and accepted Masons, are taught to use it for the more noble and glorious purpose of divesting our minds and consciences of all the vices and superfluities of life; thereby fitting us as living stones for that spiritual building, that house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens." What is this if not salvation by works?

Salem Towne, one of the greatest lights of the order, says: "Speculative Masonry, according to its present acceptance, has an ultimate reference to that spiritual building erected by virtue in the heart, and summarily implies the arrangement and perfection of those holy and sublime principles by which the soul is fitted for a meet temple of God, in a world of immortality."

Mr. Towne has all this without any vicarious atonement, any new birth, or even any Christ. How evil must be the influence of such doctrine taught in their own books and periodicals, and impressed upon the minds and hearts of the members in the lodge. And will not such of these as are members of Christian churches, carry into those bodies the specious poison contained in such teaching? It is poisonous to the very soul of our Christianity.

But Freemasonry has even its ceremonial baptisms. General J. W. Phelps, in his book entitled, "Secret Societies Ancient and Modern," quotes from a current New York newspaper an account of the baptism of a Royal Arch Mason's son, in St. John's Church, New York, under the auspices of Alpha Chapter, No. 1, Order of the Eastern Star, the past chaplain of the State and the pastor of the church officiating. The service was a strange compound of the Masonic and the Episcopal. But General Phelps also quotes from the Washington Star of April 30th, 1872, an account of the baptism of two children into the Mithras Lodge of Perfection, in Washington city, by Thrice Illustrious Past Grand Master Albert Pike, assisted by other high Masonic officials. These sons of Masons of high degree were baptized and anointed with oil in great ceremony, including burning candles arranged in a triangle, and the singing of odes by the choir. After the baptism and anointing, the children were invested in lambskin aprons and each presented with a Masonic jewel, the Master of Ceremonies saying: "In the name and under the auspices of the Supreme Council, I do proclaim these children consecrated to the service of truth and virtue by Masonic baptism and anointing, after the ancient custom of Masonry, to be wards of Mithras Lodge of Perfection." See Phelps' book, pages 163-167.

So Masonry indoctrinates, worships, dedicates temples, baptizes children, and buries its dead, consigning them, irrespective of character, except Masonic, to the grand lodge above. Secret societies in general are only modified forms of Freemasonry, differing with it in degree rather than in kind. Nearly all secret societies have a system of worship, which, so far as authorized in their books, is foreign to and inconsistent with Christian worship. The songs of devotion (as well as forms of prayer) of Masons, Odd-fellows, and other secret societies in general, as published by themselves, carefully exclude the blessed name of Jesus Christ. Last summer I looked through a book of song, used by the Patrons of Husbandry, only to find that "grangers" have songs of praise to Pomona and Flora, but none to the praise of Jesus Christ. Secret societies in general shape their ritual to promote the fellowship of "Christian, Turk, and Jew." And when their prayers are extempore, one to suit a Unitarian, a Jew, or a deist is just as lawful as a Christian prayer. How can Christians join in lodge-worship, with songs and prayers and Scripture readings, from which the name of Christ is purposely excluded, without infracting their faith or searing their conscience? Will not such worship by church members have a very deleterious influence on the sincerity and spirituality of the Church? Mock worship ever tends to mock piety.

It is true, however, that some secret societies are so avowedly infidel, or so palpably at variance with religion, as to omit religious worship entirely. The omission is to the credit of their sincerity. Not so much can be said to the credit of the Knights Templar and the other side degrees of Freemasonry, borrowed from the crusades and adapted; for these do use the name of Christ freely, but blasphemously, which is even worse than not to use it at all.

Members of the Christian brotherhood, in joining a secret society, find in the lodge another brotherhood, which is an artificial and spurious one. Those born of God have a spiritual brotherhood with heaven's seal upon it. Those who assume both brotherhoods have two, and these conflicting; and the artificial one claims, and that on the strength of oaths and obligations, a closer fraternity than the other, and too often enforces its claims. This tends to partiality in societies and bodies of Christians. Secretists prefer the interests of each other above the interests of brethren who are not of the artificial brotherhood. This leads to partialities, promotions not based on merit alone, to preferences in pastorates, to jealousies, and to alienations. For secret societies are clans with none of the ties of kindred, nationality, or spiritual relationship. These clans are for selfish purposes as relates to outsiders. And clans within the church, or partly within, will certainly affect the brotherhood and fellowship of the church. Those allied to each other in the lodge will be specially allied to each other in the church. And will they not be strongly tempted to monopolize coveted benefits in the church, by such means as they have learned to be successful in overreaching those outside the lodge? Will not this evil, seen or unseen, run into conferences, councils, and synods of the churches? And if it does not do this, will not its possibility and even probability give grounds for jealousies and wrangling? How many societies and religious bodies are now torn and bleeding from these very causes? And besides all this, there are not a few who abhor the mongrel worship of the lodge; so they can have little confidence in those who burn strange fire on deistic altars. And confidence is one of the pillars of any religious commonwealth. But how does this artificial brotherhood affect the efficiency of the ecclesiastical service? If secret societies, as is well known, use their machinery to monopolize the political offices of the country, will not ministers and members trained in the lodge use like machinery to secure to the orders, the offices and the control of the societies and general bodies of the church? Do not secretists, in too many societies and ecclesiastical bodies, monopolize the desirable offices of the church, as the Credit Mobilier monopolized the funds of the Union Pacific Railroad? Christians with consciences at ease beside deistic altars, may love to work wires, to which they have special training in the lodge. Hence secretists combining will in many cases dictate as to the choice of pastors, and as to their continuance and support. Where secretists have any considerable membership in a church, they exercise a dangerous control of its tone and its destiny. It is like the unscrupulous George the Fourth, at the head of the Church of England.

The very elements of secret societies invite suspicion. 1. Combinations are for power and efficiency. 2. They are evidently for underhand power. 3. The history of the world and the common sense of mankind teach that they are well adapted to fraud, robbery, revolution, and anarchy, but ill adapted to peace, righteousness, and true religion. As brushwood is an excellent place for foxes to hide, so the lodge is an excellent place for cunning and unscrupulous men to ply their trade. There, real objects are masked, and selfish motives are concealed. There, promise is made to the ear to be broken to the hope. There, the simple are fleeced to get millions of money for scheming leaders. The money of the gullied goes to the pleasure and aggrandizement of those who gull them. And what a place is this to train men for duties and methods in the church! This carrying of the spirit of fraud and guile into the church by secretist members is greatly to its demoralization.

It is evident that secret societies cultivate slyness and concealment, and these just as evidently tend to prevarication and falsehood. Can churches allow their members communion with the lodge, whose cardinal virtues are "silence and secrecy," without itself being soon compassed about with deceit?

Secret orders protect iniquities in their members, and hence carry the same influence into the church. They come in, also, to obliterate the line between saint and sinner. They obscure the distinction between good and evil. They give false names to moral qualities. Of such, Isaiah says: "Woe unto them that call evil good and good evil." They call organizations ancient and honorable, which truly are modern and corrupt. They call certain qualities virtues, which the moral sense of mankind calls vices. Thus they corrupt the moral sense of church members who are under their influence. They embarrass the church by its members and ministers endorsing the sins of the lodge. For instance, just think of ministers and members sitting to discipline profanity, dancing, duplicity or Sabbath-breaking, while they themselves do or abet the same in the lodge. How much is this like Satan reproving sin!

Let us contrast the pure objects of Christianity with the selfish, worldly objects of secretism. The church aims to save the souls of men, to bring a pure and spiritual brotherhood into complete faith and obedience to Christ, to promote a pure, sincere, and spiritual worship through the Redeemer, to put down sin and iniquity, and to build up truth and righteousness in the earth, and to glorify God. Secretism ignores all true means of salvation, brings all under the despotism of the lodge, sets up a rival and false worship, protects its own in evil, and glorifies the lodge, discrediting Christ and the church. Secretism promotes the influence of those prone to its service and seeks to break down the influence of those who will not bow the knee before it. It muzzles and subsidizes the secular press and thus carries its own influence into church homes. It intimidates the religious press, which should be the mouth-piece for truth and church independence. It terrorizes the minister into an abject coward, and reflects his cowardice in the hearts and lives of his people. In almost every way, it sends its poisonous influence into the body of the church.

Christianity teaches us to trust in God, to be meek and humble, to refrain from revenge and persecution, to be impartial, to avoid ostentatious display and worldly associations, and to observe the Lord's Day. Secretism cultivates a reliance on underhand power; it teaches favoritism; it enjoins revenge and persecution toward seceders from the lodge, and toward those who stand in its way; it leads into worldly and impious associations; it glories in display, and it desecrates the Lord's Day with heathenish parades. Such is its influence on its members; and if a portion of its votaries are church members, such is also its influence upon the church.

Secret societies require much of the time and money of their church members and ministers. They rob the church of its funds for the regular service and for its institutions and missions, to fill the coffers of the lodge, to build costly temples, to defray the expenses of conclaves, and to carry on its displays, enterprises, and conspiracies. The lodge claims the benevolence, the good works, and the influence of its church members, robs Christianity of the glory of these—if there is any—and sounds its trumpet disproportionately loud.

Secretism presents a rival code to God's law and Christ's precepts. It may sport the Holy Book in ostentation, but in other lands that holy book may be the Koran of the Turk or the Shasta of the Hindu. In Masonry, as two equally great lights, come in the compass and the square brimful of brains and wisdom. But, at least in Masonry and Odd-fellowship, secretism associates vile fiction or perversion with Bible history, thereby mixing vile clay with the pure gold. Zion is light and the lodge is darkness, and as Solomon says, "Wisdom excelleth folly as far as light excelleth darkness."

Secretism seeks to affect the success of men in business, and, especially the labor organizations; forbids to buy or sell unless a man have "the mark of the beast" upon him. It affects the rights of property and many other natural rights, as enforced strikes, suppressed business, and boycotting testify. It violates moral and civil liberty in its attempts to control its members, willing or unwilling, and in its exercise of secret power to terrorize those outside the lodge to submission to its demands. It spikes the guns of the church against Jesuitism, Purroism, and other secret religious societies. Secret societies, in some of their forms, are purely despotic in their government, as Mr. Mackey testifies of Masonry; and they influence church members connected with them to favor despotism in church government. And in all their forms they put church members' conduct during lodge hours beyond amenability to the church.

But among the most important of all influences are those affecting Christian homes. Here the lodge comes in to lock from each other the minds and hearts of husband and wife—to those whom God hath joined together as one—and to put a realm of mystery between parents and children. This alone has a very evil influence upon those homes from which the church should receive so much of its moral and spiritual power.

Secret societies impose upon their members oaths and obligations, in some cases barbarous and blasphemous, and in all cases binding them to more than is morally and physically possible of fulfillment; and all this before the candidate knows what that oath embraces in its requirements. Such oaths are contrary to God's Word. See Leviticus 5: 4. And as these oaths and obligations often and continually conflict with natural duties and God's law, does not the taking of them tend to exalt the sanctity of a profane oath above duty and God's law? And does not this creation of artificial obligations (bad in itself) tend to weaken a sense of those genuine obligations from which no oaths can absolve us? But secret societies place behind those oaths and obligations a secret and dreaded power to enforce them even when they conflict with conscience and God's law. Persecution of those violating these artificial obligations of the lodge is a necessary part of the system, because it is essential to the authority of the lodge. But, besides this, their oaths bind them to persecute the unfaithful. Hence the conscience of ministers and laymen in the meshes of the lodge, are demoralized; first by oaths which they scruple to break, and second by a secret power they dare not resist. Few men are brave in chains; hence these submit to the wrong and even sanction it, thus becoming partaker of the sin. This is certainly fearfully demoralizing to the churches to which these ministers and laymen belong.

That the evil influences suggested in this address, and others which cannot be mentioned in this connection, exert a most impoverishing influence on the moral power and spirituality of the church, needs no further argument. For these reasons, it is most apparent that secret societies stand in the way of genuine revivals and the upbuilding of God's spiritual house. This is still more apparent when we consider that in time of protracted revival meetings in churches largely composed of secretists, many of its members, and even some ministers, are at times away attending the lodge with its worldly associations, its trifles, its profane oaths, its legal righteousness for salvation, and its Christless worship. No wonder if the revival languishes or takes on a form of salvation as Christless as that of the lodge.

Now inasmuch as the member of a secret society is responsible for the essential errors and wickedness of that society, and as the church holding secretists in its communion is responsible for the wrong which it tolerates and encourages in its members, there is an awful guilt resting upon the churches holding secretists in their communion.

If then the secret lodge system teaches its members a creed acceptable to deist, Turk, or Jew; if it teaches salvation by works alone, or works and lodge ceremonies; if it purposely excludes the name of Christ from its worship or makes deistic or Jewish worship in the lodge just as lawful as Christian worship; if it brings its Christian members into religious communion with infidels; if some of its orders strike the name of our Lord Jesus Christ from Scripture readings, and have baptisms and anointings in the name of the supreme councils of the lodge, is it not time that the Christian church should be aroused to the danger of such powerful and pernicious influences on church members under lodge teaching and control, and to the danger through these to the church itself, and to our holy Christianity? If the secret lodge system brings church members into an artificial and spurious brotherhood; if it promotes partialities, jealousies, and alienations in the church; if it monopolizes the church offices for its adherents; if it often dictates the choice, continuance, and support of pastors; if it tends to crafty and underhand methods in ecclesiastical affairs, it is a matter of grave concern to the church. If secret lodge practice teaches that the masses are the proper prey of the magnates of the order; if it obliterates the distinction between saint and sinner and confuses that between moral qualities; if it stifles many ministers and members in disciplining profanity, duplicity, dancing, and other sins which they themselves commit or abet in the lodge; if it muffles the voice of the church against corrupt religious societies; if it reduces the minister and his members to abject cowardice before the scepter of the lodge, it is high time that the church of our Lord should seek its destruction. If this lodge system seeks to appropriate the glory due Christ and his church; if it falsifies and perverts Bible history; if it subdues and controls the secular and religious press; if it interferes with moral and natural rights; if it separates, in knowledge and sympathies, husband and wife, and puts a realm of mystery between parent and children, the Christian churches should rise up against it as against the common enemy of earth and heaven. If the lodge system has oaths which are unscriptural, impossible of fulfillment, and, in some cases, shockingly barbarous and profane, and if behind these there is a secret, persecuting power to enforce those oaths, even though they bind to violate duty and God's law; if these secret powers stand in the way of genuine revival and the triumph of Christ's church, then, surely, the Lord's church, if silent and indifferent to lodge poison and devastation, becomes guilty before God.

In view, then, of these reasons, and others not even mentioned, and in view of the fact that the lodge system controls millions of money and millions of people, commanding much of the time, labor and influence of members of the church, how fearful is the responsibility of churches which tolerate their members in lodge connection. Oh, that Zion would arise, shake herself from the dust, and put on her beautiful garments of purity, light, righteousness and salvation.

REFORM NEWS.

THE REFORM RECEIVED IN RICHMOND.

HINMAN AND COLE AMONG THE COLORED CHURCHES OF THE VIRGINIA CAPITAL.

RICHMOND, Va., July 28, 1887.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Our stay in this city has, I trust, not been altogether unprofitable, though we have not done as much as we had hoped. The large colored population of Richmond has, as a general fact, more constant and remunerative employment than in the cities farther South, if we except Atlanta and some others of exceptional prosperity. They seem on the whole to be reasonably prosperous and manage to have, at this season of the year, especially, considerable leisure and money to devote to excursions, picnics, camp meetings, and other sources of recreation. Except on the Sabbath it is not easy to get the ear of the people, and in this oppressive weather the congregations are smaller than usual.

On Sabbath, the 24th, Bro. Cole and I each preached in the First Baptist church, Rev. E. W. Holmes, pastor. This is one of the oldest of the churches of this city. They have a large and fine house of worship in a central part of the city and a membership of over 3,000. Elder Holmes has been their pastor for thirty-five years, and is still a man of great mental and physical vigor, though lacking the advantages of early education. His hold on his people, some of whom are well educated and fairly prosperous, is very strong. Our congregations in the morning and afternoon were not less than 600. The Sabbath-school by actual count was 597. Elder Holmes is a Freemason, and belongs to nearly all the secret societies of the city. I am confident that he regards them as evil rather than good, but says that as long as these orders are so almost universally patronized by the white people, it will be difficult to convince the colored that they are evil. His people listened with attention and apparent sympathy to my arraignment of the secret lodge system. Quite a lot of our literature was distributed, and I hope much good was done.

In the afternoon I preached in the African M. E. church, Rev. E. H. Bolden, pastor. This congregation has a fine house of worship, but colored Methodism has never made much headway in this city. Bro. Cole had preached here in the morning. Neither of us had large congregations, but they were attentive. I think there was some squirming at what I said on the lodge system. Their pastor is a Mason and feels that he is in honor bound to defend it. He took what was said in excellent spirit, and invited Bro. Cole to lecture in his church on Tuesday night, when he met a fair congregation and gave an able discourse, in which African and American secret societies had an ample ventilation. A fair collection was taken.

Sabbath night I preached in the African M. E. church, Rev. J. Wheeler, pastor, where a small congregation gave good attention to the word. I was much pleased with the intelligent and excellent pastor, who is quite in sympathy with us in our reform views. At the same time Bro. Cole spoke in the Fifth Street Baptist church, Rev. A. P. Dunbar, pastor. This people have nearly completed a fine house of worship at a cost of $16,000. They number about 800. He had a full house, and in our work we have the sympathy of the pastor.

On Wednesday night, the 27th, we met a large congregation in the Leigh Street Baptist church, Rev. D. Wells, pastor. Bro. Cole spoke an hour and a quarter. I never heard him do better. Rev. R. Wells, who gave up Masonry for Christ's sake, is the only pastor who feels called upon to resist the lodge power. He is one of the old pastors, has a large and excellent house of worship, and a membership of perhaps 1,000. He heartily endorsed what Bro. Cole said, and manifested a warm interest in Christian reform.

We expect to leave here to-day by way of York River and Chesapeake Bay for Baltimore.

H. H. HINMAN.

GOOD ENOUGH FOR ANY WEATHER.

WHEATON, July, 30, 1887.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Although I have not reported for a few weeks past I have been by no means idle, as my wilted collar would often testify. More than once it has been returned to the Chinaman for more starch. At 106° in the shade the time is not very favorable for a heated discussion. Under such circumstances it is best to "keep cool" (if you can). Notwithstanding the heat I have been able to prod the lodge lion so as to make him growl. That is about all he can do. His lips are so padlocked that when the prod of truth comes, he can only look mean and growl. He cannot, he dare not, meet argument with argument in the open field. Oh, what a pitiful sight to see a man created in the image of God, destined to live through eternity, skulking around afraid to meet the truth.

There has of necessity been much sameness in the work done recently as formerly. It is not best for me to take up space giving detailed accounts of encounters had with members of the fraternity. The farmer who would raise a good crop must continually keep the soil in good condition. There must be a thorough plowing and hoeing; all stumps and stones must be removed. To accomplish this there is much repetition, a detailed account of which would be tedious, to say the least. We are content to know that the crop is good without tracing the history of its growth.

During the past month I have distributed our literature in eighteen different towns; have taken sixty subscriptions to the Cynosure, and delivered nine public addresses.

Meetings at Lindenwood were previously reported. My visit at Byron was of no ordinary interest, it being my birthplace and the home of my childhood. It was my privilege to speak from the pulpit formerly occupied by my father (as pastor) to some of my former schoolmates, and others who had watched during the earlier years of my juvenile development, until I departed elsewhere. At Leaf River the attendance was small. A big drunk was had here "the Fourth," and many had not got sober. All the temperance people, who could, left, as Lot left Sodom, and attended a temperance meeting at Polo. Among these was Bro. D. Sprecher, who opened his hall free of charge for the lecture, and extended the hospitality of his home.

At Mt. Morris the attendance was fair. The audience was largely composed of friends belonging to the Dunker or German Baptist church. They have a college at this place that is said to be in a prosperous condition. The president and several of the faculty shook my hand at the conclusion of the lecture and expressed their approbation. The success of this meeting is largely due to Bro. J. Breaw, a U. B. by name and at heart.

Rev. Wm. Pinkney, having in charge two Wesleyan churches, located northwest and northeast of Wyand, invited me to address both congregations. To those who are acquainted with the Wesleyans I need not say that our work met with their hearty approval.

Perhaps the most interesting lectures of this trip were given at Little York, Warren county, where I spoke last Sabbath and Monday evenings. My first arrangement was only for Sabbath evening, thinking, as it was a busy time, the people would not care to come out on a week evening. At the conclusion of the Sabbath evening discourse a number expressed a desire to hear farther concerning this matter. Hence the meeting on Monday evening. The attendance was large at both meetings. The Odd-fellows growled considerable on the street, and claimed that they were misrepresented; but when invited to correct any misrepresentations in the meeting, had nothing to say.

In company with Robt. Porter I secured sixteen new readers for the Cynosure in one day here. This was the people's verdict.

I spent three days at a temperance assembly at Princeton. Mrs. Hodgeman, known to many as a worker in our cause, was a leader in this. It was instituted with some fear, as it was only an experiment, but proved to be a glorious success.

W. B. STODDARD.

A COMPANION REPORT.

Mr. G. A. Conrad, employed as colporteur in Illinois, reported to the State Executive Committee Friday evening for the first month, and began the second Monday morning. Since the 27th of June he visited seventeen towns and cities in six counties of Northern Illinois; distributed 2,000 pages of tracts; secured 25 subscriptions for the Cynosure, half of them for a year; sold books to the amount of $3.20, held many conversations and private debates, and addressed one public meeting. His report gave great satisfaction and he was urged to continue, and prepare the way in some degree for a State Convention, about the last of September.

TRACT WORK AT LAKE BLUFF.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—On reaching the Lake Bluff Convocation grounds on the opening day I found many of the workers on the field and the meeting opened with marked interest. The Training School presided over by Miss Mary Allen West was very helpful, especially to those who are but just entering the W. C. T. U. work. Miss Esther Pugh gave instructions how to secure and use financial aid. Mrs. Buell took the line of local organization. Vocal culture was taught by Mrs. Frances McCarthy Mallory during three sessions. She drilled us not only to use the voice correctly, but to appear at ease on the platform and when and how to make gestures so as to produce the best effect.

Other topics were discussed, including health, by Dr. Bessie Cushman; young women's work, by Addie Northam and others; evangelistic work, by Mrs. Palmer and Mrs. Henry, and the Temperance Hospital, by Dr. Mary Weeks Burnett. The afternoons and evenings were devoted to speeches on different subjects by some of our most noted men and women.

Being deeply interested in women's Christian temperance work, and that actively, I have been deeply pained the past few weeks or months to see, as I thought, leaning towards things which I fear will not result in the best good of the work which lies so deeply in our hearts, therefore I spent all my spare time at the Bluffs talking to different ones on the subject, giving them tracts, papers, etc., of the N. C. A., hoping to enlighten their minds and hearts so they can see clearly in this matter.

We have a leader who is above reproach, a peer above all, and yet I do feel that some way or somehow she has not fully understood the danger of these minor secret societies. In talking to me, Miss Willard said, "I cannot see that what little secrecy they have is wrong. They are doing a good work, yet I wish they would drop the secrecy part,"—referring to the Good Templars and Knights of Labor. "I do not like the Masons, Odd-fellows, etc., any better than you do."

In reply I said, "To me these minor societies are to the older what wine, beer and cider are to whisky, brandy and rum, only the stepping-stones to what is beyond."

I talked with many as to the bad influence of secret societies, especially where only men are members, their frequent wine suppers, dances, and feasts; and nearly every one said they had noticed the same and had no doubt that many a young man gave way to temptation there who never would have fallen elsewhere. A leaflet showing this view of the subject would be excellent. I wished there were some for distribution at the Bluffs. This matter must be brought before the women more and more. Investigation is what is needed. It has a bearing on the temperance question which we can not afford to ignore.

While distributing tracts, Cynosures, etc., at the door of the Tabernacle one day, a gentleman finding out the purport of the papers entered into conversation. I learned in a short time that he knew but little of his order, and so told him of some things he would find in their own standard works and when he got posted up would like to talk with him again. Our literature was kept on the tables at the parlor and many availed themselves of it.

After Finch had so emphatically portrayed Mr. Stoddard's character, in speaking of it to Mrs. Gov. St. John and other ladies, I told them as I came to the Bluffs to learn I did not know but thanks were due Mr. Finch for telling me what kind of a husband I had. They thought it would be an excellent idea, but as he left on the early train the opportunity was not given.

My hope and prayer is that our women will get their eyes opened in time to avert the evil and that, too, before they are in any measure committed to any secret order. The Lord reigns, and in his own good time a better state of affairs will exist. Yours in the work,

ANNA E. STODDARD.

CORRESPONDENCE.

A GOOD PAPER.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Your 21 July number is very interesting. It is quite the thing for runners to try to excel their record, and so you try even in this hot weather when so many are summing from home, to drive ahead as fast as ever. Let me recall one or two things that are worthy of being twice told:

Firstly. Amazement seizes one when he reads how easily led aside from the light even that excellent lady Miss Willard has been. What! Do evil that good may come? Encourage all secret societies that will profess prohibition? Mistakes may happen, but let us hope for their correction as soon as possible. How? By the good old "right about face" drill.

Secondly. Powderly is a name odorous with the fumes of lodgery and Romanism. He also loudly professes prohibition. Well, let every tub stand on its own bottom, and let every cause stand on its own merits. Welcome all that will support prohibition, but let us none the less testify against the delusions of popery and lodgery.

Thirdly. Congratulate your faithful agents H. H. Hinman and Prof. Cole of Africa, his able colored fellow-traveler in the South, that they are counted worthy to suffer for righteousness. Proclaim the fact that the war of caste continues in the ferry-boat at Norfolk, Va., and that a white man has not the liberty to go on same side of the boat with black men! White skins, like the white aprons, often cover very different hearts.

Fourthly. But colored heroes share such honor; not only Prof. Cole, but also Rev. R. N. Countee of a Baptist church in Memphis, has been making a noble record, and his letters are always well worth reading. He has set an example of moral and physical courage which is well worthy of imitation, if that was possible, by the Pharisees of caste still so prevalent in the South.

But still another voice must be heard—this time from Kansas. What! Fined $65 for singing at a religious meeting! Why! Why! Things are getting as bad there as in Boston! Isaac Pennington is imprisoned in Windfield jail! Slavery is over, they say, but what is lodgery? Is our country like Egypt? No sooner get rid of one plague than on comes another! Slavery—war! Lodgery—persecution! What next? Ah! Proclaim that Jesus was a Mason, and if possible deceive his followers! Let churches fellowship Masons; but what shall the end be of such harlotry with the works of darkness! Balaams and Jezebels may obtain rule in the churches, but the Lord will remove their candlestick and their light is extinguished! T. H.

HENRY VARLEY ON THE GOOD TEMPLARS.

CUSTER CITY, Pa., July 22, 1887.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I saw by yours of recent dates that Miss Willard counts the Knights of Labor as beneficial as the Good Templars. If the Good Templar's order is par excellence I will quote from a speech of Mr. Henry Varley, a few years ago, at the Crystal Palace (England), on a fete day of the National Temperance League.

"I have," he said, "been for some time a Good Templar, but I am here to-day to say that unless Good Templarism, as is represented in its ritual, is modified; unless the Lord Jesus Christ ceases to be politely bowed out by the ritual; I confess, much as I love total abstinence, much as I value being a co-worker with Good Templars; if it comes to be a question of personal loyalty to my Saviour, or union with Good Templarism, I cannot, and thousands of others will not for one moment hesitate (Hear, hear); I say it thoughtfully, you may as well screen the sun as dare to hide the Lord Jesus Christ, (a voice, 'Question'). No, sir, it is the question, and unless the matter is dealt with, it spreads division amongst us. I speak thoughtfully and advisedly when I say so; and therefore, in love let us remember one another and give the place to our Master that belongs to him, and we shall find ourselves making great progress in days to come." (Loud cheers.)

Mr. Varley cannot be charged with being an enemy to the order. "A word to the wise is sufficient." J. C. YOUNG.

FROM THE FAR NORTHEAST.

MILLVILLE, Kings Co., Nova Scotia, }
July 6th, 1887. }

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Through a kind providence I have had the privilege of perusing the pages of your excellent paper, as from week to week for several months past it has come to my address. I like the apparent spirit of the Cynosure. It carries out its professed object fearlessly, plainly, and yet in a kindly, Christian manner.

As I read the account it gives from week to week of the extent and workings of Freemasonry and kindred secret societies in the United States I am amazed; and I wonder how it is that men of any degree of common sense, especially Christian men and ministers of the Gospel, can allow themselves to be drawn into them; and how it is possible for such to adhere to the Satanic obligations and other blasphemous ceremonies imposed upon each dupe at their initiation! Surely, for those who profess to be followers of the meek and lowly Jesus, who profess to have been redeemed by his precious blood, and saved by his sovereign grace, to allow themselves to be hoodwinked, bound with a cable-tow, and then kneel at a Christless altar and swear to obey they know not what, must be a virtual rejecting of their professed allegiance to Christ, and a positive rejection of the teaching of the Apostle, who says, "Be not unequally yoked together with unbelievers" (2 Cor. 6:14); and "Have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them." Eph. 5:12.

But (strange though it appears) there are, not only in the United States, but in Canada as well, many professing Christians and Gospel ministers who are at this day members of one or another of the various "secret orders!" I confess I tremble for those secret oath-bound preachers lest their boasted works, done in the name of Christ, shall be rejected, and they, at last, be found among those to whom Christ will say, "I never knew you; depart from me ye workers of iniquity!" Matt. 7:22, 23.

For more than forty years I have been observing the apparent effect of Freemasonry and other secret orders upon those who adhere to the lodge, and my opinion now is that, under the influence of the lodge, wicked persons have become more hardened in sin, and professing Christians belonging to any of those secret orders almost invariably have become worldly-minded and indifferent in matters of religion, and generally appear to manifest much more zeal for the lodge than for the church. This being my view of the subject I cannot do otherwise than denounce all secret societies as unscriptural and anti-Christian; and that, because they are such, they should not be patronized by professing Christians. It does appear to me that the secret, oath-bound organizations are clearly symbolized by the image of the beast in Rev. 13th chapter. If this be so, then surely it is quite time for professing Christians to look to their whereabouts. For, "If any man worship the beast, and his image, and receive his mark in his forehead or in his hand, the same shall drink of the wine of the wrath of God. * * * And shall be tormented with fire and brimstone in the presence of the holy angels and in the presence of the Lamb; and the smoke of their torment ascendeth up forever and ever; and they have no rest day nor night who worship the beast and his image and whosoever receiveth the mark of his name!" Rev. 14: 9-11.

Let not professing Christians suppose that they can adhere to the secret, oath-bound lodge and yet be true followers of Jesus. It is impossible. "Ye cannot serve God and Mammon." I close with another quotation, "Come out of her, my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues." Rev. 18:4. R. S. MORTON.

PERSONAL EXPERIENCE WITH ODD-FELLOWSHIP.

Less than four years ago I became a member of the United Brethren church. At that time I was a member of the Odd-fellows lodge No. 324. But wishing to comply with every known law of the church, and believing secrecy to be wrong in its nature and tendency, I demanded the erasure of my name from the lodge roll. I believe the lodge to which I belonged was a fair specimen of that order, and I am glad to say there was not a Christian in the lodge. This perhaps may seem strange to some that I should rejoice because of the fact that there were no Christians there. Well, I will explain. There is no Christ there, and where there is no Christ Christians ought not to go. His is the only name given by which man must be saved. Again: Notwithstanding the solemn affirmation given by the members regarding their belief in a Supreme Being, I positively know that the greater portion of the membership ignored the idea of a Saviour, and the Christian religion. That is, to say the least, infidelity. Now comes the grand question, "What part hath he that believeth with an infidel?" One of our sister lodges which I had occasion to visit was composed largely of young men who, without hesitation, declared that they believed the lodge to be as good as the church, and that they desired nothing better. I was witness to the organizing of another lodge of about seventy members, who upon the eve of their organization, together with their brethren from sister lodges, were so intoxicated that many of them did not know whether they were in Fife Lake or Grand Rapids. A few of them may have been sober, but they were very few. Notwithstanding all I have stated, the Deputy Grand Master pronounced it a very promising lodge. I guess the devil thought so too.

Think how a minister would appear grasping the hand of those fellows and calling them brethren. This would be odd enough. Shame on a minister who has so little regard for himself and his high calling as to be thus unequally yoked together with unbelievers.

Now the question is, Can the lodge system be right? I think that every honest brother will say, no. Then, dear brethren, let us strive to make the church better instead of trying to corrupt her principles. But in order to make the church better we must shun the very appearance of evil. How any one who understands the nature of the lodge system can fail to see that it is a great evil and antagonistic to the Christian church is more than I can understand.—George W. Fowler in Christian Conservator.

BIBLE LESSON.

STUDIES IN THE NEW TESTAMENT.

LESSON VII.—August 14.—The Beatitudes.—Matt. 5: 1-16.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Grace and truth came by Jesus Christ.—John 1: 17.

[Open the Bible and read the Lesson.]

COMMENTS ON THE LESSON BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The Blessing to the Meek and Humble, vs. 1-5. In his sermon on the Mount, Christ reverses all the usual worldly principles, and even those which prevailed among the followers of Judaism. The priests and rabbis in their self-righteousness never thought of poverty of spirit as the true certificate of admission into God's spiritual kingdom. He who says, "I am rich and increased with goods and have need of nothing, can lay no claim to this divine beatitude. It is they who mourn who have the promise of divine comforting. It is the meek, despised by the great and powerful, who shall inherit the earth. St. Paul gave the key to this seeming paradox when he said to the Corinthian Christians, "All things are yours." To such an one the whole earth is his Father's storehouse. Can he want any good thing? To be meek implies trust. If we have more faith in stocks and bonds and bank accounts than we have in God, it will be unto us according to our faith. Never will the true riches be given to our trust.

2. The Blessing of the Righteous, vs. 6-9. Religion has its active as well as passive side. It is not enough to mourn for sin; we must hunger and thirst after righteousness. And the blessing is that we shall be filled, completely satisfied. When any desire of our hearts becomes so strong that we are willing to make all kinds of sacrifices, to spend and be spent for the beloved object, we are almost absolutely sure to get what we want. Much more is this true in spiritual things. To be pure in heart is no merely negative state; it means a daily watch against all evil imaginings, against everything contrary to the mind of Christ; but it also means an aggressive warfare against everything impure. A Christian who knows that the saloon is a fountain of impurity, sending moral miasma and death over our whole land, yet holds his peace, or votes for the sake of party for men who are secretly in league with it, cannot claim the blessing of the pure in heart. If he knows that Masonry is borrowed from the most licentious rites of the ancient heathen world, and has only dropped enough of its outward indecencies to make it tolerated in a Christian land, yet never utters a syllable of protest, this beatitude is not for him. Nor can the blessing of the peacemakers descend upon those who remain selfishly neutral when neighbors are at feud because "they do not want to be drawn into a fuss." The last act of John Milton's life was to make peace between an offended father and his son. And it was a fitting close of such a life—a life that had been passed in sternest warfare for human liberty and righteous principles.

3. The Blessing of the Persecuted, vs. 10-16. When we drink the cup of persecution for Christ's sake, we not only enter into fellowship with the souls of martyrs and prophets, but we enter into their reward. The only reason why so many Christians, even Christian ministers, are afraid to say anything against a popular evil, is because they do not at heart believe these words of Christ. Many of them know that Masonry is an injury to the church, a corrupter of justice, and anti-Christian throughout. Believing this, it becomes their solemn duty to warn others against this snare of Satan. But they are afraid of the persecution such a radical stand will bring upon them, and so they must forever miss the reward. A halting, compromising Christian is in a far worse situation than an unbeliever. He is like salt that has lost its savor, like a hidden candle that goes out in darkness with never a guiding ray for the wanderer. He can neither save himself nor others.

From Peloubet's Notes.

Prayer, long continued and earnest, is the best preparation for receiving and for teaching divine truth.

Ver. 2 Luther's rule for teachers and preachers, "Get up boldly, open the mouth widely, be done quickly."

The twelve disciples were nearest Jesus. There is a church within the church, and it gathers oftenest at the prayer meeting where Jesus is.

Ver. 3 Christ's "blesseds" are the exact opposite of the world's "blesseds."

The Beatitudes were uttered on a lovely mountain, to show how attractive and blessed they are. The Law was uttered on rugged Sinai, amid thunders and lightnings, to make men afraid to break it.

The laws of the kingdom of heaven, if obeyed on earth, will change earth to heaven.

By obeying these laws we become fitted for heaven. If we disobey, we cannot enter heaven. We are not shut out arbitrarily, but by a character to which heaven is impossible. The choir is shut to those who will not learn to sing.

The Beatitudes are a description of the ideal citizen of Christ's Kingdom, which we should all aim to be.

We need to cherish not one, but all of these virtues, and thus be complete in Christ.

Vers 10-12. Heaven is the reward of those who suffer for Christ on earth. No triumphs without battles, no crowns without crosses, no being glorified with Christ without suffering with him.

Vers 14-16. That light which shines farthest, to the heathen, to the worst sinners, shines brightest at home.

The true Christian's light always glorifies, not himself, but God and his Saviour, for he acknowledges God as the Author of his good deeds.

IN BRIEF.

Though the celebrated experiment of squeezing water through the sides of a gold vessel has been supposed to demonstrate the porosity of all matter, while gases pass through metals much more readily, the recent experiments of an Italian physicist have shown that gases cannot be forced through glass by any available mechanical, chemical, or electrical means. Even a pressure of 1,890 pounds on the square inch had no effect.

About a year since, the news was flashed around the world that the white people, resident in the Upper Congo, had been seized and devoured by a cannibal tribe. Mr Westmark, who has just returned to Europe, after having dwelt for fifteen months among the Bangallas, declares the rumor to have been unfounded, although the tribe with which he lived are in the habit of holding periodical feasts, at which from ten to twenty slaves are served up to their cannibal masters. Mr. Westmark declares the natives themselves are ashamed of the custom, and that cannibalism disappears with the advent of the missionary.

The wealth of France is said to be the result of the economy of the French people. Economy is seldom practiced by the inhabitants of a new country, but it is saving as much as gaining that increases national wealth. Our farmers should bear this in mind. Take one item alone, the bones of animals. How few realize their value. Many cattle's shin bones are shipped to England for the making of knife handles, where they bring $40 per ton. The thigh bones are the most valuable, being worth $80 per ton for cutting into tooth-brush handles. The foreleg bones are worth $30 per ton, and are made into collar buttons, parasol handles and jewelry, though sheep's legs are the staple parasol handles. The water in which the bones are boiled is reduced to glue, and the dust which comes from sawing the bones is fed to cattle.

James Howard Paine, known as "the millionaire tramp," was the grandson of Robert Treat Paine, who signed the Declaration of Independence. He inherited a fortune and greatly increased it by his expert stock speculations. But he was such an object miser that he had all the appearance of a tramp, wearing a tattered camel coat in summer and winter, worn-out shoes without stockings, and trousers which showed his flesh through their holes, and filthy in his person. He would stand half in hand and beg for something to eat, buying an ounce of tea, steeping it in hot water given him at a saloon and eating bits of dry bread with it. And yet he was a man of uncommon intellect, a fluent and graceful talker and accomplished writer, being at one time the most influential musical critic of Boston, and long afterwards consulted and employed by leading papers. He died at 83 from the effect of being run over in the street, refusing either to stay in a hospital or to employ a physician.

Theodore Roosevelt, having just returned from an inspection of his properties in Dakota and elsewhere, has been interviewed by an enterprising reporter. The women on the ranches come from New England and the Middle States. Some have been school-teachers, others boarding-house keepers; and in many cases they are survivors of husbands who broke down in the struggle to start a home in the new country, and the widow has successfully run the new enterprise and become wealthy in land and cattle. Mr. Roosevelt says the women he has seen are an energetic, business-like set, and that conspicuous among the rich women is Mrs. Bishop Hiff Warren, who is worth ten millions of dollars, and made it on cattle, with no assistance other than her mother wit. Another cattle queen he tells of, Mrs. Rogers, of Corpus Christi, Texas, is a fearless rider, and goes over the range as frequently as the ranchmen she employs. She started with a few cattle on a small scale, and has now amassed a million of money and is every day enlarging her enterprises. A rich widow, a Mrs. Massey, of Colorado, went there as an agent of a life insurance company, and married a man owning one hundred and fifty thousand head of cattle. These she inherited from her husband, and is said to carry on the vast business as well as he did. Mrs. Hiff, the widow of the cattle king, and Mrs. Dempsey of Nevada, as well as Ellen Callahan of newspaper fame, are wealthy, and have earned their money, from the first dollar, themselves.

SECRET SOCIETIES CON-
DEMNNED

BY EMINENT EDUCATORS.

PRESIDENT F. H. M. HENDERSON, Bowdon College, Ga.:—I regard all secret societies as extremely liable to be perverted.

PRESIDENT NOAH PORTER, Yale College:—That there are serious evils connected with them cannot be questioned; that they accomplish some good is equally clear.

PRESIDENT HITCHCOCK, Amherst College:—These, at different periods, have been fruitful sources of excitement, jealousy, and heart burning among the students.

JOSEPH MOORE, President Earlham College:—The fact that Freemasonry often thwarts every effort to enforce the law against an offender who is of the fraternity, shows it to be an obstacle to moral and civil progress.

HOWARD CROSBY, D. D., Chancellor University, New York:—Thirty years ago I was a member of a college secret society, and while I had upright fellow-members, and we encouraged literary culture, I found the association was chiefly a temptation to vice.

PROF. J. R. JACQUES, Illinois Wesleyan University:—Among college students, at an age when most susceptible, secret societies tend to breed that secretive disposition which is the very opposite of the truly candid, generous, and magnanimous character.

DR. BREYCHLAG, Professor in the University of Halle:—Never entertain the idea to join the lodge for popularity's sake. It is utterly degrading to imagine pastors, men who have to deal with Christianity, the most universal and open thing in the world, wrapped up in the mummeries of Freemasonry.

PRES. J. BLANCHARD:—There have been civil and ecclesiastical pests ever since there was a government and religion; and Freemasonry is one of those pests. The Gains of humanity have rejected Christ and worshiped nature, and Nimrods have denied justice and practiced oppression. But both are combined in the lodge.

PROF. J. R. W. SLOANE, D. D., Reformed Presbyterian Theological Seminary:—But my strongest opposition to Masonry is because of its rivalry with religion. It steps in before the church, and is a false, an idolatrous religion, a religion without a Saviour and, therefore, a delusion and a snare to all who engage in it, or rest their hope upon it.

PROF. BURT G. WILDER, Cornell University, Ithaca, N. Y.:—I am willing to hazard my position . . . upon the truth of the proposition that secret societies are unknown in heaven, but that they form a prominent and essential feature of life in the other locality. Light versus darkness; openness versus mystery; mutual confidence versus suspicion and distrust.

PROF. S. C. BARTLETT, D. D., Chicago Theological Seminary:—There are certain other wide-spread organizations, such as Freemasonry, which, we suppose, are in their nature hostile to good citizenship and true religion, because they exact initiatory oaths of blind compliance and concealment, incompatible with the claims of equal justice toward man and a good conscience toward God.

PROF. J. G. CARSON, D. D., Xenia, Ohio:—These associations are inconsistent with the genius of Christianity, because the secrecy which they affect, and to which they bind their members by promise or oath, is unnecessary and so unwarrantable, dangerous, and ensnaring to the conscience, and, therefore, utterly opposed to that openness and publicity which Christ enjoins on his disciples both by example and precept.

PRESIDENT C. G. FINNEY, of Oberlin, 1858:—"We have, then, the implied testimony of Freemasons themselves, that the Christian church ought to have no fellowship with Freemasonry as thus revealed, and that those who adhere intelligently and tenderly to such an institution have no right to be in the Christian church. In our judgment we are forced to the same conclusion, we cannot escape from it, we wish it were otherwise, we therefore sorrowfully but solemnly pronounce this judgment."

THE CHURCHES VS. LODGERS.

The following denominations are committed by vote of their legislative assemblies or by constitution to a separation from secret lodge worship:

Adventists (Seventh-day).
Baptists—Primitive, Seventh-day and Scandinavian.

Brethren (Dunkers or German Baptists).

Christian Reformed Church.
Church of God (Northern Indiana Eldership).

Congregational—The State Associations of Illinois and Iowa have adopted resolutions against the lodge.

Disciples (in part).

Lutherans—Norwegian, Danish, Swedish and Synodical Conferences.

Mennonites.

Methodists—Free and Wesleyan.

Methodist Protestant (Minnesota Conference).

Moravians.

Plymouth Brethren.

Presbyterian—Associate, Reformed and United.

Reformed Church (Holland Branch).

United Brethren in Christ.

Individual churches in some of these denominations should be excepted, in part of them even a considerable portion.

The following local churches have, as a pledge to disfellowship and oppose lodge worship, given their names to the following list as

THE ASSOCIATED CHURCHES OF CHRIST.

New Ruhamah Cong. Hamilton, Miss.
Pleasant Ridge Cong. Sandford Co. Ala.
New Hope Methodist, Lowndes Co., Miss.
Congregational, College Springs, Iowa.
College Church of Christ, Wheaton, Ill.

EDITORS.

HENRY L. KELLOGG.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, AUGUST 4, 1887.

We see by the American that Mr. and Mrs. Johnston, late of the Western Crank, have arrived at Washington to take their posts on that paper. This move of Prof. Bailey seems to us full of good auguries, and we expect the happiest results by this union of forces.

MR. PETER HOWE has sent his check for $4,500 to Rev. Byron Gunner of New Iberia, La., to begin a Howe University only eight miles from the Gulf of Mexico on the route to Texas, Mexico and the Central American States. The large Central Congregational church in New Orleans has been engaged for a National meeting of the N. C. A. voted at its annual meeting last June. And Secretary Stoddard is corresponding with brethren Conant, Pratt and Kimball to arrange for meetings in Vermont, New Hampshire, Massachusetts and Connecticut. The skies surely brighten and there is great encouragement to pray for the United States as Knox prayed for Scotland.

THE N. Y. INDEPENDENT, which, under Tilton and Oliver Johnson, ceased for a time to be a religious paper, seems to be recovering its tone as when Joshua Leavitt was in its office and Dr. Bacon stood beside him. Mr. Bowen asked Prof. Egbert C. Smyth, in a confidential letter, to give the Independent the texts of Scripture which he regards as proof-texts of the Andover "New Departure." Instead of this, Prof. Smyth offered to procure another writer, to whom he showed Mr. Bowen's "confidential" letter, to write five columns of "Biblical Reasons" in support of the Andover vagaries. This, of course, was declined; and Prof. Smyth, "walking in craftiness" and "his senseless" "departure," is reproved in a tone reminding us of Mr. Bowen's reply to the slaveholders' threat to boycott his business when he was but a young man. "Our goods," said he, "are for sale, but not our principles."

MISS WILLARD AND SECRET LODGES.—The Union Signal misapprehends the Cynosure. We do not complain of personal grievances, but do object:

1. To Miss Willard's advising prohibition speakers, by private circulars, to join secret lodges.
2. We object to her giving half a day to lauding Knights of Labor and allowing twenty minutes to the advocates of open organizations.
3. We object to her calling the concealment of lodge meetings "a little secrecy."
4. We object that the Knights require absolute obedience, and the Good Templars life-long concealment. What can be worse?
5. We object that these swarming lodges were made by Masons, modeled by Masons, and are upheld by Masons.
6. And that they all trample on the example, and set aside the person of Christ.

WASHINGTON, SECRET SOCIETIES, AND THE WHISKY REBELLION.

Poverty and taxation produced the Shay's insurrection in Massachusetts, and like disturbances in Maine and New Hampshire in the autumn of 1786. They were quelled in the following winter by Gen. Lincoln with a few killed and fourteen sentenced to death, but pardoned.

These outbreaks convinced the people that thirteen separated States were not a government; and indirectly they produced our Constitution and made George Washington President of the United States March 4, 1789.

In a few years (1793) arose the whisky rebellion in Western Pennsylvania, against paying the government tax on whisky. The insurrectionary district contained 16,000 able-bodied men, and would, it was supposed, bring 7,000 into the field against the government. Washington called on Pennsylvania, Maryland and Virginia for twelve thousand militia, who suppressed the rebellion at a cost voted by Congress of one million, one hundred thousand dollars. This formidable uprising was instigated and led by secret lodges which called themselves "Democratic Societies," which societies had so penetrated Congress with their malign influence, as to strike out of its reply to Washington's Address any approbation of Washington's censure of those "organized assemblies of factious individuals." (See Marshall's Life of Washington, pp. 352-3.)

When our Constitution went into effect (1789), France had been a seething caldron for forty years. A Masonic writer, Emanuel Rebold, whose history is dedicated to all the lodges in Europe and America, says:

"Baron Ramsay came to France in 1728, having failed to organize a new Masonry in London in the interest of the Stuarts, he addressed himself to a like work in France."—Rebold, His., p. 213.

An apostate Scotch Presbyterian, he enlisted the Jesuits in his attempt to re-subjugate England to the Pope of Rome.

"With this knowledge of the human heart, the Jesuits brought into this system a series of degrees, to engage the curiosity of the neophyte, and assure themselves of his unlimited obedience."—Rebold, p. 218.

These Jesuit lodges took the revolutionary names of Jacobin Clubs, from the old convent of the Jacobins where they first met: and the annals of crime do not contain their equals for secrecy, villainy, cruelty and crime. The great French Revolution opened in the year of our Constitution, and was popular with Americans, especially because France had aided us against England. But the Jesuit or Jacobin lodges spoiled all. In four years, they murdered their king (January, 1793) and then turned to killing each other till they made France a human slaughter-house. Becoming intolerable to themselves, "their meetings were prohibited," (Marshall II., 353), and Judge Marshall says: "The death of the Jacobin Jesuit lodges was the signal for the death of the 'Democratic Societies,'"—lodges, by another name.

It is these secret Democratic societies to which Washington alludes thus in his Farewell Address:

"They are likely to become potent engines by which cunning, ambitious, and unprincipled men will be enabled to subvert the power of the people."

And again:

"Where is the security for property, for reputation, for life, if the sense of religious obligation desert the oaths which are the instruments of investigation in courts of justice?"

In this he must have alluded to Masonic oaths drowning and destroying the sanctity of the civil oath. He had refused to be President of the Cincinnati; and by his advice the "organization of a permanent order by taking in the 'Sons of Veterans,' was made impossible."

To claim such a man as a Mason is impiety and falsehood. Secret lodges opposed and traduced Washington; and taxed the American people in their penury, while he was President, more than a million dollars by a single whisky insurrection.

WHAT SHALL I DO?

A sister, Mrs. Aaron Lewis, who left the Methodist Episcopal to join the United Brethren church, wants advice. She writes:

"Is it Satan who tells me it is wrong for me to support our ministers? They say they are not allowed to read the church discipline as formerly till this question (of secrecy) is decided. I cannot understand how people can be prepared to vote while kept in the dark: and now members are taken into the church without anything being said on the subject of secrecy. I want to know my duty and do it. * * * I expect to leave the Brethren church, as my views of oath-bound secrecy are not changed; but must I wait a year or two longer?"

ANSWER.

Dr. Davis, of the Dayton Seminary, wrote us years ago, "One thing is certain, I shall not live and die in church fellowship with secret societies." This sentiment of the good and sound-minded Dr. Davis has God, good men and the Bible on its side, and will yet prevail. The party which now holds the Book-Room of the United Brethren, and the funds with it, will do all that Satan, the god of the lodge, asks, viz., to be let alone. If the Conservator people can gain a steady, strong majority in General Conference, they may save the church for Christ; if not, the lodge-god will control it, and the anti-secrecy United Brethren could join with the Wesleyans and Free Methodists, and if one large, bold body of Christians could be formed who will expel the lodge-worshippers of Satan, the land could be cleaned of their foul idolatries.

Meantime individual Christians must do the best they can, while the fight is going on. A United Brethren minister, who takes in Masons, Odd-fellows, etc., and will not read his discipline till he sees which party whips, the lodge or its opponents, is not fit to fill a pulpit for Christ. But if he preaches the atonement, and good men and women pray, the Holy Spirit will attend the meetings, as he did Christ's meetings when Judas was one of his apostles. Christ went to the synagogues where such preachers presided, but when new churches were formed, excluding the "cup" and "table of devils," Christians went to the new churches, and the Jewish church and nation went down in blood. May God save our nation from a like doom.

TO THE MEMORY OF A GODLY FATHER.

Mr. Albert B. Kellogg, father of the assistant editor of the Cynosure, whose death was noticed last week, had almost completed his 88th year. He was a man of rare excellence, and his quiet faith and consistent life have been, and will continue to be, a blessing to children and children's children.

He was born Oct. 22, 1799, in Sheffield, Massachusetts, where his early years were spent. Canaan, Connecticut, was his home when he came to manhood, then White Pigeon, Michigan, and from 1850, Wethersfield, Illinois. Of his ten children he lived to see all received into the Christian church, and the center of happy homes, and but one has gone before him to the presence of God. He accepted eternal life through Jesus Christ at the age of seventeen, uniting with the Congregational church under the pastoral care of Rev. Mr. Bradford. Of the instructions of this excellent man he ever spoke with fervor; they evidently made a deep impression upon his mind, and had a strong influence in the formation of his character.

In the places of his earlier sojourn he is yet remembered for his activity and usefulness in the church and community. This was in part because of his musical talent which was excellent and of early development. At the age of sixteen he was chosen leader of the large choir in his village church; and among his eminent teachers and models in this art were Lowell Mason and Thomas Hastings, the first names in the history of American church music. Until after fifty years of age he gave much time to public musical instruction.

He was a loyal and true American, and while rejoicing in the material progress of the country, and none were more thankful for the favor of God upon our people, yet he keenly felt the dangers that have threatened and yet impend over the nation, especially from slavery and the lodge. His Christian life was consistent and humble and always active in sustaining the holy work of the church. The cause of missions and of all Christian reforms ever had his earnest support; and among the instances of his devotion it is remembered that he secured for the Society of Missionary Inquiry in Wheaton College a full set of Bidwell's large missionary maps as a help to the missionary training of Christian young men and women.

His disease was paralysis. From two shocks, years ago, he had in great degree recovered; the final stroke left him four days of helpless, but painless existence. Though utterance was impossible, and he could not answer the loving inquiries of his family who were bending over him, his motions were understood and they reached him the Bible. He kissed the Book as his one answer to all they desired most to know. His children, though some of them are grown old, hold among their first recollections the altar of household prayer, where as priest appointed of God their father daily ministered, and allowed nothing to prevent the holy hour. They can never forget the old family Bible and the father's voice, which pleaded a better sacrifice than Job's for their transgressions, and led them in this family worship in the first steps of the life toward God.

—Rev. W. T. Ellis of the Fire and Hammer, a near neighbor of the Cynosure, has closed his office here and removed to Los Angeles, California, where he will renew publication and engage in Gospel labor in connection with the independent holiness movement. Bro. Ellis is an earnest reformer, and can give and take hard blows. We shall follow his work with interest and pray that he may be a powerful defender of the faith once delivered to the saints in his new field.

—Our readers are to be congratulated in the promise of a new contributor who writes on papacy and the lodge on the first page this week. "Old American" is a talented and experienced writer, for some time on the editorial staff of one of our oldest Chicago dailies, and still a valued contributor to its columns as well as to one or more of our religious weeklies.

—The able and scholarly address of Bishop Milton Wright at the Christian Congress in March is first printed in this number of the Cynosure. It will be read with interest, and should be republished widely. Rev. C. F. Hawley's address will follow soon, and Pres. C. A. Blanchard's, which though once published in the Christian Worker, we shall endeavor to reprint in answer to several urgent calls.

—Mr. N. Matson, for years at the head of the largest jewelry house in Chicago, died last week, lamented by all who knew him. Though a capable and successful business man, his manners were affable and agreeable yet not without a true dignity.

The kindness of his heart and liberal nature prompted him to many acts of private benevolence. Though taking no active part in our reform he was in sympathy with it and once told one of the Cynosure editors that he had lost by Freemasonry more money than by any other single agency.

—We learn indirectly that Bro. I. R. B. Arnold pitched his tent in Lena, Illinois, and before the five evenings were over had 900 people crowding within it or listening outside. Later he was at another point farther on and the crowds pressing to hear. At last report he was at Monroe, Wisconsin. He promises if possible to attend the Illinois State meeting which will probably be held in Belvedere in about eight weeks.

—Later word from Bro. Arnold tells of an audience of over 1,000 at Monroe, and among them old friends of the reform who remember the preaching of Rev. A. J. Bailey, now at Ogden, Utah, and Bro. Bancroft, now in Iowa. Many of these came up and grasped Bro. Arnold's hand with joy and thanksgiving for his clear and interesting exposition of the lodge religion. So may this tabernacle move on guided by pillar of cloud and fire to bless the people and overthrow their idolatries.

—Pres. C. A. Blanchard went last week to Washington under instruction from the National Board, to see if the original purpose in the purchase of the Washington building cannot be more effectually carried out in establishing there a headquarters for that part of the Union. He will propose to Bro. Bailey, now that the American has the assistance of Bro. Johnston and his wife, to enter entirely into the reform work with the support of the N. C. A.

—Elder J. F. Browne is finding a place of usefulness in connection with Berea College as secretary of the Board of Trustees. We believe he is also engaged part of the time as an instructor. He has built him a home in Berea, which has a look of permanence. His offer to lecture on our reform for two months in the year in Tennessee and Kentucky, we have no doubt will be heard by the N. C. A. Board with great satisfaction, and that he will be immediately sent out into a needy region.

—Miss E. E. Flagg, author of "Between Two Opinions," lately visited the sea-side, but the effect was quite contrary to her hopes, and resulted in sickness which unfitted her for a time for her accustomed labors. Our readers missed her excellent Sabbath-school notes for two weeks, and will welcome them in the present number as well as her contribution on the second page. We were pleased to note a very hearty commendation of these notes from Bro. J. A. Conant in the Wesleyan Methodist, recommending that they be republished for the use of the Wesleyan Sabbath-schools. The suggestion is a good one, and we shall cordially aid in securing such a wide and useful circulation for them.

—Miss Sarah A. Farley, who visited Chicago early in the summer to secure aid for the colored school in New Iberia, Louisiana, returned with the satisfaction of knowing that her trying experiences here were not in vain. On her return by way of Weno-na, Ill., Mr. Howe of that place, whose generosity not a few Christian enterprises in this and foreign lands may bless, engaged to purchase the building desired for the school, and hold it for that use, allowing the New Iberia Association to pay for it as soon as possible. The Association need funds to get the building in order, and donations sent to Rev. Byron Gunner, New Iberia, La., will be faithfully applied to this object. A few large photographs of the building have been left at this office for sale at $1.00 each, the money to go to the school.

—Rev. T. B. Arnold, the publisher of the Free Methodist, has for several years been undertaking a private philanthropy in picking up poor boys and caring for them until a permanent home could be found. A Mr. Ferguson had a 13-year old son who had outgrown all home restraint. He brought him to Bro. Arnold, much as the Jewish father came to the disciples. The boy was thoroughly bad and uncontrollable. Running away and stealing were his ordinary pastimes. At last a light chain was put on him to keep him in. He was well cared for and his lying tongue could prove nothing except the confinement. But he broke loose and the devil, his master, set all the papers howling about the boy with a chain. Bro. Arnold was put under arrest, but when the trial came off last week there was none to bring accusation against him, and the justice dismissed him as guiltless of any malicious intent, though he could not approve his methods altogether. This case has been very widely advertised, but as a lie will travel from Maine to Georgia while the truth is getting on its boots, we fear the correct statement of the matter and the vindication of Bro. Arnold will be too slowly circulated.

OUR BOSTON LETTER.

THE BOSTON ANTI-SECRET SOCIETY.

"How does your Anti-secrecy Society prosper?" said a 33° Mason.

For the moment, perhaps, I was never before so ashamed to admit the truth—that the Boston Anti-secrecy organization was a failure. Nevertheless, it was an honest question and demanded an honest reply. Were the circumstances different I would have courted such a question, but now, could I have done so honorably, I would have evaded it. Why? Because it was an acknowledgment to an arch-enemy of the complete and inexcusable failure of anti-secrecy work in this city.

Every anti-secretist will sadly regret that the great cause should suffer defeat at so important a point as Boston. Yet it is so: the effort here to successfully continue the work which was organized a few years ago under very favorable prospects is now only a thing of the past. There is no good reason why the work should prove a failure. A bad reason is that the virtual dissolution of this society is owing to the downright inertness and negligence of its membership.

Some one may say I ought not mention the matter so publicly. I would refer such to the motto which has so long had a conspicuous place under the title of the Cynosure: "In secret have I said nothing." Others may think I ought to spare the feelings of those interested. I can best excuse myself in the words of Paul to the Corinthian church: "Though I made you sorry by a letter I do not repent, though I did repent, for I perceive that the same epistle hath made you sorry, though it were but for a season. Now I rejoice, not that ye were made sorry, but that ye sorrowed to repentance; for ye were made sorry after a godly manner, that ye might receive damage by us in nothing."

My earnest prayer is that the effect of this epistle may be that the members of our collapsed society may "sorrow unto repentance."

The Boston society was organized in the spring of 1885 in the Chambers Street Presbyterian church. The then earnest advocates of the cause, in a cosy little room freely offered by the church, met and organized the Boston Anti-secrecy Society. A constitution and by-laws were adopted and officers were duly elected as follows: President, W. E. Mace; Vice-president, D. P. Mathews; Treasurer, a young Scotchman whose name I cannot fully recall; Secretary and Librarian, William Brown. Remarks were made by Rev. David McFall, W. E. Mace, Mrs. M. E. R. Jones and others.

It was a good beginning, but alas, what an ending. As I have intimated, the prospects of the little society were very favorable. The Cynosure offered a helping hand in supplying books and tracts; indeed, the inception of the project may be traced directly to the Cynosure people. The Chambers Street Presbyterian society also offered the use of a nicely furnished room in the church, heated and lighted, with the services of a janitor, gratuitously, for which kindness the friends of the cause will extend hearty thanks.

At first the meetings, which were held once every month, were well attended, but gradually the attendance dwindled to one member and the janitor, and finally to the last named individual alone. I am glad to state that there was no trouble of any kind existing in the society. It died gradually, by inches, as it were. The members simply absented themselves, one by one. How long the poor janitor continued to heat and light the room, I must confess I am ashamed to ascertain.

Since there was no internal strife nor division of any kind, it is not possible that, sphinx-like, this half-dead organization may be resuscitated? Let every friend of the cause pray that this society at this very important point may be reanimated.

OUR CINCINNATI LETTER.

CINCINNATI, O., July 27, 1887.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—There was once a great rebellion in England. An army was mustered and marched to London and encamped before the city. But they had no leader whom they would trust and follow in making the assault. Days were spent in fruitless wrangling. The king heard of the situation and, unarmed and unattended, he came out and entered the camp and offered himself as their commander. The old spirit of loyalty returned and the cry arose from every quarter, "God save the king." They were won forever. The fathers set up the kingdom of the Messiah in this land. But his enemies have stirred up a rebellion. The divisions in the field are, Romanism, 7,000,000 strong; the liquor traffic, 1,000,000; Mormonism, 150,000; anarchism, 200,000, etc. But they have no common leader whom they will trust and follow. They can not unite in making the assault. By and by the King of kings will appear in their midst and call upon them to honor him. Then the backbone of the rebellion will be broken and one shout will be raised, "Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord."

The reception at the Champion City Prohibition Camp Meeting last Thursday was all I could ask. They listened for over an hour with the closest attention and cheered as though they regarded our reform as underlying their own. The chairman, R. S. Thompson, president of the New Era Company, said: "The National Reform Association is composed of ministers, presidents and professors of colleges and the best Christians in the land. So you understand they are not brewers. They are opposed to the breweries and distilleries and so are we. I am glad to welcome their representative on this platform." After my address he said, "I wish to make one correction. We have only nine commandments in Ohio. Our legislature voted out the Fourth."

At the close Mr. King said to me: "You are beginning at the right end of the work. There is daylight in your proposal. It's the first time I've seen daylight in this movement." Straws show the current.

Sabbath morning I preached in the Third Presbyterian church. In the evening I preached on the Dominion of Christ in Grace M. E. church, Newport, Ky., Rev. J. D. Walsh, pastor. This is the largest Protestant, English-speaking congregation in the place. There was a large and appreciative audience. Bro. Walsh gave me a hearty endorsement at the close. In last week's letter the six lines at the bottom of page 5, first column, are quoted from Josiah Strong, a fact overlooked in taking off the copy to the printed page.

KNIGHTS OF LABOR FAILING.

We should be glad to see the workmen of America organized into a society on a Christian basis, pledged against the rum traffic, and without secrecy. Time and again we have urged the value of organization on such a basis, and the necessity of such a basis to the permanence of a labor organization. The Knights of Labor are now finding out the truth of this statement. It is openly admitted that the order is falling off in membership at a tremendous rate. Here in New York it is true, and it is true elsewhere. * * * Among other reasons the principal one is that the un-American, un-Christian methods of a secret lodge can never be made the fit agency for the successful prosecution of true reform. This fact we believe is appreciated by the sound sense of these hundreds of thousands of workmen; and reason, aided, we trust, by religion, is asserting its power against the system.

We believe the laboring men of America will one day be effectually united, but it will not be until they are ready to unite on an entirely different basis than the present one of the Knights of Labor.—Christian Nation.

Public attention has been directed for several years to the outrages committed by labor lodges against persons and property. These lodges propose in their secret conclaves to set the price not only of their own labor but that of other men. If anyone wishes to work for a less price than they demand, they propose to prevent him, and if necessary, take his life. Millions of property have been destroyed, many persons maimed and a few killed. What is the remedy? Prohibit secret lodge meetings by law. Of course, the law must be general. It would be absurd to permit rich men to meet with tiled doors and forbid the same privilege to the poor. All organized secrecy is dangerous to the general public and should be prohibited by a plain statute with suitable penalties. The lodge and the saloon are twin evils, and should be buried in a common grave. Then the land would have rest, and prosperity be possible.—Christian Witness.

—Carefully-gathered statistics show that over ten and a quarter millions of dollars were contributed for missions during the past year by the evangelical churches in this country and Europe.

—Referring to family worship, Matthew Henry, in his Commentary on the Bible, says: "He does well who with his house prays night and morning; he does better who prays and reads the Scriptures; but he does best who prays and reads and sings."

THE HOME.

THE PERFECT DEATH.

Where shall we learn to die?
Go, gaze with steadfast eye
On dark Gethsemane,
Or darker Calvary,
Where, thro' each lingering hour,
The Lord of grace and power,
Most lowly and most High,
Has taught the Christian how to die.

When in the olive shade,
His long last prayer he prayed;
When, on the Cross, to Heaven
His parting spirit was given,
He showed that to fulfill The Father's gracious Will,
Not asking how or why,
Alone prepares the soul to die.

No word of angry strife,
No anxious cry for life,
By scoff and torture torn
He speaks not scorn for scorn;
Calmly forgiving those Who deem themselves his foes,
In silent majesty
He points the way in peace to die.

Delighted to the last
In memories of the past;
Glad at the parting meal
In lowly task to kneel;
Still yearning to the end
For mother and for friend;
His great humility
Loves in such acts of love to die.

Beyond His depth of woes
A wider thought arose,
Along His path of gloom
Thought for his country's doom,
A thwart all pains and grief,
Thought for the contrite thief—
The far-stretched sympathy
Lives on, when all beside shall die.

Bereft, but not alone,
The world is still his own;
The realm of deathless truth
Still breathes immortal youth;
Sure, though in shudd'ring dread,
That all is finished,
With purpose fixed on high
The friend of all mankind must die.

O! by those weary hours
Of slowly ebbing powers,
By those deep lessons heard
In each expiring word;
By that unfailing love
Lifting the soul above,
When our last end is nigh,
O teach us, Lord, with Thee to die!

—Dean Stanley, in Macmillan's Magazine.

"THEY SHALL WALK WITH ME IN WHITE."

It is related that a young merchant from the West spent the Lord's day in New York city, and by invitation attended church with Mr. S—, a well-known and influential Christian man. The next day, while transacting business with a merchant, he expressed some surprise at the confidence he manifested in him, as a stranger, when he replied:

"Did I not see you in Mr. S—'s pew?"

"Yes, sir."

"Well, I am not afraid to trust any man who sits in Mr. S—'s pew."

There is a story of a young man who, having some financial scheme which required a large amount of capital, called upon a very wealthy banker, and sought to interest him in the enterprise. He declined to advance the funds that were needed for the undertaking, but promised to put him in a way to get them; and so taking his arm he walked with him once or twice up and down the exchange, conversing with him as they went along. When they returned, he told him he could go among the bankers and get what he wanted. The young man found that the statement was true. The very fact of his being seen walking up and down with that wealthy man gave him all the credit he required.

It is thus when men walk with men. The world is quick to see, and draw inference from, our associations. But what must it be for a man to walk with God? What do the angels say when they see a weak, helpless, sinful, fallen mortal taken into fellowship with their Master, and walking with him along earth's desert way? So Enoch walked with God three hundred years. Men knew him as one who lived a hidden, secret life, whose mystery they could not penetrate; the demons of darkness knew him as one clothed in armor which they could not pierce, and defended by one into whose presence they dared not intrude; but the angels knew him as a man who walked with God, and were not surprised when at last "he was not, for God took him."

To such fellowship and intimacy as this, Christians are called. We are invited to draw nigh to God, and to have fellowship with him, to maintain such intimacy that the world shall know that we have been with Jesus.—The Christian.

THE HEAVENLY HOME.

Rev. H. Bonar, D. D., sets forth the "great city, the holy Jerusalem," (Rev. 21:10) the blessed and eternal home of all who love Jesus, in the following interesting way:—

1. It is a great city. "That great city," said John, gazing on it. Its circuit is vast—beyond Babylon or Nineveh, Paris or London. That "mighty city," says John, speaking of Babylon the great (Rev. 18:10), but this is mightier far. There has been no city like it. It is the city, the one city, the great metropolis of the mighty universe, the mighty city of the mighty God.

2. It is a well built city. Its "builder and maker is God." Its foundations are eternal; its walls are jasper; its gates, pearls; its streets paved with gold. It is "compactly built together," lying four-square, and perfect in all its parts, without a break, or flaw, or weakness, or deformity.

3. It is a well lighted city. Something brighter than sun or moon is given to fill its heaven. The glory of God lightens it. The Lamb is its "light," or "lamp," so that it needs no candle, no sunlight. There is no night there.

4. It is a well watered city. A pure river of water of life flows through its streets, proceeding from the throne of God and the Lamb. What must its waters be! What must be the rivers of pleasure there? Who in it can ever thirst? Its inhabitants shall thirst no more.

5. It is a well provisioned city. The tree of life is there, with its twelve manner of fruits and its health-giving leaves. It has more than Eden had; it is paradise restored,—paradise and Jerusalem in one; Jerusalem in paradise, and paradise in Jerusalem.

6. It is a well guarded city. Not only has it gates and walls and towers which no enemy can scale or force, but at the gates are twelve angels, keeping perpetual watch.

7. It is a well governed city. Its king is the Son of God; the King of kings, Immanuel, the king eternal, whose sceptre is righteousness; who loveth righteousness, and hateth iniquity. No misrule is there, no disorder, no lawlessness.

8. It is a well peopled city. It has gathered within its walls all generations of the redeemed. Its population is as the sands or the stars—the multitude that no man can number—the millions of the risen and glorified.

9. It is a holy city. Its origin is heavenly, and it is as perfect as its builder. Nothing that defileth shall enter—no spot, or speck, or shadow of evil. All is perfection there, divine perfection.

10. It is a glorious city. The glory that fills it and encircles it is the glory of God. All precious stones are there; no marble or granite, such as we boast of now. All about is gold and pearls and gems. Everything resplendent is there.

11. It is a blessed city. It is truly the joyous city. It is the throne and seat of the Blessed One, and all in it is like him. Its name is Jerusalem, the City of Peace; its king's name is Solomon, the Prince of Peace. There is no enemy there, no danger, no sickness, no curse, no death, no weeping, no pain, no sorrow, no change forever. They that dwell in it "shall hunger no more, neither thirst any more" (Rev. 7:16, 17); for the ransomed of the Lord shall return, and come to it with songs; and sorrow and sighing shall flee away. Isa. 35:10. Blessed city! city of peace, and love, and song! fit accompaniment of the new heavens; fit metropolis of the new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness! How eagerly should we look for it! How worthy of it should we live!

CONVERSIONS THROUGH FAMILY WORSHIP.

In his Fireside, Mr. Abbott tells us of a gay young lady who paid a visit of a week in the family of a minister, an eminently holy man. His fervent intercessions for his children and the other inmates of his dwelling went to this thoughtless heart: they were the Spirit's arrow, and upon that family altar his visitor was enabled to present herself a living sacrifice to God.

It is with the church in the house as with the church in the village. The wayfarer may get a word in passing which he never can forget. The stranger that turns aside to tarry for a night may hear at your family worship the word that will save his soul.

Some years ago, an Irish wanderer, his wife, and his sister, asked a night's shelter in the cabin of a pious school-master. With the characteristic hospitality of his nation, the school-master made them welcome. It was his hour for evening worship, and when the strangers were seated, he began by reading slowly and solemnly the second chapter of the Epistle to the Ephesians. The young man sat astonished. The expressions, "Dead in trespasses and sins," "Children of wrath," "Walking after the course of this world," were new to him. He sought an explanation. He was told that this is God's account of the state of man by nature. He felt that it was exactly his own state. "In this way I have walked from my childhood. In the service of the God of this world we have come to your house."

He was on the way to a fair, where he intended to pass a quantity of counterfeit money. But God's Word had found him out. He produced his store of coin, and begged his host to cast it into the fire; and asked anxiously if he could not obtain the Word of God for himself. His request was complied with, and next morning, with the new treasure, the party, who had now no errand to the fair, returned to their own home. But I cannot enumerate all the conversions which have occurred at the Church in the House. Children have often heard there truths which, when the Spirit brought them to remembrance in after days—perhaps in days of profligacy, and when far from their father's house—have sent home the prodigal. It is not only of Zion's solemn assemblies, but of Jacob's humble dwellings—the little fireside sanctuaries—"that the Lord shall count when he writeth up the people, This man was born there." In your house there have been, perhaps, several spirits born into this world. Have there been any born again?—Rev. Dr. Hamilton.

A TRUE STORY OF FLORENCE NIGHTINGALE.

When the celebrated philanthropist, Florence Nightingale, was a little girl and living in Derbyshire, England, everybody was struck with her thoughtfulness for people and animals. She even made friends with the shy squirrels. When persons were ill she would nurse them, saving nice things from her own meals for them.

There lived near the village an old shepherd named Roger, who had a favorite sheep dog called Cap. This dog was the old man's only companion, and helped in looking after the flock by day and kept him company at night. Cap was a very sensible dog, and kept the sheep in such good order that he saved his master a deal of trouble.

One day Florence was riding out with a friend, and saw the shepherd giving the sheep their night feed; but Cap was not there, and the sheep knew it, for they were scampering about in all directions. Florence and her friend stopped to ask Roger why he was so sad, and what had become of his dog.

"Oh," he said, "Cap will never be of any more use to me; I'll have to hang him, poor fellow, as soon as I go home to-night."

"Hang him!" said Florence, "Oh, Roger! how wicked of you! What has poor old Cap done?"

"He has done nothing," replied Roger, "but he will never be of any more use to me, and I cannot afford to keep him. One of the mischievous school-boys threw a stone at him yesterday and broke one of his legs." And the old shepherd wiped away the tears which filled his eyes. "Poor Cap," he said, "he was as knowing as a human being."

"But are sure his leg is broken?" asked Florence. "Oh! yes, miss, it is broken, sure enough; he has not put his foot to the ground since."

Then Florence and her friend rode on. "We will go and see poor Cap," said the gentleman. "I don't believe the leg is really broken. It would take a big stone and a hard blow to break the leg of a great dog like Cap."

"Oh, if you could but cure him, how glad Roger would be!" exclaimed Florence.

When they got to the cottage the poor dog lay there on the bare brick floor, his hair disheveled and his eyes sparkling with anger at the intruders. But when the little girl called him "poor Cap" he grew pacified, and began to wag his short tail; then he crept from under the table and lay down at her feet. She took hold of one of his paws, patted his his rough head, and talked to him while the gentleman examined the injured leg. It was badly swollen, and hurt him very much to have it examined; but the dog knew it was meant kindly, and though he moaned and winced with pain, he licked the hands that were hurting him.

"It's only a bad bruise; no bones are broken," said the gentleman; "rest is all that Cap needs; he will soon be well again."

"I am so glad!" exclaimed Florence. "But can we do nothing for him? He seems in such pain."

"Plenty of hot water to foment the part would both ease and help to cure him."

"Well, then, said the little girl, "I will foment poor Cap's leg."

Florence lighted the fire, tore up an old flannel petticoat into strips, which she wrung out in hot water and laid on the poor dog's bruise. It was not long before he began to feel the benefit of the application, and to show his gratitude in looks and wagging his tail. On their way home they met the old shepherd coming slowly along with a piece of rope in his hands.

"Oh, Roger!" cried Florence, "you are not to hang poor old Cap. We have found that his leg is not broken after all."

"No, he will serve you yet," said the gentleman.

"Well, I am most glad to hear it," said the old man, "and many thanks to you for going to see him."

The next morning Florence was up early to bathe Cap. On visiting the dog she found the swelling much gone down. She bathed it again, and Cap was as grateful as before.

Two or three days later, when Florence and her friend were riding together, they came up to Roger and his sheep. Cap was there, too, watching the sheep. When he heard the voice of the little girl his tail wagged and his eyes sparkled.

"Do look at the dog, miss," said the shepherd, "he's so pleased to hear your voice. But for you I would have hanged the best dog I ever had in my life."

This is quite a true story. It happened many years ago, and is now told with pleasure of that lady who, in later years, grew up to be the kind, brave woman who nursed so many soldiers through the Crimean war, and has done so many other things for the poor and suffering wherever she could.

BE KIND TO EVERYTHING.

Softly, softly, little sister,
Touch those gaily-painted wings;
Butterflies and moths, remember,
Are such very tender things.

Softly, softly, little sister,
Twirl you limber, hazel twig;
Little hands may harm a nestling
Thoughtlessly as well as big.

Gently stroke the purring pussy,
Kindly pat the friendly dog;
Let your unmolested mercy
Even spare the toad or frog.

Wide is God's great world around you—
Let the harmless creatures live;
Do not mar their brief enjoyment,
Take not what you cannot give. —Selected.

THE DOG'S EXAMPLE.

Johnnie was a very careless little boy. He was always losing his playthings and books, tearing his clothes, forgetting errands, and making himself and everyone else a great deal of trouble. He had a habit of doing things he ought not to do, and of going into places where he ought not to go. He never meant to be naughty; but he didn't take time to think, and sometimes his poor mamma almost lost patience with him.

"O Johnnie, Johnnie," she would say, "just look at your feet, all covered with mud! See how you have spoiled my nice clean floor!"

Johnnie looked very sorry. "O, mamma, I didn't mean to, but I didn't think," he said, eagerly.

Mamma shook her head. "That is what you always say, Johnnie; and yet almost every day my floor is tracked by your dirty feet. I am almost afraid to take you with me to visit Aunt Jane."

"O, mamma, do let me go! I will be very careful—indeed, indeed I will," Johnnie promised earnestly.

"Well, I will try you this time," said mamma; "but remember, Johnnie, that, if you do not cure yourself of this bad habit, Aunt Jane will not be likely to invite you again."

Johnnie promised once more to be careful, and he really meant to keep his word; but alas, the very first day of his visit he "forgot" again, and Aunt Jane's pretty carpet was almost ruined by his muddy shoes.

"You will have to take lessons of my dog," replied his aunt. "Major is not handsome, but I am afraid he must be smarter and better behaved than you are in some things. When he first came to live with me, he used to come to the house with dirty paws; but every time he did so, I took a pan of water out on the steps, and washed them before allowing him to come in. He soon learned to be careful and never gives me trouble now. I often see him go out of his way to cross the street on the cross-walk instead of going through the mud."

Major pricked up his ears and wagged his tail at this praise, but Johnnie hung his head for very shame. At last he stooped down and patted the dog's head.

"Well, old Major, you needn't think I'm going to be beaten by you," he said; and from that time mamma was never again troubled by his dirty shoes. —Children's Paper.

LITTLE CHINESE STUDENTS.

In these schools there are no classes. Each one studies separately, and as every one endeavors to raise his voice above the others, you can imagine what a perfect Babel is produced.

They recite standing with their backs toward the teacher. The first lessons are a single word, on little bits of red paper, strapped to a thin board. These papers are changed daily until the little learner has mastered a thousand or more. I noticed one little fellow who had but two of these words: one was "tsu" and the other "dzu." I mean that is the way they would be spelled in our language. He caught the sound properly from the teacher, and went back all the way repeating "tsu," "dzu," "tsu," "dzu;" but, poor child, the seat was so high that somehow he dropped the lower bit of paper, and replacing it on the top, he went on as before, saying "tsu," "dzu," "tsu," "dzu;" but pointing to the wrong characters. After a while one of the boys set him right again. There was no fixed time for beginning the school, and they were dismissed with reference to the distance they had to go. Each one has a small teapot from which he drinks freely. If the teacher is not present they are supposed to conduct themselves properly, according to the rules of the school—that is, in accordance with the customs of their ancestors. If an unruly member should be so unfortunate as to be reported to the teacher, he will then be whipped. If one is dull and unable to recite his lessons, he will likely be deprived of "eating his rice." —Missionary Link.

TEMPERANCE.

RELATION OF THE SALOON TO POLITICS.

FROM THE ADDRESS OF HON. WILLIAM WINDOM AT WOODSTOCK, CONN., JULY 4TH, 1887.

The statement would perhaps be more accurate to say, the relation of politics to the saloon, for in most of our cities the drinking saloon is the central power around which politics revolve, and which dictates candidates and party policies. Even in our national elections it sometimes exercises a controlling influence and decides Presidential contests. By the peculiar relation of political parties New York has become a pivotal State. The saloons rule the city; the city rules the State, and the State decides what shall be the ruling power of the republic. We are, therefore, to all intents and purposes, a rum-ruled nation. We shall not be surprised at the ability of this organization to accomplish these results if we glance at

ITS MAGNITUDE AND RESOURCES.

It claims to have, in the United States, $1,000,000,000 invested in the business of making and selling liquors. There are at least 500,000 direct employees. Millions of poor miserable victims and camp-followers stand ready to do its bidding. It is supported and defended by the vicious habits, appetites, passions and prejudices of millions of our people. Its revenues are larger and the percentage of profits far greater, as the statistics prove, than are derived from all our 140,000 miles of railroad. Add to all this the disgraceful fact that, with these mighty resources at command, it has formed a close alliance, offensive and defensive, with one of the great political parties of the country. Is it any wonder then that such an organization, with such resources, and such political alliances, has become the ruling power in many parts of the Republic, and that it boldly proclaims its purpose of supreme political dominion? I do not pause to describe the hideous character of its rule in our cities and towns, where it has full sway, for your own experience and observation will speak more eloquently on that point than any words of mine. My purpose just now is to show that while we read with honest pride our grand and immortal Declaration of Independence we are today the subjects of a tyrant more exacting, cruel, intolerant and hateful than ever wielded a royal sceptre or disgraced a kingly crown.

Let a few facts, selected from the many at command, confirm this statement. Take, first, that which is among the least important, viz.,

THE ENORMOUS WASTE OF PROPERTY AND PRODUCTIVE POWER.

It is estimated upon the best attainable authority that this tyrant's revels cost annually more than $700,000,000; that 500,000 victims, rendered worse than useless, are staggering along in his triumphal procession to dishonored graves; and that his army of immediate retainers—the makers and venders of "liquid fire"—numbers 500,000 more.

Estimating that this million of makers, venders and victims, if engaged in some legitimate business, could have earned $1.50 per day, we have a loss in productive power of $450,000,000 per annum, which added to the $700,000,000 wasted for strong drinks makes a total of $1,250,000,000. Add to this taxation—estimated at $100,000,000—for the support of jails, criminal prosecutions, penitentiaries, almshouses, pauperism, and all the unnumbered burdens imposed upon the country by this tyrant and you have $1,350,000,000 as the annual cost of his reign. How does this compare with the administration of King George, or with the tax on the historic tea that a century ago was put to steep in Boston harbor?

Let it be borne in mind that this burden rests most heavily upon the poor, who are least able to bear it. It is doubtless true that a large portion of it is borne by the rich and prosperous, but if only one-half of it falls upon the wage-workers of the nation there is an opportunity for an Anti-Poverty Society with possibilities beyond the wildest dreams of Mr. George and Dr. McGlynn. Mr. Powderly, in a recent speech, said, "In one Pennsylvania county, in a single year, $17,000,000 was spent for liquor, and it was estimated that $11,000,000 of the amount came from workingmen." The savings that could be made through an Anti-Saloon Anti-Poverty Society would in ten years buy half the farms in the United States, and in fifteen years more furnish a fund large enough to purchase every railroad in the country and pay more for them than their actual cost.

RELENTLESS CRUELTY OF THE LIQUOR POWER.

Not less than 80,000 victims go annually to the drunkard's grave. Pestilence and war combined do not, in this country, equal its destructive energy. I repeat what I have had occasion to say elsewhere, that the waste of human life wrought every five years by our 200,000 saloons is equal to the destruction of life by both armies, numbering millions of armed men, during the entire War of the Rebellion. In their hands strong drink is a weapon so fatal that the 500,000 drunkard-makers are able to accomplish more in the same period than four times their number could with shot and shell, fire and sword, and all the appliances of modern warfare. The cruelty of war is not measured by the number of those who fall in battle, but by the unutterable woe and bitter anguish of broken hearts and desolated homes. Most emphatically it is true that the mere destruction of 80,000 lives every year affords no measure of the relentless cruelty of the liquor power in its war against society. To realize this you must go to the dishonored homes, question the broken hearts, read the voiceless misery in wan and haggard faces, hear helpless children cry for food, see them stricken down by drunken and infuriated fathers, and sometimes even by besotted mothers, witness the debauchery and ruin of youth, and the utter degradation, ignorance, poverty and misery which everywhere and always accompany the victims of the saloon. Do you say that all these are the incidents of the business, not the motives for it? Certainly. Let us do these men no injustice. Human misery is not their motive. They only want to get money, and, knowing that these things follow as effect follows cause, they are not deterred. Doubtless they would prefer to get money without these disagreeable consequences of their acts. A like plea may be made for the burglar and highwayman. Their motive also is money, not murder.

In addition to its waste of property and productive power, and its relentless cruelty,

THE SALOON IS A MOST DANGEROUS ENEMY TO THE REPUBLIC.

The home and the ballot are the very cornerstones on which our free institutions rest; the very holy of holies behind the sacred altars of Freedom. Destroy the one, or corrupt the other, and free government is a failure. The liquor saloon aims its deadly blows at both. If the hopes of our fathers and our own ambition for this great Republic are to be realized, we must protect and cherish the myriads of homes where children are daily taught those lessons of Christianity, liberty, justice and forbearance which alone will qualify them for the sacred trust of citizenship. Whatever else the liquor saloons have done they have never made one happy Christian home, and they never will. On the other hand, they have created unnumbered thousands of places, misnamed homes, where the seeds of disorder and anarchy are daily planted and nourished in the minds and hearts of the young. These desecrated homes are the primary schools in which are taught by precept and example the first lessons in disorder and crime, while the saloons themselves are the colleges from which the most dangerous order of criminals are graduated. They stand open night and day—Sundays included—ready to receive the myriads of poor, ignorant and misguided wretches whose childhood, blighted in the drunkard's home, makes them the ready victims to the teachers of disorder, socialism and anarchy, who here find their council chamber and their inspiration. I verily believe that if the saloon were abolished the dangerous classes which now menace society would to a great extent disappear with it. What think you would become of the anarchist and socialist without his ally and assistant? Where would he rally his forces? Where would he teach his treason? Where would he find inspiration for his followers? The saloon system is itself a league of law-breakers, whose example affords a most powerful stimulus to disorder of all kinds. It openly proclaims its purpose to disobey all laws which interfere with its supreme purpose to make money in its own way, and at whatever sacrifice.

POLITICAL CORRUPTION.

The corrupt use of money is, in my judgment, one of the most dangerous evils which now threaten the future of this Republic. It is the blighting, festering source of many of the other evils of which we complain. It is sapping the very foundations of public confidence and respect for law by polluting the sources of political power. It stalks with brazen face into our legislative halls and with scarce a pretense of concealment dictates our laws. It too often corrupts the press and changes truth into a lie. It is the ready and well-known instrument by which individual wealth and corporate power aggrandize themselves at the expense of the people, and by which giant evils maintain their hold upon society. Let it be generally understood and acquiesced in, that elections depend not upon the free will of the people but that their results are purchased with money, or whisky, and the end of free institutions is not far off. Upon the ruins of Judah is written "Idolatry," of Greece and Rome "Sensuality," of Spain "Avarice"; and upon the ruins of the Great Republic will be written "Corruption" unless there be virtue enough in the people to rescue it from the bottomless abyss toward which its steps are tending. Combine and aggregate all the other corrupting agencies and influences of our times and they are dwarfed beside the Liquor Power. Indeed, but few of the other methods of corruption are complete without it. I know of no other agency which openly proclaims its right and its purpose to control elections and to prevent the passage of distasteful laws by the use of money.—Independent.

EDUCATIONAL.

—President Fairchild of Oberlin College has reached his seventieth year, and desires to resign his position. The trustees urge him to remain, but in the event of his resignation will continue the payment to him during his life of his present salary.

—The Berea College Catalogue, Berea, Ky., shows 18 instructors, of which half are women. There are 15 females in the freshman class, which numbers 23 in all. There are in all departments 431 scholars with an average age of 20 years. Of the students 226 are males and 205 females; and 251 are colored and 180 white. There would be some difficulty in the application of the proposed Georgia law to Berea. Elder J. F. Browne is secretary of the Berea Board of trustees. He is in search of a capable man and woman for janitor and matron.

—Dr. J. H. McIlvaine has resigned as pastor of the High Street Presbyterian church, Newark, to become the president of Evelyn College—the college for young ladies to be opened in Princeton next fall.

—Dr. A. G. Haygood, manager of the Slater fund for Southern schools, is making speeches at different points in Texas this month on the prohibition issue now before the people of that State. He will take his son, Wilbur, and his daughter, Mamie, with him to do the singing.

—The report is confirmed of the purchase of the Von Ranke library for the purpose of bringing it to America. It was not bought for the Garrett Biblical Institute of Evanston, Ill., however, but is going to the Syracuse University. The library contains 35,000 volumes and 75,000 pamphlets and is considered the finest historical collection in the world.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—Bro. E. R. Worrell, secretary of the N. C. A. Board, has recently removed to Washington Heights, near Chicago, to take charge of the Presbyterian church. The people think highly of their young pastor, and he certainly is prepared to be of eminent service to them as a Christian pastor.

—The first English District of the Ohio Synod began holding its thirty-first annual convention in the English Lutheran church at Huntington, Ohio, last week, to continue till Tuesday of this. The synodical sermon was delivered by Rev. D. Simon of Prospect, O.

—Rev. W. A. Hyle, of Indiana, spent a Sabbath lately in Syracuse, N. Y., and assisted E. W. Bruce, pastor of the Wesleyan church, in quarterly meeting services. He preached an excellent sermon which was greatly enjoyed by the congregation. Bro. Hyle is visiting relatives in central and northern New York and endeavoring to recruit his health. A severe hemorrhage of the lungs several weeks ago threatened speedy death, but he was restored in answer to prayer.

—The twelve days' labor of the Rev. B. Fay Mills, at Exeter, N. H., resulted in a list of 254 persons wishing to join some church. This is the first occurrence of anything like a general revival in that town since 1858.

—Three-fourths of the Congregational churches in Pennsylvania are of Welsh origin, and the retention of the Welsh language and the strongly independent tendency of Welsh Congregationalism has stood in the way of a State organization. Recently, however, such an organization has been effected.

—Quite a sensation has been created in Dublin, Mass., by an attempt to burn the Dane St. Church. The incendiarism was deliberately planned. A large quantity of hay and two quarts of oil were found in the cellar of the church. Another unsuccessful attempt to burn this church was made three years ago.

—The Society for the Home Study of the Scriptures, of which Bishop Doane is president, and Miss Sarah F. Smiley manager, recently held an interesting meeting at Saratoga, N. Y. The society embraces 258 persons, living in all parts of the United States. Its work is carried on by correspondence and examination-papers. During the summer lectures will frequently be delivered at the Mansion House, Excelsior Springs, Saratoga, for the benefit of resident members and the general public.

—A good idea of the Lutheran Church of America as to locality and languages can be gained from the statistics of churches erected in 1886. The total number was 276, of which 152 were German, 62 English, 37 Swedish, 22 Norwegian and 2 Danish. Besides these there are Slavonian, Finnish, Icelandic and Bohemian-Lutheran houses of worship.

—As many as twenty Congregational churches have been organized within two years in southern California, and a marked revival spirit prevailed during the past winter.

—The Reformed Presbyterian church consists of 11 presbyteries, 119 congregations, 103 ministers, 508 elders, 329 deacons and 10,832 communicants. The net increase last year was 111. Their Sabbath-school scholars number 12,102. The total contributions last year amounted to $201,201.

—Winnipeg, in Manitoba, is one of the exceptional western cities, in that it has preserved the Sabbath day. It has a population of 23,000, with church accommodation for 15,000. On the Lord's Day the churches are full, all houses of business are closed, and no street railroad is operated.

—A Christian missionary, on entering a new field in China, was kindly received by the Mandarin, who promised to do all in his power to help him. "I have not heard your doctrine," said he, "but I have seen it. I have a servant who was a perfect devil, but since he received your doctrine he is another man, and I can now trust him."

—The late King of Sherbro, West Africa, when on his death-bed, committed his son to the American missionaries to be sent to this country for a Christian education. Having obtained this, he lately returned to Africa with his wife as a Moravian missionary. He proposes to translate the Bible into his native tongue, and to publish a journal, having learned the printer's trade while here.

—The Reformed Presbyterian Synod, recently in session at Newburgh, N. Y., passed strong papers on the subjects of secret societies, temperance, National Reform, etc. The Synod raises its voice against all societies organized on the principle of secrecy, and does not, as is attempted in our own church [United Presbyterian], limit the application of the testimony to oath-bound secret societies. The oath or solemn pledge is only an aggravation of the evil of such organizations.—Christian Instructor.

—Mr. A. S. Barnes, the school-book publisher of New York, has set aside $40,000 to erect a building for the Young Men's Christian Association of Cornell University, of which institution Mr. Barnes is a trustee.

—An international convention or conference for the development and encouragement of practical Christian work will be held in the Broadway Tabernacle, New York city, for eight days, Sept. 21-28 inclusive. It is under the direction of the Committee for Christian Work in the United States and Canada, who were appointed at a similar assembly in Chicago, June, 1887. Letters of inquiry may be addressed to the secretary, Rev. John C. Collins, New Haven, Conn.

—"Berlin," writes Dr. Stuckenberg in the Homiletic Review, "is a sad commentary on the present management of religious affairs. There are very zealous Christians, but as throughout the State Church, they are too isolated, not backed by the church itself. Hence, the various benevolent and missionary operations are not so much the direct work of the church itself as of voluntary associations. These are very active, and accomplish much; but they can perform but a small part of the work really needed. The great lack of proper church accommodations and insufficient supply of ministers are to be laid to the sins of the managers of ecclesiastical affairs. The population of Berlin increases at the rate of 50,000 annually, but there is no corresponding increase in churches. Ten years ago there were 500,000 inhabitants outside of the center of the city, with but twenty churches and twenty-four ministers. Now the number of inhabitants in these districts has nearly doubled, but no new churches have been built."

LITERATURE.

GRAND LODGE OF IOWA, ANNUAL REPORT for 1887 is received through the courtesy of the Grand Secretary, T. S. Parvin, forming a well-printed volume of over 250 pages. A steel portrait of Grand Master Allen embellishes the work, whose features must belie the greatness of the order if it is really so powerful as represented. Whatever we may say of the character of this lodge document, it must be confessed that Secretary Parvin has done his work well indeed. In his report to the Grand Lodge he refers to his half century's experience as a Mason with what we truly hope are honest doubts of the wisdom of his Masonic devotion.

Scribner's Magazine for August opens with the fifth installment of the "Unpublished Letters of Thackeray," which is illustrated with several Thackeray drawings. A photograph of the statuette of Thackeray by Boehm is also reproduced. The letters give a glimpse of the great London exhibition of 1851 as seen by Thackeray, and an amusing account of a trip on the Continent which Thackeray took with his two daughters. The selections from the letters of Eliza Southgate Bowne, which were begun in July, under the title "A Girl's Life Eighty Years Ago," are concluded in this number. Most of these letters were written from New York in 1803-6, and give bright and picturesque glimpses of society in those days. Prof. N. S. Shaler, of Harvard University, contributes a paper on "The Instability of the Atmosphere." The article includes a clear, logical explanation of the genesis of all kinds of storms, dwelling particularly upon the origin and development of tornadoes and cyclones. The illustrations include many photographs of the disastrous effects of tornadoes in our Western States. The most notable of them is a reproduction of two instantaneous photographs of a tornado, taken on June 6, 1887, by C. L. Judd, of Jamestown, Dakota. In view of the great interest which the whole subject of manual training is now exciting, the article on "The Revival of Handicraft," by Prof. John F. Weir, of the Yale Art School, is particularly timely and important. Prof. Weir makes a special plea for handicrafts as an antidote to the slavery in which the working-classes have been involved by the tyranny of machinery, and he might have added, "of their secret unions."

Although not a very distant neighbor, the republic of Venezuela is little known to Northern Americans. A land of perpetual summer, it presents many and varied attractions to the tourist which are to be pleasantly set forth by Dr. W. F. Hutchinson in the American Magazine for August, with a portrait of the renowned Venezuelan President, General Guzman Blanco. "A Few English Way-birds" by T. H. Mead, tells us of the habits of birds with whose names almost every one is familiar, but with the names alone. The article is illustrated. Z. L. White, editor of the Providence, R. I., Daily Star, writes of the United States Supreme Court, its history, its influence and power in the nation with portraits and graphic sketches of the lives, characters and social habits of the nine eminent judges that form this important branch of our government. Col. I. Edwards Clarke, of the U. S. Bureau of Education, presents an elaborate review of the new methods adopted during recent years in our schools and colleges. The change began with industrial art teaching, and in this line the greatest development is to be expected, although the more general effects are far-reaching and apply already to all departments of education.

St. Nicholas for August opens with a beautiful frontispiece, by Mary Hallock Foote, illustrating some bright verses by Edith M. Thomas, entitled "Invitation to Echo." Miss Foote also contributes a charming sketch of Rocky Mountain life, called "An Idaho Picnic," with pictures by herself. Another artist tells his own story with pen as well as pencil—George Wharton Edwards in "The Figurehead of the James Starbuck," a sea story. Nora Perry contributes a "girl's story," which contains a healthful lesson for some teachers, as well as all scholars. There is a pleasant sketch of Oliver Wendell Holmes by William H. Rideing, editor of the Youth's Companion; George J. Manson gives his views on "Journalism" to the boys who are getting "Ready for Business"; and C. F. Holder tells "How Some Animals Become Extinct," especially the sea-cow of the northern straits and other forms of animal life which have been hunted out of existence, within a recorded period. "A Great Battle in a Forest" is Gen. Adam Badeau's account of Chancellorsville.

Demorest's Monthly Magazine, though largely filled with stories and fashion notes, has an entertaining illustrated sketch of the Adirondacks, and a monograph on Audobon with a portrait. The sanitary and household departments are always good, and the temperance articles are vigorous and radical. Among the latter is an account of a spirited contest in Memphis, Tenn., to secure a prize medal offered by Mr. Demorest for a temperance declamation.

The Library Magazine in its last monthly part contains such papers of general interest as "Competition in Wheat-growing," "The Conquest of Burma," "Silk-woom Raising," "Decay of Bodily Strength in Towns," "The Czar Nicholas," "Illuminating Coal Gas," "Sleep and its Counterparts," "A House of Rest." John B. Alden, publisher, New York.

Mrs. Julia Ward Howe's portrait will be the frontispiece of the August Century, accompanying a note by herself concerning the origin of the "Battle Hymn of the Republic," appended to an article by Brander Matthews on "The Song of the War." Mr. Matthews gives authoritatively the origin of several of the principal war-songs, North and South, with the authorized text.

"Is Consumption Curable?" is the title of a significant article in the July 22 number of Science, in which the Bergeon method of treating this dreaded disease is scientifically and favorably discussed. This method is attracting much attention among progressive physicians in this country.

LODGE NOTES.

Gambrian Assembly Knights of Labor, 1,000 strong, says a Milwaukee dispatch of July 22, yesterday withdrew from the order because of Grand Master Workman Powderly's sentiments on the temperance question. It is probable that the assembly composed of tight-barrel coopers will also withdraw for the same reason. Gambrian assembly is composed of brewers. The tight-barrel coopers are mainly engaged in work for the brewing trade.

At the session of the district assembly of the Knights of Labor held in London, Ontario, July 22, the subject of the separation of the Canadian Knights of Labor from the American body in the matter of jurisdiction was discussed. A resolution was passed urging secession from the United States General Assembly and the formation of a General Assembly for Canada, the latter body to have complete and unrestricted powers to adjudicate on all questions and business of the order.

Germania Assembly, No. 7,598, of the Knights of Labor, of Wilmington, Delaware, disbanded on Thursday evening because of the clause in the new constitution prohibiting the use of intoxicating beverages at picnics and entertainments. The assembly numbered at one time about 91 members, but since the issuance of that order had fallen off to 23.

The Patriarchs Militant—the new uniformed degree of Odd-fellowship—of Northern Indiana are holding a regimental encampment at Warsaw which will last three days. The meeting is attended by several Generals and Lieutenant Generals with any amount of sham dignity.

District Assembly 30, Knights of Labor, at Fall River, Mass., has adopted a resolution instructing its delegates to the Minneapolis Convention to refuse to accept the resignation of Grand Master Workman Powderly and to do all in their power to retain him at the head of the order.

THE SECRET ORDERS OF WESTERN AFRICA.

BY J. AUGUSTUS COLE, OF SHAINGAY, WEST AFRICA.

Bishop Flickinger of the U. B. church says that, "This volume will well repay a careful reading not only for its discussion and exposition of these societies, but because it gives much valuable information respecting other institutions of that great continent."

J. Augustus Cole, the author of this pamphlet is a native of Western Africa, and is of pure negro blood. He has given much time and care to the investigation of the secret societies and heathen customs of Western Africa. He joined several of the secret orders for the purpose of obtaining full and correct information regarding their nature and operation. His culture and superior powers of discrimination render what he has written most complete and reliable.

TIMELY TALKS ON AN IMPORTANT SUBJECT.

The Papers Say of this Book:

"It is well to remind the world of the great law of human brotherhood, but how to make the 'more general application of it?' 'Aye, there's the rub!' Our author contributes his life in this direction, and his voice and reasoning will reach some ears and perhaps touch some understandings and move some selfish hearts that are buttoned up very closely and hedged around by over much respectability and comfortable prosperity."—Chicago Tribune.

"The writer does his work in a way remarkable alike for its directness, its common sense, its impartiality, its lucidity and its force. He has no theories to support; he deals with facts as he finds them; he fortifies his assertions by arrays of demonstrative statistics. The work is among the best of the kind if it is not the best that we have seen. While it is scarcely possible for it to be put in the hands of all our wage-workers, we wish it could be read by every one of them."—Chicago Interior.

OF
A Happy Life.
28th THOUSAND.

Baptist Commendation.

"We are delighted with this book. It reaches to the very core of Christian experience, and is eminently adapted to the needs of the times. It meets the doubts and difficulties of conscientious seekers after the bread and water of life, but whose efforts result only in ultimate failure and defeat. The author, without claiming to be a theologian, sends out the results of a happy and rich experience to help others into a happy Christian life."—Baptist Weekly.

Presbyterian Endorsement.

"The book is so truly and reverentially devoted to its spirit that it demands criticism. It contains so much that is sound and practical so much that, if heeded, will make our lives better, happier and more useful, that the intelligent reader who really wishes to lead a life 'hid with Christ in God' can scarcely fail to derive profit from its perusal."—Interior.

Methodist Word of Praise.

"We have not for years read a book with more delight and profit. It is not a theological volume. No effort is made to change the theological views of any one. The author has a rich experience, and tells it in a plain and delightful manner."—Christian Advocate.

United Brethren's Approval.

"We have seldom met with a more interesting volume, abounding throughout with apt illustrations; we have failed to find a dry line from title-page to title."—Religious Telescope.

Congregational Comment.

"It contains many clear, pungent, reasoning and interesting incidents. It is a practical and experimental lesson taught out of God's word, and is worthy of universal circulation."—Church Union.

Old Age and How to Enjoy It.

A most appropriate gift book for "The Old Folks at Home."

Compiled by REV. S. G. LATHROP.

Introduction by
REV. ARTHUR EDWARDS, D.D.,
(Editor N. W. Christian Advocate.)

The object of this volume is to give to that great army who are fast hastening toward the "great beyond" some practical hints and helps as to the best way to make the most of the remainder of the life that now is, and to give comfort and help as to the life that is to come.

"It is a tribute to the Christianity that honors the gray head and refuses to consider the oldish man a burden or an obstacle. The book will aid and comfort every reader."—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

"The selections are very precious. Springing from such numerous and pure fountains, they can but afford a refreshing and inspiring draught for every aged traveler to the great beyond."—Winces.

HOME AND HEALTH.

FEEDING THE BABY.

The first food for a child, artificially fed, should be one-third of pure cow's milk, two-thirds of warm water, and a trace only of sugar added. If the cow's milk does not agree, prepared barley or arrowroot made like thin starch, with a very little milk added, may be tried. Probably the best scientifically prepared food for infants, especially those whose digestion is weak, is Peptogenic Milk-Powder with cow's milk. This, when prepared according to directions, more closely approximates to human milk in every particular than any preparation yet offered, and gives to the infant, as nearly as possible, its natural food.

Ridge's, Lactated, Carnrick's, or Mellin's Food, or Imperial Granum may be used, and directions for preparing these accompany each package. The Eagle brand of condensed milk is found to agree with perhaps the largest number of babies artificially fed. Prepare this of the strength of one level tea-spoonful of the milk to one small cup of boiling water.

Whatever food may be selected it should be given a thorough trial before another is tried, as changing a baby's food is apt to make trouble. Persistent vomiting, or the child's not being properly nourished, would usually indicate that a change should be made. The greatest danger is in overfeeding. If nausea follows eating, try giving the child a smaller quantity, with a small pinch of salt in it place of sugar. Be sure, before changing, that it is not from having taken too much of a food that it did not agree. If the child has colic, omit a meal and give it boiled water as hot as it can take it, in place. Many times an injection of warm water will cure colic at once, and does no harm to try.

Oatmeal gruel, strained, is good for older babies. Prepare this by putting two or three table-spoonfuls of ordinary thick gruel, cooked three or four hours, into a cup of boiling water. If nausea does not follow, and the child does not seem enough nourished, make the gruel a little stronger, or add one third milk. If a child's bowels are relaxed, and the oatmeal does not regulate them, rice added into gruel and strained, or boiled milk slightly thickened with flour, and strained, may be given. If a baby is troubled with constipation, give it a small tea-spoonful of pure olive oil, or of West Indian molasses and water. For older children troubled in this way, cracked wheat or yellow corn-meal mush may be beneficial. The question of mush, or porridges, is an important one in any household, but especially so in one where there are children. To have this article of diet palatable, and of sufficient variety to keep for it a keen appetite, requires care, and the selection of the best preparations. A mush kettle (or a rice-boiler, as it is sometimes called) should be in every kitchen. It consists of a kettle within a kettle; the inner one of tin, or better still, of porcelain, and the outer one for water. In this way the cooking is done without stirring—which sometimes spoils the flavor—or without danger of scorching. All mushes must be thoroughly cooked. The groceries and food establishments furnish many kinds to choose from, and care must be taken that no old stock is purchased, as it is apt to be bitter.

Regularity in the hours of feeding must be observed; and if the baby cries, apparently for food, between these times, give it a spoonful or two of water. All drinking water must be either from a source known to be pure or else it must be boiled and cooled before drinking. Cover it with muslin while cooling. To restore the fresh taste to water that has been rather cold and cooled, and consequently is bolder flat, pour a small quantity rapidly back and forth from one vessel to another, just before it is given to the child to drink.

As nearly as any rules will answer for the amount of food to be given, the following will do. To a newborn child, not nursed by the mother, give from one to three table-spoonfuls, of whatever food may be selected, for a meal. If the child does not seem satisfied, and retains the food on the stomach, the amount should be carefully increased. Vomiting shows usually indicate overfeeding. As the child grows the quantity of food taken must be judiciously increased; and noting but careful watching on the part of mother or nurse can regulate this.

Ordinarily, a weaned child, a year old, requires for its breakfast about half a pint of milk, and a tea-saucer full of fruit. Some children will need more than this, in which case may be given a small piece of bread and butter, and half of a well-baked apple, if fruit agrees with the child. For the noonday meal, a small potato, or its equivalent in mush or bread and milk, and fruit. The same amount, or less, for supper. All fruits in their season are allowed children after they are a year old, if they agree. No sweetmeats of any kind should be given. This same kind of fare should be continued with little change until the child is ten or twelve years of age, about which time the bony structure hardens. The less meat children under ten eat the better.—Demore's Monthly for August.

With Adams' address. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Freemasonry Self-Convicted. By Pres. Charles C. Finney, of Oberlin College. President Finney was a "bright Mason," but left the lodge when he became a Christian. This book has opened the eyes of multitudes. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper covers, 50 cents; per dozen, $5.00.

Masonic Oaths Null and Void; or, Freemasonry Self-Convicted. This is a book for the times. The design of the author is to refute the arguments of those who claim that the oaths of Freemasonry are binding upon those who take them. His arguments are conclusive, and the forcible manner in which they are put, being drawn from Scripture, makes them convincing. The minister or lecturer will find in this work a rich fund of arguments. 207 pp., postpaid, 40 cents.

College Secret Societies. Their origin, character, and the efforts for their suppression. By H. L. Kellogg. Containing the opinion of many prominent college presidents, and others, and a full account of the murder of Mortimer Leggett. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Five Rituals Bound Together. "Odd-fellowship Illustrated" (old work), "Knights of Pythias Illustrated," "Good Templarism Illustrated" (new edition), and "The Christian Cynosure of the Grand Army of the Republic," are sold bound together in cloth for $1.00; per dozen, $9.00.

General Washington Opposed to Secret Societies. By Joseph Ritner's "Vindication of General Washington from the Stigma of Adherence to Secret Societies," communicated to the House of Representatives at Washington, March 8, 1857, at their special request. To this is added the fact that three high Masons were the only persons who opposed a vote of thanks to Washington for his services to the country. Life-un doubtedly because they considered him a seceding Freemason. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Grand Lodge Masonry. Its relation to civil government and the Christian religion. By Pres. J. Blanchard, at the Marmouth Convention. The un-Christian, anti-republican, and despotic character of Freemasonry is proved from the highest Masonic authorities. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

The Master's Carpet, or Masonry and Babel. Worship identical, explains the true source and meaning of every ceremony and symbol of the lodge, and proves that Modern Masonry is identical with the "Ancient Mysteries" of Paganism. Bound in fine cloth, 420 pp. 75 cents.

Masonry a Work of Darkness, adverse to Christianity, and inimical to republican government. By Rev. Lebeus Armstrong (Presbyterian). Written by a Master of 33 degrees. This is a very telling work and no honest man who reads it will think of joining the lodge. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Freemasonry Self-Convicted. By Rev. J. W. Bain. A careful and logical statement of reasons why secret orders should not be fellowships of the Christian Church, and by the United Presbyterian church in particular. Paper covers; price 20 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

FARM AND GARDEN.

POISONOUS WILD PLANTS.

On many farms, and about the farm buildings there are plants both wild and in cultivation which are poisonous to man and to beast. It may be of value to some to have them pointed out:

The May Apple (Podophyllum) is common, growing in rich woods and in adjacent fence corners. The fruit, when ripe, is eaten by boys, but the leaves and roots are poisonous. The plant bears a white flower, and has two large shield-shaped leaves, which are sometimes gathered for greens with fatal results. Other common names for the plant are mandrake, wild lemon, raccoon berry, and hog apple.

Poison Vine (called also poison ivy and poison oak) is a common climbing plant found on old fences, and on trees, clinging to these by numerous wry roots, which the plant throws out, and into the object over which it climbs. This plant somewhat resembles the Virginia creeper, but that may be known by a five-fold leaf, while the leaf of the poison vine is three-fold. This plant poisons many persons, if they simply touch the leaves, producing a distressing eruption of the skin. The effects are worse in the morning when the dew is on the leaves.

The Poison Sumach (poison elder or swamp dogwood) belongs to the same family as the last. It is a small bush, slightly resembling the common elder bush, having the compound leaves of a sumach. This plant is not so common as the preceding, and grows in swampy places, or along rivulets. It is quite poisonous to some persons, affecting the skin as does the poison vine.

Wild Parsnips of several kinds are poisonous. It is well to avoid all wild plants which in leaves or seed-stock look like the garden parsnip, and to remove them from the farm. The garden parsnip sometimes runs wild, and then it too becomes poisonous. These plants are generally found in low grounds and along rivulets, through sometimes on high ground. The cow-parnsip is a large, coarse-looking weed, four to eight feet high, growing in rich, low ground. This plant, covered with woolly hairs, while the wild parsnip, or cow-bane, is a smaller plant, and free from woolly hairs. The cow-bane grows in swamps, and is considered very poisonous to horned cattle.

Foot's Parsley is a small plant, one to two feet high, found in waste places in the New England States, and is quite poisonous. The water hemlock also belongs to this family; it grows in swamps and along creeks. This plant somewhat resembles "sweet cicely," and the lives of children are sometimes lost by their eating the roots which are very poisonous. The common hemlock of Europe is a smaller plant and is naturalized in some places; it is also poisonous. The only safe rule is to leave all wild plants looking like wild parsnips alone.

Indian Tobacco (eye-bright), a small plant to some extent used in medicine, is poisonous, but generally men and animals cannot eat enough of it to do them much harm.

Datura (thorn apple or jimson weed) is a common, coarse and unsightly weed, found in rich grounds about the barn and other farm buildings. It has heavy stems, large, much dentated leaves, large purplish or white flowers, which have a mawkish odor. There is no danger from eating the leaves, but the dried seeds, found in the dry burr-like pods are very poisonous and are occasionally eaten by children with fatal effects. This plant belongs to the nightshade family and should be carefully eradicated from the farm.

Slagger-bush (lambkill, calfskill, etc.), is a shrub two and three feet high, found in many woods and on sandy plains. The plant bears somewhat leathery leaves, and pretty white flowers. It is said to kill lambs and calves, and to give sheep the staggers when they eat the leaves. Where this plant is abundant, bees cannot be safely kept, because the honey gathered from the flowers of this plant poisons the whole product.

The Mountain Laurel, called also rhododendron, is well known from its evergreen leaves, beautiful flowers, and crooked wood, is one of our commonest mountain shrubs. The leaves and flowers are poisonous, but are not often eaten by our domestic animals. There is a smaller laurel with narrow leaves, which is said to be more poisonous than the larger variety.

Nightshades, or bitter-sweets. There are two of these, one with black and the other with red berries. The plants being found about our houses, and the berries of bright colors, and thus attractive to children, there is considerable danger from these plants, and they should be plucked up by the careful farmer while the fruit is yet green.

Pokeweed (poke, pigeon-berry and garret) is a plant well-known for its purple berries. The young shoots are used in the early spring for "greens" or as a substitute for asparagus; but this is not a safe thing to do, as mistakes are often made, and when too old the plant is poisonous.

In case of poisoning from eating wild berries, it would be proper to administer an emetic, such as a tablespoonful of ground mustard in a pint of warm water, or copious draughts of warm water to which a little grease or oil has been added. Tickling the throat with a feather will also bring on vomiting. The sufferer should be placed in bed and a physician called at once.

NATIONAL SUICIDE, AND ITS PREVENTION.

BY OSCAR F. LUMBY, PH. D.

Prof. Lumby's book, "National Suicide and Its Remedy," will be read with profit even by those who do not accept its doctrine, that taking interest for money loaned, one or more per cent, is sin, taking something for nothing. For, as Goldsmith said of his Vicar of Wakefield,

"E'en his fallings lean to virtue's side."

—Cynosure.

Dr. Lumby is a man of ideas, and never fails to make his readers understand just what they are. Every sentiment he writes has such an air of honesty that it will in a measure disarm those who read to criticize. It is a good book to set people to thinking, whether they believe his theories or not. The book is well worth a careful reading and study. —Inter Ocean.

On all the points named they differ radically from those which prevail in the organization of society. Either they are true or false. It is a curious fact that all of them have been stigmatized as crazy, and yet nearly all of them have been for some years steadily gaining the adherence of men of intellectual ability. —Times.

"A THRILLING WARNING."

THE

Man Traps of the City.

BY THOS. E. GREEN.

Mothers—place this book in the hands of your sons

It treats of

The Tiger and His Den.

Cups of Flame.

The Scarlet Sin.

Embezzlement.

The Devil's Printing Press.

Etc., Etc., Etc., Etc.

A book that is sensational, not from excited rhetoric or florid figures of speech, but from the facts that flow like melted lava from the pen of the writer. It is a book of timely warnings, with the crimes are shown of their kind, robbed of the glamour with which they have been surrounded by the critical literature of the day, and painted in strong, true colors. The life of the profligate is here shown in its true light, not as a life that, though wicked, has its delights, but as a thing of death, now and in future life to be abhorred. —Western Christian Advocate.

ANTI-LODGE LYRICS.

Sing the Reform

Into the Hearts of the People

One of the most popular books against lodgery is the latest compilation of

George W. Clark,

The Minstrel of Reform:

A forty-page book of soul-stirring, conscience-awakening songs, appropriate for lectures, conventions and the home circle. What can add more to the interest of a meeting than a song well sung? What means will more quickly overthrow the power of the secret lodges than to sing the truth into the popular conscience?

Get this little work and use it for God and home and country. Forty pages.

IN THE COILS;

OR—

The Coming Conflict.

A NEW AND STRANGE STORY BASED ON STARTLING FACTS, VIVIDLY PORTRAYING A MYSTERIOUS AND DANGEROUS POWER AT WORK IN THE GOVERNMENT, THE CHURCH, AND THE HOME.

"All will agree that this is a powerfully written story." —Evangelist, (Chicago, Ills.)

"A book which we trust may have a wide circulation." —National Baptist, (Philadelphia.)

"So intensely interesting did I find it that it was hard to pause until the last sentence was read. This work places the author in the front ranks of the fiction." —W. W. Barry, D. D., in Christian Instructor, (Philadelphia.)

"Unless we are greatly mistaken, the work will do more to awaken the American church and people to the evils of Freemasonry than any other book recently published." —Evangelical Reporter.

"The book will create a sensation in Masonic circles, and evoke criticism of a most relentless character. The courage of the author in attacking secret societies, and cordially commending it to the favorable attention of our readers." —United Presbyterian, (Pittsburgh.)

"A charming work, fit to be classed with 'Uncle Tom's Cabin'; it is indeed less a work of fiction. The volume is as valuable as a work of reference as it is agreeable, truthful and useful. Our young folks will not leave the book, and cordially commend it to the favorable attention of our readers." —United Presbyterian, (Pittsburgh.)

Jeff. Davis has harnessed himself into a strange team. With the Northern liquor dealers he has the savage satisfaction of having helped defeat prohibition in Texas. He gave brains and influence in a letter; they, blood money. Just before election he wrote a long letter denouncing prohibition. Senator Reagan, once member of the old rebel cabinet, wrote a reply which was half an apology, and the great cause was defeated by 70,000 to 100,000 votes.

The letters which have passed between Miss Willard and Mrs. Blanchard are warmly noticed by Miss Flagg and other lady correspondents, and some have wished to have the letters circulated in a tract for the benefit of the women of the W. C. T. U. The Union Signal does not publish such articles as Miss Willard's circular, urging prohibition speakers to join the Knights of Labor. If the W. C. T. U. women were in possession of the facts, four-fifths of them would, like Miss Flagg, insist on a divorce from secret societies, and Miss Willard's powerful influence, along with theirs, would give us a united open daylight Prohibition host next November for the election of 1888, like the Abolitionists in 1856, when Know Nothings fell to rise no more.

The Chicago "boddler" crowd have begun to taste the bitter dregs of the cup of corruption they have so long quaffed deeply. Except in the judgment of a few sympathizers, one of whom it seems got on the jury, their sentence is far from the measure of their crime. There is yet another party of conspirators of the second degree to be tried. The hunt after McGarigle has fallen through, but the trial of Dr. St. John for helping him off may bring some secret things to light, if the lodge is overmatched in the case. It is hinted that some of the witnesses will implicate Sheriff Matson unpleasantly. The Drovers' Journal has an amusing comment on the runaway. McGarigle, it says, "when he made his escape not only broke his parole as a man but as a Knight Templar. Both Sheriff Matson and himself are Masons and this fact had some influence in the trust reposed in the ex-warden by the Sheriff." The logic of this observation is that the Knight Templar oath bound McGarigle not to escape if he could, but to stay by Matson in order to preserve the official good name of the latter. That is reading Masonry backwards.

"The tender mercies of the wicked are cruel." This Scripture is fulfilled by the Champion, the liquor organ of this city, in its comment on the late arrest of Bro. T. B. Arnold of the Free Methodist on the mistaken charge of cruelty to children. It says: "We have not space to give the full details; but is there not enough meanness and brutality developed in what we quoted to make a man with a heart in his body wish to see the Rev. Methodist preacher, Sunday-school teacher and prohibition howler, stripped naked, rolled in a bed of thistles, whipped till there is no hide left on his carcass, and then tarred and feathered and drowned in the muddy water of our sweet-scented Chicago river?" This is from a paper that is urging men to kill wives and starve and beat children and make every home a hell, by means of the liquor business!

The celebration of the centennial of the United States Constitution will take place in Philadelphia, September 15th to 17th. The features of the occasion will be an industrial procession contrasting the commerce and industrial and social characteristics of the country in 1787 with those of to-day, a military parade and review by President Cleveland, and an oration by Justice Miller of the United States Supreme Court. President Cleveland will preside on the last day and will be attended by several members of his cabinet. The military part of the programme should be left out. We have not our national greatness because of wars, or armies or navies, but because we pay our debts, have a noble school system and the Word of God is not bound.

From October to June last two students of Princeton College, Forman and Wilder, were visiting American colleges to arouse an interest in foreign missions. Altogether they visited 162 institutions, some of them theological seminaries and academies. As a result of their visits 2,267 persons, nearly all students, have volunteered to go for Christ to the heathen and signed the brief statement, "We are willing and desirous, God permitting, to be foreign missionaries." The visits of these young men were often attended with conversions as an evidence of God's blessing on their work. Dr. A. T. Pierson of the "Wanamaker" church, Philadelphia, an enthusiastic writer on missions, uses the fact of this visit and its pledges of consecration to urge on the churches to greater zeal. There cannot be too much enthusiasm in this work for Christ. It needs to be red hot to melt down the formality and world-loving spirit that has settled upon many Christians; and after it has swept through the colleges, it needs to enter the precious home circle and arouse father and mother to bring their best-loved as an offering to Christ. All the readers of the Cynosure are commended to the reports of this work in the Missionary Review for July.

The rebel battle-flag flurried and the invitation of St. Louis to President Cleveland, have aided in bringing to light some Grand Army shams worth noting. Lucius Fairchild, at the head of the order, is a high Mason, and was engaged a few years ago in establishing Egyptian Masonry here in Chicago. Gov. Fairchild reached the office of Grand Captain of the Guard in the Sovereign Sanctuary and received the ninety-fifth degree, and was therefore dubbed "Sovereign Patriarch Grand Defender of the Truth." This exalted character, added to that previously acquired, by drinking the Knight Templar's wine of double damnation out of a human skull, gave him eminent preparation for his present office. Gen. Tuttle, the fiery defender of Grand Army faith in Iowa, was, it seems, an extraordinary grand army man in the lawful and truthful sense. As Democratic candidate for governor of Iowa during the war, his correspondence of the time was then denounced as "Copperhead." Adjutant General Drum, who had part in the battle-flag business, is a member of a G. A. R. post in Washington, but after this singular fashion: He was sworn and initiated into the order in his office in the War Department, and has had nothing to do with it since, attending no meetings, and apparently caring nothing about these conservators of patriotism more than for a Mother Goose jingle.

THE MASONIC HEAVEN.

BY REV. J. W. LOGUE.

Masons, Odd-fellows, and other secret orders are in the habit, in their burial services, of sending their deceased members to a place which they are pleased to call by the very scriptural name of the lodge above.

I confess I am not very well versed in secret society eschatology, having never had any great practical familiarity with the system; but it has occurred to me, with my little knowledge of the matter, that there must be some mistake about the location of this lodge; that its true position will be found rather in the direction of nadir than of the zenith, below than above. My reasons for thinking so lie, some of them, very much upon the surface—though I have deeper ones which I need not mention now. To begin, the term lodge, the name given to it, rather excites my suspicion. Supposing it to have been chosen with an accurate regard to the common verbal meaning of the word, we know that things are not, generally, going upward, but downward, when they lodge.

But not to place too much stress upon a term which would seem to have been chosen, if not intentionally, at least with an instinctive regard to the state of the case, the origin of these societies would seem to point in the same direction. For whatever may be said of the time or times of their modern organization (as of Masonry in 1717) it is evident that in their spirit, genius and mode of operation, they date back to the darkness of ancient heathenism. In this they properly deserve, as some of them claim, the distinctive appellation of "ancient order." Their secrecy, if we go no farther, would betoken the darkness out of which they sprang. Now, if Christianity has been laboring these eighteen centuries to free the world from that spiritual darkness and superstition that had settled down upon it, it can hardly be supposed that those who are laboring to sustain these, and those who are laboring to destroy them, can have the same ultimate destination. As the one is the victory of light and the other of darkness, it would be reasonable to suppose that they would land their subjects in their own respective elements.

Their principles, like their origin, are not such as to inspire high hopes of their future. If there is a fact patent beyond all controversy, it is that their devotional exercises are, in all their essentials, heathenish. They discard the name of Christ from their prayers and rituals; and in their general mode of procedure, conform their worship to that of Baal, or the sun. Then if Baal worship leads to a lodge above, secret societyism does so also. But if it leads in another direction, so do they.

But if its principles and forms of worship are unchristian, its morals are, if possible, still more so. The Bible morality requires that our charity be extended to the weak, the destitute and the unfortunate. But these are the classes with which Masonry directs its subjects to have nothing to do. Their charity, if it be charity, is generally confined to men, to the exclusion of women; and to the young, the strong and the healthy, who, it may be presumed, can take care of themselves. And not to mention other radical defects in their morality, a brother member is to be defended "right or wrong;" and his secrets, committed to them "as such," are to be kept inviolate, "murder and treason excepted," and in some of the higher degrees "murder and treason not excepted." Such morals are not from above, and cannot lead in that direction.

And still farther, when we look at the character of not a few of the classes that find entrance, if not welcome, into the Masonic lodge below, the skeptic, the saloon-keeper, the profane swearer, the lascivious, we are more and more confirmed in our apprehension that the direction of this lodge is down and not up. To give to such gross natures an upward ascent, is more than the laws of spiritual gravitation will admit of.

But we are told that there are many professing Christians in these secret orders. I cannot help that. The laws of nature and of God will not be reversed for their sakes. If they are found in a society, all whose tendencies are downward, they will be very likely to go down with it. If they have boarded a train which is descending an inclined plane, with precipitous velocity, I cannot see how they can hope to escape the general wreck.

MORAL HEROES.—NO. VIII.

BY REV. C. C. FOOTE.

PRESIDENT CHARLES G. FINNEY.

Among the "cloud of witnesses" that have borne testimony against the multiplied abominations of Masonry it is doubtful if any name appears more frequently than that of Rev. Charles G. Finney. And it is doubtful if the name of any one of these witnesses carries with it more weight than his. As a religious reformer his reputation was co-extensive with Christendom. As a successful evangelist he had no peer in his day. His integrity was never questioned.

He had in early life been seduced into the Masonic lodge. He, therefore, knew Masonry, having been in it. But when converted he renounced it; as every converted man should. The strength of his terrible denunciations was in his personal knowledge and clear perception of its wickedness. This was the reason why he received so many threats of murder if he did not desist from his exposures and denunciations.

I have heard the most celebrated ministers of the United States and Canada, and I regard Mr. Finney the peer of them all. Like Saul he was head and shoulders above all the men of his age. In person he was tall and commanding. When roused in the pulpit there was an awful majesty in his appearance that at times made the heart stand still, and the people to tremble as by the terrors of an earthquake. He was possessed of an intellect of almost boundless versatility. He was a very Elijah in boldness and awfulness of denunciation. But in tenderness and love he was as the disciple that leaned on the bosom of Jesus. And, like those holy men, there will be none of his like to come after him.

A neighboring minister assured me that he had received clearer light from one of his volumes than from all his other theological reading. The celebrated Dr. Redford of England declared that "Pres. Finney's theological volumes were worth more to a young minister than a whole library of theology."

The power of the Holy Spirit upon him was equal to the greatness of the faculties inspired. The vastness of his sensibility caused him to feel the truth as if it were a consuming fire in his bones. Where others had but faint views truth rose before him like mountains on mountains; such was the power of his perceptive faculties.

His sympathy with Christ was as that of a twin brother. No marvel that he came among the people as a revelation from heaven; and no marvel that people came hundreds of miles to hear and witness the wonders of his revivals. He had the power of walking into men's consciences like an angel with a flaming sword. His ability to read the character of men was startling. Many a man was stricken under conviction by one look from those searching eyes. His sermons to Christians reveal his remarkable power of analysis. These sermons would sometimes drive nearly a whole church into the inquiry room. In the realm of law and moral government it is doubtful if this country has had his equal since the days of the elder Edwards. If you would know his logical powers read his reviews of his reviewers. It was his logical reasoning that gave him such great success with lawyers.

But transcending all else was his spiritual power. His experience in the heights and depths of the spiritual life was past description. Those mighty prayers that moved heaven and earth, caused people to say, "no matter what he wanted of God, he was sure to get it for the asking."

"His theology was not a creation but a growth," springing from his profound religious experience and logical discrimination in Bible study. Briefly, he held to "the self-determining power of the human will;" that "obligation is limited by ability;" that "all virtue consists in benevolence;" "the simplicity of moral action," i. e., "every moral action is wholly good or wholly bad;" "every act of the unregenerate is sinful;" "regeneration and conversion are synonymous, wrought by the Holy Spirit and human will simultaneously through the instrumentality of the truth." He held with great tenacity to the election and perseverance of the saints. Christ was all and in all that pertains to salvation, a substitute to meet the demands of justice.

His volume on sanctification is a logical deduction from the simplicity of moral action; and that the command to love God with all the heart implies ability to obey; and that the Gospel has provision for an indefinite perpetuation of present obedience.

He was anti-sectarian; holding to diversity in unity. If he had occasion to undermine the "sylogistic foundation" of the Baptists, it was that he might proffer a better way. Many a Methodist saint deeming himself lost by "falling from grace" has been set on high by placing before him the final perseverance of the saints. To the objection that election was a barrier to the salvation of men, he would prove to you that without it no child of Adam could be saved. His love for all believers was only equalled by his love of truth. Hence he labored with and for all denominations.

When he came upon the theatre of his life's work he found the popular theology saturated with the worst form of "high-toned Calvinism," and the religious life of the country largely practical anti-nomianism. As a revivalist he was forced to do perpetual battle against both of these errors. Pres. Finney was manifestly raised up of Providence for a great and peculiar work, and most faithfully did he perform it.

I feel that I have given a faint sketch of one of the grandest men of the age, of world-wide fame. If the reader would know more of President Finney let him read his autobiography, and for the revelation of divine power he will say it excels any other book save the Bible.

MINISTERING SPIRITS.

BY REV. H. A. DAY.

As to the influence of spirits upon mortals, either for good or evil, there seems to have been no doubt in the minds of early Christians.

The dangerous drift toward gross materialism is, perhaps, no more plainly manifested in any direction than in the silence of religious journals and of the pulpit in respect to these things. We scarce hear a word concerning angelic presences or of the position and condition of those who, once here, have long since departed. Have we not lost what would have been, if intelligently and Scripturally presented, a powerful influence for good among the unsaved? I leave the reader to answer.

Thoughts of this nature are awakening and elevating in their effect. They cannot be otherwise. Men have not yet awakened to their true position relative to good and evil. We do not yet know ourselves or our surroundings. God is always trying to enlighten and instruct us; but, alas! we are dull scholars. There are discoveries to be made yet, in spiritual things as there has been and doubtless are still in material things. We have only of late learned to apply the forces of steam and electricity, notwithstanding we have been surrounded with them from the creation of man. The latent principles have been with us awaiting our recognition.

So in spiritual matters. Modern Spiritualists will have lost their hold upon the masses of their followers when certain strange phenomena which can not be denied are better understood. The phenomena now so strange will be familiar when we follow more closely the leadings of God's unerring Spirit and his Word.

When Paul enjoins upon us to "Believe not every spirit" does he not lead us forward on the line of thought before us? Did not Christ address spirits apart from the beings in whom they dwelt? Did not Peter, James and John see spirits when the mist was cleared away on the Mount of Transfiguration? Christ simply appeared to be to them at that time what he really was. Did Moses and Elijah appear on this special occasion or were they continually present with him of whom they had prophesied during their natural lives? We cannot deny facts. Let us not try; let us be sober and watch unto prayer. God is the source of light; from him only shall we receive knowledge.

The author of the work entitled "Credo," has the following directly in line with these thoughts: "The word translated 'hell' in 2 Peter 2:4 is Tartarus. It occurs nowhere else in the Bible. A large number of the most learned and critical commentators, including such names as Drs. Ramsey, Oudworth, Parkhurst and Whately, together with the learned Grotius, agree that the word, in a physical sense, according to ancient classical writers, means the atmosphere of our earth. The passage then would read, 'God spared not the angels that sinned, but cast them down to the atmosphere of earth.' Our atmosphere is a temporary home for demons. Satan himself is 'the prince of the power of the air.' Who that has lived in the world doubts it? Sad the lot of mortals did not angels of mercy visit and comfort them."

Thus learnedly and clearly does this writer discourse upon this important theme. Peter farther says, "Be sober, be vigilant, because your adversary, the devil, goeth about as a roaring lion seeking whom he may devour." But blessed be God, who, by the mouth of his servant David, hath said, "The Angel of the Lord encampeth round about them that fear him and delivereth them." Another said, "Fear not, for they that be with us are more than they that be with them." The young man with Elisha found it so when his eyes were once opened. Cannot we walk more confidently from henceforth? The angels have not left the earth. They are here. In our lonely ways they overshadow us with wings of loving tenderness.

Shall we not walk more carefully as we walk more confidently from henceforth? We need not fear. We lack faith, we lack information. May the God of all grace open the eyes of the blind and unstop the ears of the deaf. We now know in part and we prophesy in part. When that which is perfect is come then that which is in part shall be done away.

Williamston, Mich.

SECRET SOCIETIES IN COLLEGE.

The arguments pro and con for these societies (which usually are known by two or three Greek letters) may be briefly stated in the following facts:

C. P. was a poor lad who, by working on a farm in summer, earned barely enough money to pay for his board, clothes and tuition in college. He joined on entering a "Fraternity."

Many wealthy members of this society were among the alumni of the college. They had erected a dormitory where "the brothers" occupied comfortable rooms rent free; they had a club house, with library, reading-room, piano and luxurious study-rooms. All these advantages C. P. enjoyed free of cost.

There was also a sum contributed by the society for the aid of poor members. In the junior year of his course P.'s health failed. His expenses during his senior terms were borne by the Fraternity, with the understanding that whenever he should be able, in his future life, he would repay it into the general treasury of the Fraternity.

P., who made good use of his advantages and was not unwilling to accept aid, has naturally much to say in defence of secret societies.

In another institution in New England most of the students belong to one of four Fraternities, each of which has a chapter in the college. A few young men remain from poverty or choice outside of all. They occupy precisely the position of individuals in a city who undertake to struggle against rings or powerful corporations.

They are socially under a ban; there is no chance whatever for them to gain any of the offices or honors given by students to each other, and which are so dear to boys. But this is not all.

Not only in this, but in many other colleges, the tutors, instructors, and even the professors themselves are members of these Fraternities, and (being human, like other men) are often influenced by old association, and loyalty to their society, to be prejudiced in favor of fellow-members among the students and against those who belong to a rival society.

There are said to be colleges in which no member of a certain Fraternity, whatever his merit, ever "passes" with honor, and in which the members of its rival find a flowery path before them to success. So flagrant is this evil, that in some colleges no professor or tutor is permitted to continue his connection with a secret society, and in others no chapter of such society can be maintained.

Much is to be said on both sides. But if such secret associations exist, they should be so controlled as not to interfere with justice. The Companion suggests the subject as one worthy the grave, honest consideration of the young men and parents who are its readers.—Youths' Companion.

JOHN BROWN'S SONS.

THEIR HOMES IN THE SIERRA MADRES.—THEIR PECULIAR IDEAS OF RIGHT AND JUSTICE.

No one who has visited Pasadena, California, and its vicinity ever tires of descriptions of the beautiful mountain scenery a few miles to the north. Several times of late mention has been made in the Cynosure of the Las Casitas settlement of the John Brown descendants, at the base and on the sides of these mountains; and the following sketch from the Chicago Times will revive the recollections of those intrepid sons and their father:—

The first peak of the lofty Sierra Madres, beginning at the Arroyo Seca canyon, opposite Pasadena, has been named John Brown, and is known as Brown's peak. About its base, overlooking the San Gabriel valley, are the houses of his sons and their descendants, who, to the number of thirteen, have made their homes here. The selection of this site shows the inherent love for the mountains possessed by these people.

This region, high above the valley and remarkable for its dryness, is Las Casitas, laid out as a park of homes, and upon the second ridge Owen and Jason Brown have selected their homes.

Their house is plain and simple, but as I stood in the doorway it occurred to me that they had something which no palace in this country or Europe possessed—their incomparable view.

Amid such scenes the Brown brothers live. Upon these mountain slopes they intend to pass their days in peace and quiet. For two years they had been living upon the plateau of Las Casitas, but recently they sold a part of their ranch and moved farther up the range. A singular series of disasters has befallen these two old men. Owen was disabled some years ago by being dragged for several miles by a runaway horse, and Jason has been repeatedly burned out in the Middle States, so that at present they are in reduced circumstances. When they moved into their mountain home some good friends on the mountain slopes conceived the idea of giving them a house-warming, which resulted in furnishing the new home in a modest way.

Thirteen members of the Brown family live within rifle shot of Las Casitas. They are Owen and Jason Brown, the two sons; Mrs. Ruth Brown Thompson; her husband, Henry Thompson; and, near by, two daughters and their families. Henry Thompson was with Capt. John Brown in many of his trips, and was wounded in the battle of Black Jack, in the early Kansas troubles. Jason and Owen have been through adventures enough to make their hair much whiter than it is. On more than one occasion Jason Brown was taken out to be hanged or shot; and the last time, when he bared his breast to the rifles of the border ruffians and told them to aim at his heart, his coolness and bravery alone saved his life.

One can not converse with these men five minutes without seeing that the mantle of the father has fallen upon the sons. Their ideas of what justice should be are singular to the average man for the simple reason that they are utterly at variance with justice as we meet it every day. A few examples of their philosophy will show their character. They do not consider it right to take interest on money loaned. Some time ago, when some friends raised some money to buy them a cow and the check was presented they protested that there were others who needed it more and it was their earnest desire that the money should be sent to the colored sufferers from the earthquake that occurred in Charleston at about that time. When the Grand Army men visited Pasadena in the summer of 1886 the Browns were taken in a carriage, a rope attached to the pole, and dragged through the town amid the playing of patriotic airs—much to their confusion, as no more modest and retiring men ever lived; yet they found occasion to suggest three cheers for the South, and Jason has often told the writer that while they considered that their father was murdered, they have not the slightest enmity toward the people of the South, understanding exactly how bitter the feeling was at the time. They consider that their father died that freedom might live, and that he himself considered his death was an offering to the cause is shown by his words, which were, in effect, that it would do more to help the cause than any other action of his life.

These children of John Brown not only practice justice, but carry it out to such an extent that his has probably kept them poor. That they are honored by their neighbors it need hardly be said. When the boycott on the Chinese was declared here in 1886, the Browns were at once on the side of the weaker, and Jason informed me that he was going to Los Angeles to employ a Chinaman, for the sake of the example or principle, if nothing more, even if he had to work nights to earn the money to pay him. The last time I visited the slopes of Brown's peak an almond-eyed Mongolian was at work, whether as a result of the oppression or not, I did not inquire.

Within a week some colored people of Pasadena got up a benefit for the family, and the occasion was one of great interest historically. The Browns and their families all sat together and were presented to the audience. The gentleman who introduced them, though not wanting notoriety, had it thrust upon him, as when the ceremony was over Owen Brown rose to his feet, and after telling how his father joined the temperance party, said: "Now I want to say a word for my friend, Mr. ———. His house was always open to us when we were doing the good work, and it was he who made some of the pikes that were sent to Harper's Ferry to be used in freeing slaves." This secret coming out so many years after created no little sensation among the gentleman's friends. In the audience I saw many who were more or less interested in the "underground railroad." The Giddings family were all present, among them Joshua Giddings, the old Abolitionist so long in Congress. [There is some mistake here. Joshua R. Giddings died in 1864 in Montreal, Canada.—Ed. CYNOSURE.] A stranger behind me said: "I came here to-night out of curiosity as my father often helped slaves that John Brown passed along toward freedom," and he told me that he saw several Quakers in the hall who had been unknown but prominent supporters of Brown. An old slave woman sat by the side of Ruth Brown Thompson, who was near John Brown when he was hanged, and told what her mistress said after the hanging, while upon the stage was a colored ex-senator who as a boy witnessed the execution.

Some months ago I happened at Las Casitas with Dr. Gleason of Elmira, N. Y., and Owen Brown agreed, after much persuasion, to relate his experiences on his famous trip from the North to the South with a colored man named Greene, who had volunteered to aid in the freeing of slaves. A more dramatic recital it would be difficult to imagine; a story of the greatest privation and danger, where starvation threatened them and captivity meant certain death. What impressed me as remarkable was that Owen Brown should remember the trip so accurately though it occurred over a quarter of a century ago. Every fence they crossed, every stream they swam was remembered, and the entire country, its mountains, streams, and valleys described in detail. No account of this adventurous trip has ever been published. It will afford a valuable addition to the history of that time and will probably be published by Mrs. Ruth Brown Thompson, who has many of her father's papers and documents. Henry Thompson, her husband, has a rifle that he captured from a man at the battle of Black Jack. Owen Brown has the glasses that his father carried in the field, and his daughter has a Bible marked by his hand, the verses marked in the main referring to slavery. Jason had a number of interesting relics, but they were unfortunately lost in the fires that three or four times destroyed his home in the Middle States.

Israel's apostasy began when she made alliance with the people of the land, and confessed that she was not strong enough to drive them out. The apostasy of the church begins at the same point. Whenever the church makes alliance with the world and becomes a respecter of persons, going after one class to the neglect of another, and confesses, either by declaration or action, that she is not equal to the task of evangelizing the world, her power is gone, and she must from that point decline.—G. F. Peck, recast.

THE LAST WORDS OF THE NAZARENE.

FROM A DISCOURSE IN THE HIGH STREET CHURCH, COLUMBUS, OHIO, BY THE PASTOR, REV. C. W. HIATT.

TEXT: "And when they were come to the place which is called Calvary there they crucified him, and the malefactors one on the right hand and the other on the left."—Luke 23:38.

With the tragedy of Calvary we can never grow too familiar, of it we can never properly tire. This is more than can be said of the masterpieces of fiction or history. The works of the English dramatist—Macbeth, Hamlet, Julius Caesar, Henry VIII. and the like—these are rightly claimed as models of historic art, and yet their characterizations are full of unrealness and in them is ever displayed a falsity of development. With the exception of certain passages, here and there, the great Shakespearean plays are such as grow "flat, stale, and unprofitable" under the scrutinizing eye.

History, too, gets a tone of flatness from oft perusal. Xenophon's "Cunaxa" thrills every school-boy and is high among descriptive chapters of prose. So Macaulay entrances, and Gibbons grows famous and infamous, and Hume inspires and Prescott delights by scenes in court and camp and temple and desert wild. But all these have their frailties and at length we grow weary with what at the first gave us in each new paragraph the exhilaration of a new surprise.

But I repeat it, with the tragedy of Calvary we can never grow too familiar and of it we can never properly tire. It is more thrilling from beginning to end than the finest creation of the genius of fiction, and it displays vaster realities than merely human pen has ever transcribed on historic page. It is the very perfection of naturalness and progression and climax. It is without a peer in all the world's wealth of art or chronicle. To say we are too familiar with this story, to say we are weary with its details is to make confession of woful lack of appreciation where language has done its greatest work.

Calvary may be viewed under two aspects,

AS A PAINTING AND AS A POEM.

I think I do not err in saying that the world usually looks upon it as a mere portrayal—a scene as it were, struck upon imperishable canvas by some immortal artist of old. As such this description may rank first in the galleries of art. Nowhere have the heights and depths of the human soul been revealed as here; nowhere has the eye fallen on such a grouping of virtue and diabolism, of the lovely and the hateful, of the manly and brutal, of the defile and the demoniacal. As a scene of suffering and cruelty it stands alone.

Mark the picture. Three crosses rising into prominence, freighted with limp and contorting burdens, and a tumultuous, dark-browed throng pressing to them on every side and filling the air with curses and jeers! Do we estimate the suffering of a crucifixion? When a man is to be executed nowadays a scaffolding is built in the prison yard. A mere handful of witnesses are on the scene. At the last moment the trembling culprit is led up the stair to his footing on the trap, a prayer is made, a rope adjusted, a spring touched. Clang goes the door, thump goes the body, twang the rope—a convulsion or two and all is over; but the by-standers are very, very pale and strangely sick. With a crucifixion it is vastly different. The body is stretched on the Lat-in cross. Nails are driven through the tenderest parts of the palms and imbedded in the wood. The cross is then lifted erect and dropped into the hole prepared. Spurt! goes the blood from the lacerated palms, and the horrors are fairly on. It is not an instantaneous death. No. One, two, three, four, five, six, and often nine long, weary terrible hours the body hangs—a hundred and fifty pounds by two nails through the hands—the blood following the nail, drip, drip, dropping to the earth.

Such was the suffering at Calvary. Surely no one remained to witness it. Alas! around the cross stood the gleeful populace. And here is revealed a cruelty unspeakable. We are told that the "passers by" reviled the central figure "wagging their heads." We see the chief priests and scribes and elders—dignitaries of the church, representatives of religion, trailing their robes in the mire, glorying in their shame—"mocking him" and taunting him of his faith in God. We see the soldiery gambling for the robes of that naked central sufferer and proffering him sour and bitter wine the while. Crucifixion was not enough of a torment. To it must be added the virulence of mocking gesture and bitter words. Where is there such a contrast as here? On the cross patience, quietude, humility and torture. Around the cross turbulence, malice, inhumanity, brutality! Here is revealed the basest and the noblest possibilities of the human soul.

This painting is graphic in its portrayal to the tragic end. We see the darkness growing deeper and deeper at the hour of noon, till it seems as though the king of day had hurled down his glittering diadem and cast away his shining shield, while over his prostrate form stalked the spectral, hideous figure of night. We see the dropping of the head on that central cross, when lo! the earth grows drunken, and in the highway chasms open, rocks are riven and graves yawn exposing their fearful contents, the crosses lean and sway, and the great crowd turn in terror from the spot, uttering dreadful cries and smiting their breasts as they run for life.

Such in outline is the painting of the cross. Such the train of horrors that the very mention of Calvary is apt to bring to the mind. As a painting it is unsurpassed, but Calvary can never teach its highest lesson as a scene. We fall far short of our privilege, when we rest with regarding it as a mere vivid, startling portrayal of a martyr's death.

The sweetest, most winsome lessons of the cross are

IN ITS WORDS.

The dying utterances of Jesus when grouped together are a matchless poem. Hear these sayings: "I thirst." "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do." "Woman, behold thy son," and to his disciple, "Behold thy mother." "This day shalt thou be with me in Paradise!" and "It is finished." Between these words there is room for cantos, and cycles, and epicycles, such as muses have never wrought in "Iliad" or "Inferno" or "Paradise Lost." Here in broken utterances is a Divine epic full of pathos and sweetness and grandeur.

1. In these words, my hearers, I find a profound and dual revelation:

(a) A revelation of the terrible nature of sin.

Jesus did not view the malevolence of that hour as hurled against himself, but as against the will of God. It was not so much persecution, as impiety. These people were committing sins against God. Hence, Jesus did not say, "I forgive them;" but rather, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do." Mark those words! In sinning against Heaven we know not what we do. Its infinite evil we cannot see. Those men knew they were doing wrong. They knew Jesus was innocent. They realized his fearful suffering. They knew they had placed him maliciously between two thieves as worst of the three. They were conscious of having added insult to injury: and yet they knew not their sin. "They know not." We sometimes imagine we have sounded our evil deeds and that they are not so bad after all. But who can measure sin? It is a missile sent careering among the delicate works of God, gathering momentum and devastating force with every instant of its eternal flight. A sin is a stroke of the axe in the trunk of a tender tree which ever after shall bear the scar. A sin unwholesome chariot of Providence. A sin ungears the whole machinery of God. In these words let the lesson remain. He that sinneth doth not, cannot know the awful, awful harm.

(b) Another revelation is here—a revelation of the Divine clemency. Jesus prays for those terrible sinners. "Father forgive." The first time in the history of man the innocent sufferer prays for his enemies. David was a grand religionist. He could confess his evil deeds and mourn for them, but he could not pray for his enemies. He rather implored the Most High to string his bow and let fly his arrows against his tormentors. He had not the spirit of the Christ, who (blessed be his name!) could say, "Forgive them! Forgive them! In the presence of this prayer let us stand with thanksgiving and awe, for here sin is revealed and with it the way of escape by the registered petition of the Son of God.

2. Again, in these last words of Jesus I find much of the magnetism of the cross.

Said the Teacher on one occasion: "I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto me." In the painting of Calvary we find a strange fascination. We know not what to term our feeling, whether fear or sympathy, or both. But in the poem, in the words, we find a plain reason for our fascination, and the result is definite; our hearts are drawn and won. The scene creates in us nameless sympathy; the words lead us into intelligent love.

(a) First of these magnetic sayings are those that expose a suffering humanity on that cross. "I thirst," and "My God! my God! why has thou forsaken me?" These words are irresistible to one who has ever felt or ever can feel for his fellow man. Thirst is a common experience. The soldier shot through the breast, with his life-blood ebbing away, unable to reach the limpid brook that bubbles in his ear, knows the torment that inspired that cry of Jesus. The sailor, floating for days on a spar in mid ocean with miles of tantalizing billows on every side, understands somewhat of the agony of Jesus.

The pilgrim who pitches faint and perishing into the desert sands, while gardens and fountains float in visions to his fevered brain, knows the meaning of those words, "I thirst." Every one who has stood seemingly alone in the world, all men's hands against him and even the face and promises of Divinity obscured, can appreciate that cry, "My God! my God! why hast thou forsaken me?" And in these, the heritage of humanity, thirst and loneliness, is ground for sympathy with that One hanging there; and sympathy is the first syllable of undying love. Here then is the first thread of magnetic influence which binds us to that cross—the cry of a fellow sufferer.

(b) Another thread of magnetism that reaches all hearts is the self-forgetfulness of Jesus, and his thoughtfulness for others. Hear this: "Woman, behold thy son;" and those other words, "Behold thy mother." We could have excused the martyr had he turned his agonized gaze entirely on himself. Had he given no thought to aught save that terrible murderous pain of nails and spear, no one could criticize. "This is but human," we had said. But little need of the saying, for out through those glazing eyes beams the look of love upon the mother. Sublime self-hiding, and this for a woman! Truly here is some explanation of the allegiance of our sisters and mothers to this Christ. Here is a way of accounting for the preponderance of women in the church. Until Jesus came woman had been a toy, or a slave, or worse, as the case might be. She had wandered and often crept with bleeding hands and feet across the burning marl of a hostile world. But Jesus gave her a place in his heart of hearts. He gave her his respect and love. Chivalry had its birth in the life, and its first prominent display at the cross of Christ. Let us not make light of the proportion of women in the church. Woman thus repays in part the love of her first true lover. From the beginning she has clung to this Friend.

"Not she with traitorous lips her Master stung,
Not she denied him with unfaithful tongue.
She, when the apostles fled, could dangers brave,
Last at the cross and earliest at the grave."

(c) Another powerful thread of magnetism drawing us to the cross is expressed in these words: "This day shalt thou be with me in Paradise." Hope is not buoyant in all hearts. Sometimes a fatal thought comes with crushing power: "I have sinned away my day." But Jesus places forever before the repentant soul a saying of cheer. In that sad spectacle, a thief, a murderer dying in shame, humanity recognizes its deserved, its natural end. The wages of sin is death. In the words of Jesus, humanity takes a new courage, and into the dry and barren heart there distills the gentle dew of hope. Let no false interpretation of narrow schools rob the living of the privilege of carrying, and the dying of the privilege of hearing, this message of Jesus to a perishing murderer!

Now I have mentioned some of the magnetic words. They fill the hearts of those who hear with sympathy and reverence and confidence. They are the cords that draw us and bind us forever to the cross of Christ.

3. Finally, the words of the cross contain a blessed ground of assurance to each believer in the Son of God. "It is finished." Thus spoke the Holy One and gave up the Ghost. It is said that those words were uttered with a loud voice. It was not a mere incoherent saying. It was a deliberate trumpet peal. To the uttermost marge of that vast crowd were heard the last words of their victim. "It is finished" was the cry of triumph, a victor's shout, and over the heads of by-standers and out into the ages it has gone and evermore will it reverberate.

What is finished? This must have been the query around that cross. "His thirst," said one, and trembled in remembrance of that mighty cry. "His life," said another. "Thirty-three years finished." "His work," said another. And well. Not simply the work of a carpenter's bench of a peasant, but the work of the Son of God.

The law is fulfilled. In all this life no jot nor tittle erased by evil act. Moses, who gave the law, could not keep it, but broke the table both on the mountain and in his life. Jesus came to fulfill, and his path through all the requirements of God is a shining way of righteousness, for he was obedient to the very death of the cross.

Prophecy is fulfilled. No longer need we look for the Shiloh, the Star and Scepter of Israel; no longer for the Rose of Sharon or the Lily of the Valley; no longer for the Man of Sorrows and acquainted with grief; Messianic prophecy shall be no more. It is finished. The Wonderful, the Counsellor, the Everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace, the mighty God, has come. See, there he hangs. In his last moment we mark the fulfilling of all prophetic writ, and not we alone, for even pagan soldier feels impelled to cry, "Truly, this was the Son of God." Redemption "is finished." "It is finished," the great work of redemption. Not begun on this cross, nay, from the "foundation of the world" was slain this "Lamb," but finished there. No more atonement for sin. All is done. "It is finished." And upon these words Christians stand as upon eternal rock.

And now we leave these sayings, these dying words of the Nazarene. But shall their influence leave us ever? Ill can we, who cherish the utterances of our passing companions, ill can we afford to lose the tones, the dying tones of our nearest, our dearest Friend. Write these words on the whitest, the innermost tables of the heart. By their revelation as to sin and to heavenly clemency they will stimulate to the noblest, holiest living. They will draw upon the best affections by the truest magnetism of the cross. They will furnish firm foundation to your faith and action. Inspired by the "It is finished" of Jesus, it will not be hard to believe, not hard to do, not hard to die for him, for even dying will seem but falling asleep to awake in the eternal arms.

UNITED BRETHREN CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION.

The General Constitutional Association of the United Brethren in Christ held its third annual session in Dayton, Ohio, July 19th to 21st, 1887.

It is a well known fact that there is an element in the United Brethren church who call themselves "liberals," who have been laboring for a score of years to break down the testimony of the church against the secret lodge system. This element succeeded by some means or other in obtaining a majority in the General Conference of 1885; and at once proceeded to adopt measures by which to accomplish their purpose. But unfortunately for them they got the cart before the horse; and adopted a "method" which the opposite party (the conservatives) hold to be purely unconstitutional. Hence the latter have adopted the convention and petition plans by which to defeat, if possible, the efforts and purpose of the liberals to open the door of the church for the admission of members of all secret orders.

There were in the late convention a larger delegation from abroad than at any previous convention, among whom was some of the best talent of the church. The presence and counsel of such men as Dr. L. Davis, Wm. Dillon, and Halleck Floyd, of Dayton, Ohio; President C. H. Kircacof, of Hartsville College, Indiana; H. T. Barnaby, W. S. Titus, J. K. Allwood and C. L. Wood, of Michigan; R. Loggan, of Kansas; S. Austin, of Nebraska, and others, is not to be ignored. Every address, and every action of the convention was expressive of the most determined purpose to never submit to the unconstitutional measures adopted by the liberal leaders. Not that the conservatives think it unlawful to change or amend the organic law of the church. But if changed it must be done according to the provisions in the constitution. When change is thus effected we will either submit or quietly withdraw from the church. The unanimous conviction of the convention was that conservatives should not vote on the proposed constitution and confession of faith, but petition the General Conference direct to make no change therein.

There were present in the sessions of the convention, from first to last, a number of leading liberals, viz., Bishop Weaver, Dr. Hott, Dr. Landis, Dr. Funkhouser, Dr. Berger, Dr. Warner, and a number of others minus the D. D., either or all of whom were invited to participate in the deliberations and to defend their cause, if they could. But not a word of a defense was offered.

The arguments offered in opposition to the commission act were conclusive and irrefutable. A prominent member of Summit Street U. B. church, who is said to be a liberal, said to a delegate of the convention that the "liberals were getting facts from the convention that they would not soon forget." Bishop Weaver sent in a written suggestion that the convention discuss the idea of discrimination between the major and the minor orders as a means of compromise. This is somewhat remarkable, since the Bishop had just said to a delegate of the convention that they (the liberals) "could not discriminate." It would seem to indicate that they need help to "let the bear go."

The "outlook" in favor of the conservative movement is daily becoming more hopeful. The convention arranged for a general convention next year, in North Ohio Conference, and two district conventions, one in northern Illinois, and one west of the Mississippi river. The conservative heaven is working admirably. W. W. KNIPPLE.

REFORM NEWS.

THE STATE CONVENTIONS.

A card from Bro. Geo. Warrington, president, says, "The Iowa State meeting is appointed for the third Tuesday in October next at College Springs." This is a good location so far as local sentiment is concerned, and if proportionately sustained by other localities in the State a grand rally may be held with excellent effect. The programme for speakers has not yet been announced, but the efficiency of the State Executive Committee and of the friends in Iowa is a sufficient guarantee for an "A No. 1" bill of fare. The location is favorable for Missouri friends, and would it not be well for the brethren in that State to bestir themselves and arrange for a meeting either the preceding or following week? Speakers from abroad could attend both conventions, if desired, and save expense and give added strength to the cause. Kansas would naturally and appropriately come next in order after these two conventions, and there is no State where work is more needed. Will not Pres. Bro. J. D. Richards give this matter his early attention?

Dea. M. R. Britten has been looking up the question of a State meeting in Wisconsin, and although he reports a lack of courage and faith on the part of some of the brethren whom he has interviewed, yet we still hope for a gathering of the forces in that State during the fall or early winter. Many of the veterans have been written to and will doubtless be heard from soon on the subject.

The New Hampshire State Executive Committee has selected Manchester as the place and October 29, 30 and 31 as the time of their annual gathering. Secretary Kimball writes hopefully, has a good programme with able speakers and asks for a representative of the N. C. A. to present the general work and aid the local organization in their struggle against the lodge.

Bro. Conant is pioneering the way for a meeting in Connecticut, and several have responded favorably to letters sent to Indiana. It is hoped that a strong convention may be secured in that State and Bro. M. N. Butler sustained as its lecturer during the year. Only part of those to whom I have written in this matter have responded. Will not others who have received letters or who feel interested in this work in Indiana write me soon. The harvest is past; the evenings are lengthening; the judgments of God are abroad in the land, and it is time to stir ourselves and each other up on this direct issue now joined between the true and false worshipers in this land. Let us unite as one man for Christ and his kingdom against Satan and his lodge; and let us be greatly encouraged by the evidence from the South of the power of the truth.

A CHANGE OF BASE.

CHAMBERSBURG, Pa., Aug. 2, 1887.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—We left Richmond, Va., not because there was not work to do but because we wished to visit some parts of Pennsylvania before the beginning of the Fall Conferences of the Wesleyan Methodist church which Bro. Cole desires to attend. We went to West Point on York River, a place of much note during the Rebellion. It was between here and the James that the great battles of 1862 were fought under McClellan. The river from thence to the mouth is very broad and resembles the Potomac and the James. We took passage in a fine sea-going steamer for Baltimore and started in nearly the opposite course from the point to which we expected to go. There was not much of interest along this river until we reached Yorktown, which was just at dusk. We stopped at Gloucester Point, nearly opposite, and could dimly see in the distance the monument erected to commemorate the surrender of Cornwallis. Night closed down on us, and we saw none of the beauties of Chesapeake Bay till the next morning when we were about half-way from the city of Baltimore to the Capes. The upper part of the bay was full of ships of all sorts and was very beautiful. We passed Bay View, a new watering place, and near by the old city of Annapolis in the distance. By and by we came to the mouth of the Patuxent river and at 8:30 A. M. had crowded our way among the great mass of ships and steamers to the wharf in Baltimore.

It might seem strange that we should have come here by such a roundabout way, but it was cheaper and pleasanter than to have come direct. We stayed in that city till 4 P. M. and called on several friends. Then we took the Western Maryland railroad for Chambersburg, where we arrived at 8:30 P. M. Since then we have been most hospitably entertained by the staunch friends of the King St. U. B. church, some of whom had but just returned from their successful convention at Dayton, Ohio. On Saturday we visited Rev. J. M. Bishop in the country, who, in absence of the pastor, had charge of the Sabbath services.

On Sunday Bro. Cole preached morning and at night in King St. church; and on Monday night we spoke to the people at the A. M. E. Zion church in this city. To-night the W. C. T. U. have planned a public meeting to be held in the court house to be addressed by Bro. Cole and others, and to-morrow night a lecture is announced at Fayetteville. From here we expect to go down the valley towards Harrisburg and thence turn west, as Bro. Cole expects to be at Cleveland on the 17th inst. The colored people here, including the preachers, are following the example of their white "brethren" in belonging to the lodges. Nevertheless they heard us kindly and it is hoped to some profit.

REFORM NOTES.

GRAND HAVEN, Mich., July 30, 1887.

When I say that Rev. Wm. Morrow is pastor of a Presbyterian congregation at Bloom, Ill., and that it is the only congregation in Chicago Presbytery that use exclusively the Bible Psalms (and not the New Version either), then the reader should not marvel at the relative statement, that this congregation is the only one in that Presbytery that will not fellowship members of secret orders. There are a good many sentiments in those old Psalms that are adverse to secretism, if I had time to quote them. I wonder if the leaders of the anti-secret reform have ever reflected on this fact, that there is no Psalm-singing church in the land which does not rule out members of secret orders? Of course, once in a while one will get in to these churches, but it is contrary to their discipline. Bro. Morrow is a strong friend of the Cynosure. In his younger days he joined the Good Templars, but has long since given it up, and advises his young people to keep out, for it amounts to little more than a courting society. I preached morning and evening in his church, and had with me in the evening Bro. B. F. Worrell, formerly Gov. St. John's pastor at Olathe, Kansas. Bro. W. is visiting his son at Washington Heights.

The previous Sabbath I spent at Dover, and Yorkville, Racine Co., Wis. There are good friends of radical reform here, giving a collection of $15.25 for National Reform. Samuel Wilson, who took me to and from the station, and lodged me at his hospitable farm house, is a strong Anti-mason. He was brought up near Belfast, Ireland, and well remembers the discussion over the Masonic murder of Wm. Miller, more than a generation ago. He remembers when about seventeen years of age being felled to the ground by a heavy blow from a Mason, because he said that Masonry was responsible for this murder.

The next Sabbath I preached at Arlington and Lodi, Wis., thirty miles north of Madison. On the way I spent an afternoon at the capital, visiting the pastors and distributing reform literature. S. L. Hastings, treasurer of the National Prohibition Committee, resides here. I spent some time with him talking over the future prospects of prohibition. I tried to impress him with the idea that the best element in that party was growing more opposed to the tactics of secretism, and that the party must ultimately be fractured unless these tactics were discarded.

Mr. Hastings talked in the spirit of a courteous gentleman. Like Mr. Finch he has given most of his time to building up Good Templarism, and holds a high office in that order. He is a most intimate friend and counsellor of Mr. Finch. You seldom see them separated at public meetings. Mr. Hastings told me he asked Mr. Finch why he was so abusive in his reply to Secretary J. P. Stoddard at Lake Bluff. His reply was, "Because the Association he represents have published so much against me as a Good Templar."

Rev. J. D. Smith, the pastor at Arlington, is a radical anti-secret man, and had his church at Arlington filled for me Sabbath morning, and a union service of four congregations in the Baptist church at Lodi in the evening. Here a large choir chanted the twenty-fourth Psalm, in such a way as would have enthused Bro. Warrington and Bro. Faris. Bro. Smith and his people sing nothing but Psalms in public worship, and they allow no members of secret orders in their communion.

I met Rev. Peter Kosten on the train. He is pastor of the Holland Christian Reform church of Oostburg, Wis. His denomination numbers eighty congregations. They hold their service in the Holland language, and have their college and publishing house at Grand Rapids, Mich. They are a segment of the Dutch Reformed church, which separated some years ago from that church, because its Synod would not rule out members of secret orders, and sing only the Bible Psalms in worship. These old Holland Christians still sing the Psalms, and as a result they cannot fellowship secret societies.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE WORLD NEVER SAW THE LIKE.

A WHOLE BAPTIST ASSOCIATION IN ARKANSAS TAKES THE LORD'S SIDE AGAINST THE BAAL-WORSHIP OF THE LODGE!

PINE BLUFF, Ark.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—The St. Marion District Association (colored Baptist) convened near Verner, Lincoln county, Arkansas, Wednesday, July 20, 1887. At this meeting a resolution was presented against secret societies by Mr. Luke Ross, an earnest and devout Christian who accepted Christ about two years ago, and rejected Satan and his emissaries, the lodge and liquor traffic. Many of the members of the association laughed the resolution to scorn and moved to table it. But this thing was of the Lord; he had a hand in the fight, and it was made the order of the day for the afternoon. This gave both sides a chance to prepare for the fray. Friend Rev. C. C. Foote will be pleased to learn that the last parcel of tracts were of much service. The hour at last came.

"The fire of conflict burned within,
The battle trembled to begin."

The field was contested by both sides with much vigor. Those in favor of lodgery—and they were not few—presented the usual arguments and some cogent reasons, as they thought, why this question should not be touched: "The strength of the lodge;" "Tear the churches to pieces;" "Many would leave the church before they would quit the lodge;" "It is dangerous to oppose them." "At Wabbaseca a prominent minister asserted that those who opposed the lodge would have to leave the country for safety or in search of bread and butter."

The anti-secret side claimed that the life of the church depended on their action: they had been false to covenant vows and God too long; that societies were eating the life out of the church, spiritual and financial: many prefer the lodge to the church: money is given to support them instead of to support the church: must followers of the meek and lowly Jesus, who taught by precept and example to withdraw from such, stand still while the lodges feed upon it like wolves and vultures? Men go round upon the ignorant, selling exposed secrets.

Many of the brethren confessed that they knew it was wrong to countenance secret societies, much greater wrong to belong to them, and that henceforth they would oppose them.

When the vote was about to be taken, Rev. Geo. Robinson (formerly a Mason), pastor of St. Paul Baptist church of Pine Bluff, which has about 2,000 members, and who was moderator, arose and said:

"Brethren, we are about to vote for or against this resolution. It presents two sides. The worship of God and the worship of Baal—the church and lodge—Christ and Satan. Much has been said; but we want you to show now upon whose side you are. Those who favor the resolution—for God, Christ and his church, take the right-hand side. That is the side on which he places his people. Those for Baal worship, or the lodge, take the left-hand side. I advise all to get on God's side." The vote stood 76 for the resolution and 4 against it.

THE VOTE WAS THEN MADE UNANIMOUS!

One incident is worthy of mention. All went to the right-hand side except Rev. L. D. Betts of Fairfield, Jefferson county, Arkansas (who has been a great society man, and to whom a copy of the Cynosure would be acceptable). The question was put him as he stood there alone, "On whose side are you?" He replied, "On both sides. I am for God and the lodge too." The retort was made, "We don't see you but on one side, and that is on the side of Baal." He replied, "I am not going to forsake my church and people for the society, and I'll appear on the Lord's side, too, and suiting the action to the word, he joined the right-hand side amid shouts and applause.

Thus the resolution was made unanimous, That all Baptist ministers of St. Marion District Association withdraw from all secret societies and condemn them from the pulpit and purge them from the church; that no minister or church will hereafter be admitted to this Association who affiliates with secret societies; and that all solemnly promise to wage uncompromising war against this evil.

Rev. J. C. Battles is worthy special commendation for the active part taken in this matter as well as that of temperance. At the time he withdrew from the societies his church was small. Last year it numbered seventy-one. He undertook to reform it. All secret society members were expelled, together with whisky-drinkers and cigar-smokers. Then was predicted his overthrow and the church's downfall. At that time they paid him ten cents per member per month. He has been abundantly blessed. The church has rapidly increased and now numbers 128, and each one pays twenty-five cents. His Sabbath-school has doubled and gives the best report of any in the district. The temperance question finds in him an able advocate. His worst foes have become his admirers. Mr. Charles Epperson, who said the church could not exist without secret societies, is now one of their bitterest foes.

Yours for reform, LEWIS JOHNSTON.

AN INTERRUPTED INSTALLATION.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Herewith I send you a clipping from the Sacramento (Cal.) Bee. How much of truth is in it, I cannot vouch; but that it is not superlatively courteous in the use of words about the Mason's wife, will be manifest to most readers. It is as follows:

"At Folsom, on Wednesday evening, a Masonic installation was interrupted in a way which will strike terror to the hearts of those husbands who have been in the habit of pleading 'lodge business' when arriving at home at early hours in the morning. It seems that in Folsom there resides a member of the ancient and mystic order, and that he has a strong-minded wife, who has time and time again inveighed against secret societies as an invention of the devil, designed to drive to distraction wives who are compelled to remain at home during installations, elections, initiations, exemplification of degrees, etc. On the particular occasion referred to, the installation ceremonies lasted even longer than usual, and the wife—who, it is stated, is not endowed with an angelic disposition—fumed and fretted as she waited at home for the appearance of her better half. At last, when the short hand on the clock pointed to the figure 4, she could stand it no longer, so she marched to the hall and demanded admittance. Of course this was refused by the outside guardian, but the irate woman swept past him, burst open the door, walked into the midst of the assemblage, seized her husband by an ear, led him to the head of the stairway, and actually threw him down stairs. He was somewhat 'broke up' by the treatment of his spouse, but she marched him home in triumph. It is safe to say that the husband's participation in installation ceremonies will be concluded at an early hour hereafter."

The reading of this spicy item of gossip leads the writer to say: Let every Mason's wife do likewise, in order to: 1. To teach husbands that wives have some rights that "white men are bound to respect;" 2. To show to the people that if women would do their duty, or even demand a due regard to their own rights, the lodge system, which, like owls, prefer darkness to light for its deeds that will not bear the light of the sun, might soon be "among the things that were, but are no more." N. R. J.

CHRIST AND INSPIRATION.

ABILENE, KANSAS.

Christ said all things written concerning him in the prophets, in the law and in the Psalms must be accomplished. All that pertained to him before his ascension were fulfilled—and reason with faith tells me that all else will in the fullness of time be verified. He will come again.

Those men having foretold events to come were just and Divinely enlightened; for the natural mind scans not the future. God only is the fountain of light and life. Christ said, "I am the light of the world." Why not receive the truth so plainly given? But some, to keep aloof from acknowledging inspiration, claim for the prophetic developments recorded in the Bible that they were the result of human agencies working out through the avenues of truth. Marvelous indeed! Please tell us, what is truth? Christ said, "I am the way, the truth and the life." Then why not admit inspiration by the Spirit of God? He is the source of light, truth and life; the source of all knowledge based upon truth. No man could write as the prophets and apostles except the Spirit of God give him thoughts and teach him what to write. So the preacher inspired is luminous and exact; but if he be only moved by the spirit of the world he is often in darkness and in untruth. Every cause has its moving impetus, and there is an inspiration of the wicked one, the devil. Hence "the word of God comes by hearing; but how can they hear without a preacher, and how can they preach unless they be sent?" Surely those sent out by men preach after a worldly sort, in a freezing manner; sometime bewitchingly.

How many Pilates still ask, What is truth? Christ in God is the truth—out of him there is no truth. They who disbelieve Christ and his inspired ones, will not believe this message. Go read the eighth chapter of Proverbs and therein learn that, Wisdom was in the beginning with God; and he it is who enlightens every inventor, and every discoverer of new scientific principles. But most of men seem to have no thought of recognition; they seem to say, each, "I have done it." This wisdom was made flesh and dwelt among men, Jesus Christ our Lord, inspirer of the just, and more fully of the spirit-born. H. W. SMITH.

A GREAT FIGHT.

EDITORS CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—You have grappled with a powerful enemy. Compared with the task you have undertaken the fabled labors of Hercules were trifling. You are right with regard to secret societies; they are the enemies of religion and of human liberty. All secret societies are baneful, and the Masonic is the parent of them all, and the head of Masonry is monarchy. In most, if not all, secret societies, Masons are the leaders.

I remember the Morgan excitement well. My father was a Mason, but he never entered a lodge after that foul murder. The tempting bait secret societies hold out are benefits. When governments are founded upon the fraternal and virtuous principles taught by Jesus, the nation will be a benefit association.

The head of the Catholic church, though shorn of his temporal power, is still the friend of monarchy, the aider and abettor of the oppressors of mankind. But the end of these times must come; and, according to the words of the prophets of God, the time is near at hand. And there is, besides, another sign—the prevailing ungodliness in crime and corruption, proving that the day of retribution will soon come. ANTI-MASON.

A CORRECTION.

It was recently stated in the Cynosure that the pamphlet, "My Experiences with Secret Societies; by a Traveler," was written by the son of an Anti-mason. It is the production of the latter from personal knowledge, and therefore of one who is entitled by age and experience to confidence. Having been importuned by members to join the Masonic lodge, I have found from experience and observation, and, unrestrained by oaths and complicities, present in this volume a reason for this importunity to the public who have noted such solicitations without suspecting for them a hidden motive. The pitfalls and deadfalls of the lodge are laid bare without a sacrifice of intonation fee or independence, rendering the book indispensable to the reformer and an invaluable present for anxious friends to the uninitiated traveler, the unwary and the young. The lodge is a shield for criminals and murderers, from the abortionist to the avenger, and the public is urgently invited to a perusal for the proof. It is a narrative of chicanery and murder, sustained by precedent and illustrated by engravings from actual scenes. A TRAVELER.

BIBLE LESSON.

STUDIES IN THE NEW TESTAMENT.

LESSON VIII.—August 21.—Jesus and the Law—Matt. 5: 17-26.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Think not that I am come to destroy the law or the prophets; I am not come to destroy, but to fulfill.—Matt. 5: 17.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

COMMENTS ON THE LESSON BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The True Mission of Christ—not to Destroy but to Fulfill. vs. 17-20. The Jews had entirely forgotten that there was any spiritual meaning behind the laws given by Moses. Their teachers had for centuries overlaid them with meaningless traditions. Christ tore away all this rabbinical rubbish and revealed the law in its real majesty and purity, fixed on principles of eternal right, and not to be changed by any folly of human interpretation. It is a great mistake to talk of little sins. There is no sin so small that its results do not reach into eternity, and a seemingly trivial neglect of duty may be the entering wedge, separating the soul from God forever. The Rabbins, like the modern Romish church, separated sins into two classes, small and great, deadly and venial, and drew absurdly fine distinctions between them. This is all contrary to Christ's teaching, that he who broke the least commandment and taught others to do it, though he might himself be saved, so as by fire, should be esteemed the least in the heavenly kingdom, while he who both taught and practiced them should be the most highly exalted. It is not enough to be as good as other men, even as good as professed Christians. The standard set before us must be nothing short of the divine righteousness. The tendency of human nature is to judge of right and wrong according as popular opinion or practice judges it. Sometimes it goes a step farther, and takes the standard of certain ministers and religious papers. These say, for instance, that high license is the only right way and prohibition is a chimera. But even the church is not good enough nor wise enough to do our thinking for us as regards a question of morals or duty. Our resort must be to the law and the testimony. Our righteousness must exceed the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees.

2. Love the True Meaning of the Law. vs. 21-26. Christ established the principle of universal brotherhood. Neither race, class, creed nor color does he recognize as outside the line. It is characteristic of anti-Christ to seem to teach truths identical with those he taught, while in fact they are the very opposite. Thus Freemasonry and Odd-fellowship pretend to teach this principle, while debarring from membership a large part of the human race for no better reason than because they have a dark skin. The "brotherly love" taught by the secret orders is worse than a sham. It is a lie of Satan to keep men out of the true brotherhood, to make them think that selfishness is benevolence, and charity the payment of lodge dues, hoping to receive as much again. With all our Sabbath-schools and lesson helps and Chatauquan assemblies there is much ignorance of practical Christianity, or the multitudes would not be deceived by these professions of the lodge. Nor would so many who ought to know better believe the miserable fallacy that the only way to deal with the saloon is to restrict it,—in other words, that the Government which can and does prohibit murder and theft, cannot prohibit an evil which causes 90 per cent of all the murders committed, and steals from the nation's working classes, annually, millions upon millions of their hard-earned money. Logic and reason ought to teach everybody that if one evil can be prohibited another can, and the Gospel should teach every Christian that the question is not whether it is possible to stop the traffic, but ought it to be stopped? A man cannot truly love his brother and withhold his vote, his prayers or his personal influence to fight this fell destroyer of the race.

Notes of Rev. Dr. Brookes in the Truth.

I. It is a serious mistake to suppose that the law has been set aside by the work of Christ. On the other hand it has been kept and honored and vindicated, all of its claims having been met, and its requirements observed, and its penalty endured by our divine substitute. Psa. 40: 6-8; Isa. 42: 21; Rom. 3: 24-26; 8: 3, 4; Gal. 3: 10, 13.

II. Our Lord then asserts most positively the truth of verbal inspiration, for till heaven and earth pass, not the smallest Hebrew letter, looking somewhat like our comma, not the least turn or twist of a single letter of the Hebrew Alphabet, shall pass from the law. 2 Tim. 3: 16, 17; 2 Pet. 1: 21; 1 Cor. 2: 12, 13; 14: 37; 1 Thes. 2: 13; 4: 8; Ex. 4: 10-12; 2 Sam. 23: 2; Jer. 1: 6-9; Zech. 7: 12.

III. The least commandment. He teaches us, of its infinite importance, for whosoever shall keep the whole law, and yet offend in one point he is guilty of all, and condemned beyond all hope of escape by his own efforts. Jas. 2: 10; Deut. 27: 26; Rom. 3: 19, 20; Isa. 44: 6; 1 John 1: 8, 10.

IV. Hence men must have a better righteousness than that attained by the most conscientious and pains-taking religionists, or they shall in no case enter into the kingdom. In other words, by personal obedience to the law no child of Adam can be saved. Rom. 3: 20, 21; 4: 4, 5; 5: 19, 10: 1-4; 2 Cor. 5: 21; Tit. 3: 5.

V. Many imagine that because they have committed no murder, they have kept the commandment, "Thou shalt not kill;" but our Lord teaches that anger cherished in the heart, or contempt for our fellows, exposes the soul to the danger of hell fire. 1 John 3: 15; Mark 7: 21; Gal. 5: 21; Rev. 21: 8; 22: 15.

VI. The law then may be regarded as the adversary of the sinner, since it exposes the wickedness of his heart, and he can agree with that adversary quickly, only as he sees its demands met in the person of Christ, and by faith accepts the redemption purchased for him at infinite cost. Rom. 4: 5; 15: 13, 20; 7: 4, 23-33; 8: 1, 2; 9: 30-32; Gal. 4: 4, 5; Phil. 3: 5-9; Eph. 1: 7.

VII. The rejection or neglect of Christ, so freely offered in the Gospel, is certain and remediless ruin. Men may think as they please, but God will do as he says. They are inventing a great many false theories, like future probation, annihilation, final restoration, in order to indulge in sin with the hope of escaping its just and everlasting consequences, but Jesus teaches that if they die un saved, they shall never leave the prison house of despair. Matt. 25: 41, 46; Mark 9: 43-48; 16: 16; John 3: 36; 2 Thes. 1: 7-9; 2: 11, 12; Heb. 9: 28; 2 Pet. 2: 17; Jude 12-15; Rev. 19: 9-11; 20: 10.

IN BRIEF.

The Vanderbilts, of New York, are said to be starting fifty houses on Staten Island, which are to be sold at cost to purchasers on yearly installments. Each deed is accompanied by a life insurance policy for balance of mortgage, which should the purchaser's death occur before the completion of his payments, cancels the debt and gives his heirs the property clear. It is said that this plan will be carried out elsewhere as well as in Staten Island.

A young lady was sitting with her lover in a charmingly decorated recess. On her knee was a diminutive niece. In an adjoining room, with the door open, were the rest of the company. Says the little niece, in a jealous and very audible voice: "Auntie, kiss me too." I leave you to imagine what had happened. "You should say twice, Ethel, dear; two is not grammar," was the immediate rejoinder. Clever girl.—Critic.

It is claimed that the largest collection of meteorites in the United States, if not in the world, is at Amherst College. It embraces more than 500 specimens, weighing about 1200 pounds. The largest meteoric iron, procured from Colorado, weighs 436 pounds, and the smallest, from New York, half an ounce; the largest entire meteoric stone, one from Ohio, weighs 56 pounds, and the smallest, from Sweden, less than 50 grains. The first specimen on the list fell in Alsace, November 7, 1492. The Yale College collection of meteorites numbers 147, of a weight of about 1956 pounds. The largest single mass known weighs 25 tons, and is now in Stockholm; the next in size, weighing 10 tons, is in Copenhagen; one of 5 tons is at the British Museum; St. Petersburg has one of 1680 pounds; Yale College, one of 1635 pounds; and the Smithsonian Institution, one of 1400 pounds.

Recent careful investigation shows that the duration of human life in Connecticut is greater than it was a generation ago. In a population of 700,000, twenty-three centenarians were unearthed in 1884; but without premeditated punning on so serious a subject, it must be admitted that three of this number were committed to earth during the year mentioned. Of those over ninety years old, 651 were found; nine were ninety-nine; thirteen were ninety-eight, and eleven were ninety-seven. A generation ago only one person in 500 lived to become an octogenarian; now one per cent of the entire population reaches the ripe old age of eighty; while the average age of 6,223 persons is eighty three years. Of these, more than two-thirds are women, and only eight of the twenty-three centenarians are men. A majority of the centenarians, also, are married, although two spinsters and two old bachelors have entered on their second hundred years.

It is a well-known fact that the vast bulk of the heat contained in coal is wasted. Only fourteen out of the hundred parts of carbon is actually utilized. Hence, one of the problems of chemistry has been to get more power, in the way of heat and light, out of a given quantity of coal. Prof. T. S. C. Lowe claims to have solved this problem, a matter which is of vast importance, if it is a fact. The process is to pulverize the coal, and in converting it into a gas, the coal is reduced to a powdered form so fine that it will float in the atmosphere, and it is carried into the burning furnace by a current of air artificially produced. In the powdered form everything is consumed, as it makes no smoke and leaves no ashes. This would utilize the mountains of so-called waste, now piled up near coal mines and manufactories. But Prof. Lowe's invention goes farther. The coal is converted into a water gas. A ton of anthracite coal will generate from eighty to a hundred cubic feet of gas. The cost will be about nine cents a cubic foot. This invention is already in use in the city of Troy, in the laundries of that place, and is also used for power and for heating and cooking in hotels and restaurants. The gas furnished is not luminous and resembles that from alcohol. It has no odor and is intensely hot. These facts have come out in a report to the Scranton Board of Trade, which calls the new invention anthracite gas. The result will be a marvelous economy in the heating of houses and the cooking of food, while one ton of coal will go as far as a hundred tons nowadays.

SECRET SOCIETIES Condemned

BY THE PRESS.

United Presbyterian, Pittsburg.—Secret societies are not suited to American society, nor indeed to any society.

The Armory.—Surely the presence of a multitude of secret combinations bodes little good to the church of Christ.

Wesleyan Methodist.—Never say again that Freemasonry has no secrets. It has secrets, dark as ever revealed in the midnight caves of professional banditti, or stalked the deck of a pirate craft.

The Watchman, Boston.—Garrison fought the battle of free speech in behalf of Abolition; Pierpont waged it on the question of temperance; Colver fought it against secret societies.

Christian Standard, Cincinnati.—We know of no good work for God or humanity to the success of which secrecy is essential; and we see dangers in secret associations which every Christian should avoid.

Catholic Review, New York.—It is becoming apparent that secret, oath bound societies are, in principle, un-American; are contrary to the whole spirit and meaning of our institutions, and are therefore dangerous to the Republic.

Baptist Weekly, New York.—There is no union which men can form, making an inner circle of self-interest and tyrannically dictating to those without it, which is not the grossest violation of every true principle of human brotherhood.

Evangelical Repository.—We charge against these organizations: first, that they contain a system of religion; and, secondly, they are devised and built up after the traditions of men, after the rudiments of this world, and not after Christ.

The New York Witness.—Any society which demands from its members a loyalty superior to their loyalty to the general interests and well-being of the community in which they live, such as the church of Rome, the Nihilists, the Mormons and the Freemasons, is dangerous to the well being of the state and should be shunned by all good men.

Journal, Indianapolis, 1880.—The Democrats are attempting to carry this State by secret societies. They hope to overcome a popular uprising by midnight meetings and by grips and passwords. . . . The loyal men of Indiana will spurn their midnight methods. A State which numbers two millions of people cannot be governed by grips and passwords.

Times, Chicago, Aug. 22, 1880.—Secret societies are dangerous because young men, and others who are not for the moment fully mindful of their public duties, may be led by persuasion, under the peculiar solemnity and impressiveness of an initiation which unseats their judgment, to take oaths which are inconsistent with their duties toward the state and society, and which they may regret, in moments of reflection, that they have taken.

Public Ledger, Philadelphia.—Notwithstanding the presence of thousands of otherwise innocent men in the Masonic lodge, it is well understood that a ring within a ring runs the order, and the order in turn runs such innocent societies as the Good Templars, Red Men and nearly or quite all the so-called secret beneficiary societies. . . . The danger arising from such conspiracies is not imaginary but real. If the truth were known we are suffering from nothing so much as from this evil. And the worst of all is that good men who have gone into the various secret lodges are being used for ends of which they little dream.

The Advance, Chicago.—A Masonic writer in the New York Herald is quoted as saying that Masonry is "an effort to bring all mankind to a common religion; to harmonize the mysteries of Christianity, Judaism and paganism; for the most scholarly Masons hold that there is only one religion, and that religion is the worship of deity under the image of the sun." If the above is a correct enunciation of Masonic doctrine, the less Christians have to do with it the better. Indeed, it would seem to be equally inconsistent for the honest Jew to be identified with these sun-worshippers. . . . The inference is fair that Masonry and Christianity do not harmonize.

THE CHURCHES VS. LODGERY.

The following denominations are committed by vote of their legislative assemblies or by constitution to a separation from secret lodge worship:

Adventists (Seventh-day).
Baptists—Primitive, Seventh-day and Scandinavian.

Brethren (Dunkers or German Baptists).

Christian Reformed Church.
Church of God (Northern Indiana Eldership).

Congregational—The State Associations of Illinois and Iowa have adopted resolutions against the lodge.

Disciples (in part).

Friends.
Lutherans—Norwegian, Danish, Swedish and Synodical Conferences.

Mennonites.
Methodists—Free and Wesleyan.

Methodist Protestant (Minnesota Conference).
Moravians.

Plymouth Brethren.
Presbyterian—Associate, Reformed and United.

Reformed Church (Holland Branch).
United Brethren in Christ.

Individual churches in some of these denominations should be excepted, in part of them even a considerable portion.

The following local churches have, as a pledge to disfellowship and oppose lodge worship, given their names to the following list as

EDITORS.

HENRY L. KELLOGG.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, AUGUST 11, 1887.

ELDER S. C. KIMBALL expects a W. C. T. U. speech from Miss Flagg at the annual meeting of the Christian Association of New Hampshire. This meeting occurs at Manchester, the largest city in the State, on the last three days of October. Miss Flagg is a charming writer and will probably use a manuscript. Other good speaking will fill the three days and great good will be done.

President C. A. Blanchard has returned from Washington and reports a pleasant visit with Prof. Bailey. The N. C. A. will soon receive his report. Six hundred dollars have been added to the salary of Mr. Bailey's clerkship, by his advancement to a higher grade. He has preached in several of the city pulpits, and labored abundantly in his city mission. Doubtless good has been done by the purchase of the Washington building, and the nearly four years' labor of Mr. Bailey expended there. But nothing will destroy the secret lodge system but a complete separation and divorce of those who practice its false worship from both church and state. The Old Testament histories clearly show this. President Finney, in his book, states that after the fall of the lodges in 1826-36, the general, if not universal belief of Christians was that they never would rise again. But there are now twelve times as many Masons in the United States as there were before Morgan's murder; to say nothing of the host of "orders" bearing the same image and superscription. We need more labor and prayer in opposition to the lodge at such a center as Washington, or the lodge will grow steadily and displace both the Christian religion and the government of the United States, by simple secret rivalry and substitution.

THE UNITED BRETHREN CONVENTION.

The Conservator, Aug. 4, gives a full report of the General Convention of United Brethren at Dayton, July 19-21, to bring out and unite the sentiment of that interesting church against changes proposed in their constitution; which will, if adopted, change the history and character of that interesting denomination, by giving all secret societies, little and large, a quiet home and resting place in its communion.

The convention was a large one; one hundred and fifty delegates, representing sixteen conferences, were present. The speeches were able, and the spirit harmonious; and one would think all lovers of the principles and memories of that body would bleed inwardly to witness the struggles of that noble body of men to free their communion from coils of the lodge-serpent, which has crept in through the door opened by worldliness and craft in their leaders. If the Telescope and the bishops would go for putting Masons and Odd-fellows out of their churches, saying, for the time, nothing about the new orders, the church might have been saved from its present agony, and future wreck. But Agent Shuey began the apostasy by employing Masons and Odd-fellows to work in the Telescope office. The First United Brethren church of Dayton, of which Mr. Shuey was trustee and leader, began under an unworthy, worldly pastor to receive the secret orders to fellowship.

As long ago as 1868-9 the sainted Edwards was becoming unpopular with men like the then young and ambitious Berger, because, as he said to the writer, the Bishop was "becoming stiff and old foggy;" that is, because he opposed the secret societies, then becoming popular in Dayton. Bishop Weaver saw that Warner's Masonry did not make him unpopular, and Glosbrenner, whose neglect made him to be praised with the secretists, began to curry favor with both sides; and, in short, the hirelings saw the wolf of secretism, which the fathers had strangled, reviving and returning, and they fled "because they were hirelings and cared not for the sheep!"

Now the Telescope has lost its focus, and blurs all objects. It devotes several columns to the late radical convention, and to make an excellent appearance of saying something against secret societies, praises the speech of Mr. Titus, and yet during the full twenty years' struggle, the men who have had the funds, and the power of discipline and were under every obligation, human and Divine, to enforce it, have never expelled or prosecuted a secretist of any lodge whatever. Yet they have been very faithful in rebuking defects and inconsistencies in those who wished to purify and save the church. And they have proved that "Of all reformers with whom earth is cursed,

Those who reform reformers are the worst."

Dr. Shuey boasts that his sons are not members of secret societies, but he knows that other people's sons are being hood-winked, sworn and debased; and when told of young men in Dayton about to join in the worship of devils, he has refused to visit their pastor, and try to encourage him to save those young men, though urged affectionately to do so. They blow not the trumpet nor warn the people; and if the lodge takes those young men to hell, their blood will surely be required at their hand.

Yet many of these brethren were once opposed to the false worship, and seemed, and still in many respects seem, to be good men. They are in the state that Aaron, "the saint of the Lord," was in, while ruled by envy and ambition, before Moses came down from the Mount. They are borne along with the popular current. They see "the people are set on mischief," and they shrink from breasting the current, and so, like Aaron, are borne along with it. And unless God in mercy dries up this dragon-flood of idolatry as he did of old, by making the earth open her mouth and swallow up the idolaters, (Rev. 13: 16), blood will yet flow to the horse-bridles in the prairies and savannahs of the United States.

THE NEWSPAPERS ON MORMONISM.

The American press, North, South, East and West, is moved by the Mormon attempt to become a State with a constitution against polygamy. We have glanced over some dozens of the leading editorials of leading papers. Some pronounce the effort a sham and trap; that once a State, polygamy will exist and be protected by the State courts. Others hope that the old leaders (whose President, Taylor, is dead) are sick of years of hiding, exiles at home, and are willing a new set should abolish polygamy for the sake of being a State; and they think the terms in the new constitution, now submitted to the people, are dictated by Grover Cleveland, or men who represent him.

The worst feature of the discussion is that the press, especially the religious weeklies, handle the question of marriage with little or no reference to Christ, who is the sole authority on the subject. Moses in the Decalogue forbids to covet "thy neighbor's wife" (not wives); and Christ said that marriage, "from the beginning," was between one man and one woman, who, and they two alone, should be "one flesh." And the inspired prophet (Mal. 2: 15) says that God made but one wife for one man, that he might "seek a godly seed;" a holy family being impossible with a multiplicity of mothers; and no holy family, no holy State.

The Mormon church organ (Deseret News), which is an able paper, Mormon-wise, insists sharply that Congress cannot dictate or forbid a creed to the Mormon church; that yet it may forbid the act of polygamy, though not the belief of it; as Carter Harrison allowed the anarchists to teach murder, leaving their pupils to kill policemen.

Polygamy is a crime, not because it is "indecent," or "anti-republican," or against the law of nations, though it is all and more than that. It is a crime, because it violates the ground law of Christian, civil government, and substitutes in its place the ground law of heathenism; making men free as cattle and like them. Christian marriage is an oath; and the oath on which the Constitution and courts of the United States rest is not a Chinese, Mormon or Masonic oath, but an oath to the God of the Bible, to whom the authors of the Declaration of Independence appealed. Congress can make no law enforcing or forbidding the religion of the Bible, upon which our Presidents swear when they are inaugurated. It cannot force men upon their knees and compel them to pray. But Congress can "prohibit the free exercise" of the blood-avenging of Mormon Danites, the child-murders of the Ganges, the cannibal feasts in Africa, where slaves are roasted and eaten to their gods; and it can as surely "prohibit" a man taking a woman and her daughter and granddaughter and raising children from all three (as has been, and is done, by Mormons in Utah), though such dishumanizing abominations are all believed and practiced as religions. The religion protected by the United States Constitution, was and is the Christian religion, which rests on marriage as defined by Christ; and the state rests on it as well as the church; for both are divine institutions; both ordained of God. So our Constitution protected the "life, liberty and property" of men as such, but the time came when these personal rights had to be asserted in the 13th, 14th and 15th Amendments; and the Cynosure is of the opinion that the family and the civil oath should be defined and protected by a new amendment from the invasions of heathenism, as the liberty of persons is now defined and defended from "The Barbarism of Slavery."

HOW COLORED BAPTISTS MEET THE ISSUE.

With all our might, mind, soul and strength we join the hallelujahs of the St. Marion Baptist Association, of whom Bro. Lewis Johnston writes on the 5th page of this number. We begin to appreciate Elijah's holy joy when he had drawn the line on Baal worship and the host answered to the fire of the Lord. This glorious news deserves our profound study.

1. It confirms the belief that our reform will have its first great conquests in the South.

2. It gives us hope for a noble meeting in New Orleans.

3. It will strengthen the American Missionary Association and its teachers and missionaries and give them new courage in standing to the principles of our reform.

4. It proves the wisdom of the Cynosure in advising that every effort be made to push our work among the 800,000 colored Baptist. Securing them for Christ, the A. M. A. churches will be yet stronger and stronger, and the Presbyterians and Methodists will follow easily.

5. Such brethren as Countee, Prof. Woodsmall and our liberal-handed Peter Howe have the first place in the joy. God bless them and multiply their number.

6. It repeats the history of the time of Christ when "the common people heard him gladly;" "the publicans and harlots" came into the kingdom before the religious and cultured Pharisee and out of the mouth of babes God ordained praise. When will our proud churches at the North learn thus simply and honestly and heartily to accept the truth?

THE N. C. A. FOREIGN FUND.—Attention of the readers of this number is called to the publishers' note on the 13th page respecting our literature in foreign countries. Two letters have lately come indirectly from Jamaica asking for documents on the lodge. In every land where the English language is spoken to any extent there is opportunity for the N. C. A. to do a good work for the truth. In India brethren connected with self-supporting missions and the social purity work are establishing book depositories and a line of colporteur evangelists from Bombay to the crowded interior of India. They are eager to have a good supply of our reform literature to use widely in that great country. These appeals ought to arouse the enthusiasm of every lover of Jesus Christ, to renew his vow of hostility to the Satanic lodge agency, and help as the Lord gives ability in overthrowing it in foreign lands.

—The Living Way of Memphis is most heartily engaged for the prohibition cause in Tennessee, and condemns in severe terms the course of colored preachers and politicians who sustain the saloon and its trailing horrors.

—Rev. Dr. J. G. Carson of Xenia, Ohio, was a member of the late Republican convention in Ohio, and chairman of his county delegation. If the Republican party was made up of such men it could be more implicitly entrusted with the management of our government.

—The Cynosure portrait of President Finney has heretofore robbed his features of a glance so penetrating that an unclean conscience would wither before it. Our artist has fairly restored this feature and we reprint the portrait to accompany Father Foote's stirring sketch.

—Bro. W. B. Stoddard, after a few weeks' rest and a few weeks' work in Illinois, returns to the Ohio work this week. His headquarters will still be No. 214 West Second avenue, Columbus, and he will begin work near that city, visiting Muskingum and Guernsey counties later in time for the State Convention in October.

—H. L. Hastings, of Boston, editor of the Christian, has been delivering lectures on Infidelity at Saratoga to deeply interested audiences. His lecture on the "Mistakes of Moses" was attended by several Jews, at whose urgent request Mr. Hastings consented to repeat the lecture that their Jewish friends might hear it.

—Letters from Worcester, Mass., to Secretary Stoddard are not hopeful respecting a State Convention this fall, at least in that city. The friends of the reform on whom much would depend are quite pre-engaged in revival and temperance efforts, so that they dare not venture to assume any further burdens at present. While they are thus zealous in good works we cannot call them away, but only ask that they make a sure testimony for Christ against lodger on every opportunity.

—Now that college catalogues and circulars burden the mails, and anxious parents are inquiring where their children shall go for their education, we are fortunate in securing a dialogue story from a lady who has lived many years near one of the largest universities of the country, and who writes of facts that have come under her own observation. The story will appear in three numbers of the Cynosure, and will be as profitable for children as for parents, giving to all a striking picture of some of the lurking places of Satan about our large institutions. "Forewarned is forearmed." We hope "College Boys and College Men" will prove a blessing thus to thousands.

SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

—Prof. Elliot Whipple, during the past year connected with Romona Institute of the University of Santa Fe, New Mexico, has returned to Wheaton College to take the chair of Natural Sciences which he filled with success some years ago.

—The Wasioja, Minn., Wesleyan Seminary opens Sept. 7th. Prof. E. G. Paine will be assisted by Miss Elsie S. Dow, a young lady of thorough education and much experience in teaching. To the several courses of study one in theology was added last year to add young men in their preparation for the ministry.

—Gates College at Neligh, Nebraska, is better prepared for a large number of students than ever. The girl's hall with its forty rooms furnished, and its dining room to accommodate all the students, will be ready for occupancy at the opening of the fall term. This will make a home for the girls with meals for the boys, at a much lower rate and better in quality than heretofore. The fall term opens Sept. 6th. Rev. H. A. Shorey succeeds Rev. M. L. Holt as president, and will, we trust, maintain the same thoroughness in Christian principles as he.

—Wheaton College last year reported 216 students of whom over 100 were in the college and preparatory classes and evenly divided between them. From various sources during the year the institution received $4,963 in donations. The year was closed without debt, and the endowment fund is increased by the gift of the late Rev. Dr. J. B. Walker. Some important changes have been made in the courses of study in the direction of more thorough mastery of sciences and language. The fall term opens Tuesday, September 6th, with a full faculty.

—The first annual catalogue of the Haines Normal School at Augusta, Georgia, reports the whole number of students as 249. Miss L. C. Laney, who is at the head of this promising colored school, has from the first been its manager and instructor. Her work has grown from a small and humble origin to a flourishing academy. Rev. H. H. Hinman was pleased, when visiting Augusta, beyond expression at the great work she has here achieved. She informs philanthropic Christians that the needs of the institution are donations for buildings, current expenses, sewing machines, school furniture and a library.

—Straight University, New Orleans, is one of the most important of the several institutions maintained for colored children and youth by the American Missionary Association. Rev. R. C. Hitchcock, the president, is ably assisted in the departments of Law, Theology and Literature by seventeen instructors and other assistants, and has had 518 pupils under his charge during the last year, which has been the fairest and most hopeful in the history of the institution. The buildings have been full and the blessing of God upon the University are acknowledged with gratitude. The fall term opens Oct. 3.

—Some idea of the number of persons who attended the commencement exercises of Erskine College, says the Associate Reformed Presbyterian of Due West, North Carolina, may be formed from the fact that there were by actual count at half past nine o'clock in the morning eight hundred and ninety-six horses and mules tied in the village hitching grounds. This number was increased by at least three hundred and fifty. The whole number of horses was at least twelve hundred. The number of buggies and other vehicles was nearly equal to the number of horses and each buggy brought in at least two persons. The number in attendance who came by public conveyance and those from the village was equal to those coming in buggies. The whole number was, including the students of the two colleges, about five thousand. This number is under rather than above the true amount.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

During the absence of the President and Mrs. Cleveland at Oak View, the vestibule of the White House is being frescoed and renovated. The portrait of Thomas Jefferson, which for many years adorned the space over the fireplace in the vestibule, has been removed to the East Room and placed in the panel to the right of the portrait of Martha Washington. The frescoes in the vestibule are after designs left by Brumedi, the Italian artist, who designed and executed the greater portion of the frescoes on the walls of the Capitol. Strangers visiting the Capitol a few years ago would be astonished to see on the floor of the rotunda and old man enter a sort of basket chair and be slowly hoisted to the top of the dome. This was Brumedi, who, too old to mount to the dome by the stairway, was daily lifted up, and there in his lofty chair would continue his work of painting the circle of the dome with scenes from American history, beginning with the landing of Columbus and ending with pictures representing some of the latest developments in science and invention. Brumedi did not live to complete his work on the dome, but, anticipating his death, he made designs in charcoal, to be used in finishing the work begun by him. These designs have been faithfully followed, and the arch around the dome represents partly his work and wholly his conception.

Appalled at the apparent prospect of having to entertain a delegation from every State in the Union, with an invitation to invite him within its borders in the pocket of the chairman, the President has sent out a mild but earnest protest against being swooped down upon during this melting weather, assuring the public that their invitations to have him visit them are just as much appreciated when clothed in writing, and will be just as likely accepted. In the meanwhile he prays to be left in peace with Mrs. Cleveland at his country home, until October, when he starts out on his proposed tour. If the President does not actually ask to be left in peace, his words tacitly imply that he desires it.

While the Georgia legislature is reviving the unhappy caste spirit, it is remembered here that a colored representative once filled the Speaker's chair in the House with great dignity. Ex-Congressman Rainey of South Carolina was one of the most intelligent and eloquent of his race ever in Congress, and was the first colored representative who ever presided in that body. While he held the gavel, Congressman Parker of Missouri, during a speech on the great importance of Congressional legislation that would lead the way to making every Indian a citizen of the United States, advancing to the space in front of the Speaker's desk, called upon the House to witness that a Nation that could elevate from bondage men fit to be representatives of the people, one of whom he then had the pleasure of addressing as the Speaker pro tem. of the House of Representatives, could eventually do as much for the wards of the Nation. The joint committee on the Public Library has several times been asked to perpetuate the event on canvas as the embodiment of a great historical fact. Now that Mr. Rainey is dead his friends will renew their request. The London Times, referring to the incident, said that it very seldom happened that so much illustrative of the grandeur of the growth of the great Republic was ever before so conspicuously presented.

The Signal Office reports this July as the hottest month recorded since the organization of the weather bureau in 1871. The citizens of Washington do not need the records of the Signal Office to tell them that. The fact is self evident. Then we have all gotten warm over something else besides the weather, and that is, the increase of the water tax. The water works of the District were built by the U. S. Government, but they seem to be managed, or rather mismanaged, by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia. The affairs of the water-tax office are in such a labyrinth that no one can make head nor tail of them. The fact remains that water takers have been taxed and re-taxed, and assessed and re-assessed, until their patience is exhausted, and now come the Commissioners, the water department being in arrears, and "make a law" to increase the rates to make good the deficiency. "The law is mandatory and admits of no discretion," say these Great Moguls. The laws of the Medes and Persians were not more fixed than that.

OUR BOSTON LETTER.

THE SALVATION ARMY.

"Come all ye hoodlums, woe begone,
Come let us join the life and drum,
Come let us do away with rum,
Come join the Salvation Army, oh."

Such were the words, or very similar, sung, not by the Salvation Army, but by the army of hoodlums and street gamins within the barracks of the red-coated Salvationists.

"Fire a volley!"

Then came the thuds upon the bass drum, accompanied by the rattling of snare drums, followed by an uproar among the ragged urchins scampering pell mell down to the street, pursued by one or more of the hallelujah guards. But these occurrences are now becoming things of the past, and the Army is little annoyed by the juvenile pests of all great cities.

The attraction of oddity is waning rapidly. The Salvation Army is getting to be an old story. It passes along our streets without receiving much attention except from country folks, to whom it is still a novelty. Since it is a well known fact that the novelty of its method has been its capital will not the value of stock decrease as the curiosity diminishes? Whether the Salvation Army will settle down into a permanent denomination is a problem difficult to solve at present, although the indications suggest dissolution not far along in the future.

I do not wish to criticize the usefulness of the army. It has certainly done much good and no positive harm. There is insect life whose longevity is but a day, yet who will say there is not a mission, a purpose in their existence. So, when I express the opinion that the existence of the Salvation Army will, sooner or later, be only a fact of history, I do not question its influence for good. There are systems of good purposes dying continually or evolving into other forms. The Salvation Army, should it survive another decade, will, I think, be modified in its tactics. What it is in Boston the Army, doubtless, is the world over, no matter of what race or class it may be composed. There is much sound judgment expressed in the old proverb, whose very age recommends its worth: "Birds of a feather flock together." Curiously enough, by universal consent this saying is applied to individuals of poor reputation almost exclusively, when it is equally applicable to the most reputable. I have no desire to suggest anything derogatory to the character of the Salvationists believing there are many excellent people among them; but my observation, which has been somewhat critical, leads me to believe their modus operandi of catching souls is the use of a net, the peculiar construction of whose meshes permits the captivity of one kind of fish, no matter in what location of society it may be cast, and this class it would be difficult, perhaps, to entrap in any other way.

There are a great many contrivances for catching particular kinds of fish and animals. Men and women in some respects are little different from such creatures. The brains of all Salvationists are of similar construction. It would be almost as preposterous to think of captivating souls of different mental propensities by one method as entrapping a whale in a lobster trap. Some folks have to be harpooned; others allowed to take their own time in crawling into the trap.

The Salvation Army in this city, as I have said, is an old story, and although its street parades are greatly improved in appearance and its music of better quality, yet little or no attention is attracted thereby. The advent of the Army in new countries or places is always attended with more or less success. When the enamel of its novelty wears off decline inevitably begins.

There is one peculiarity, however, worth noting, and that is the tenacity of those who enlist in its ranks in clinging to the cross. Usually people easily excited by new religious methods are the first to tire of them. Not so the Salvation recruits. Their adherence is almost phenomenal. The percentage of withdrawals or discharges I believe to be remarkably small proportionately compared with other sects. Admitting that excitement attracts them at first I am forced to think something greater holds them.

Marshal Ballington Booth at Old Orchard Beach recently gave the following statistics of the Army: "Whole staff of officers, 38; officers on salary, 700; corps, 318; outposts, 37; Sabbath attendance, 173,000; weekly meetings, 3,520; attendance on knee drills at 7 o'clock A. M., 3,700; out-door meetings, each week, 1,016; visitations per week, 4,244; readers of Army paper, the War Cry, 115,500."

THE HOME. OPPORTUNITY.

Say, who art thou with more than mortal air,
Endowed by heaven with gifts and graces rare,
Whom restless winged feet forever onward bear?

I am Occasion! known to few, at best;
And since one foot upon a wheel I rest,
Constant my movements are—they cannot be repressed.
Not the swift eagle in his swift flight
Can equal me in speed; my wings are bright,
And man who sees them waved is dazzled by the sight.
My thick and flowing locks, before me thrown,
Conceal my form—nor face nor breast is shown;
That thus, as I approach, my coming be not known.
Behind my head no single lock of hair
Invites the hand that fain would grasp it there;
But he, who lets me pass, to seize me may despair.

Whom, then, so close behind thee do I see?
Her name is Penitence; and heaven's decree
Hath made all those her prey, who profit not by me.
And thou, O mortal, who dost vainly fly
These curious questions, thou dost not desecry
That now thy time is lost, for I am passing by.

—Translated from Terner, by William Young.

SUNDOWN.

The summer sun is sinking low;
Only the tree-tops reddening and glow;
Only the weathercock on the spire
Of the neighboring church is a flame of fire;
All is in shadow below.

O, beautiful, awful summer day,
What hast thou given, what taken away?
Life and death, and love and hate,
Homies made happy or desolate,
Hearts made sad or gay!

On the road of life one mile-stone more!
In the book of life one leaf turned o'er!
Like a red seal in the setting sun
On the good and the evil men have done,—
Naught can to-day restore!

MISSIONARY UPRISING AMONG THE STUDENTS.

In the June number of the Missionary Review Rev. Arthur T. Pierson writes with his usual vigor and enthusiasm of the remarkable movement indicated in the title. He says:

To my mind there has been no movement of God within five centuries that bore more distinctly the marks of a divine origin than the spontaneous uprising of young men, and especially students in universities and seminaries both in America and England, in favor of foreign missions.

Those who have followed the march of the ages have noticed how there has been a succession of Divine Crusades, as for instance in the Middle Ages against feudalism; then in the Great Reformation in philosophy and religion, then in the various forms of Christian Philanthropy, and finally in modern missions.

In this last, every onward step has been in answer to prayer. The readers of the great missionary journals, and the observers of the grand march of the army of God's elect workmen, have noticed that as fast and as far as the church was roused to prayer, remarkable results have followed exactly in the line of the prayers. About one hundred years ago the first "Monthly Concert" began in England; and the burden of prayer was the opening of doors, throughout the then closed world, to missionary effort. Door after door opened until scarce a nation was left with barred gates!

Then prayer went up for the multiplication of agencies to oversee and organize the work, until from one missionary society we have moved on to over one hundred. Then the devout watchers on the walls began to pray for celestial showers of blessing and wonderful revivals came in the Hawaiian Islands, Madagascar, China, Syria, India and Persia. Then prayer went up for larger gifts to missions, and in one year less than twenty donors gave more than four millions to missionary work, especially in its educational and institutional aspects.

Then God's people began to see that laborers must be multiplied, and from many a closet and prayer-service went up the cry of the faithful. And now behold—in England, under Moody's efforts at Cambridge and the universities, there starts a new era. Young men, not from the lower ranks, but from the higher, with noble blood and birth, wealth, accomplishments, social standing and college standing, leave everything to go to the ends of the earth.

Then Mr. Studd, brother of one of these men, who from the highest positions in English universities went to China as a missionary, came to this country in 1885, and stirred us all by his simple story of their consecration. The reports of the press had gone before him, and between the two the story found millions of readers and hearers. The students in the universities of Canada began to burn with a holy enthusiasm, until they have finally organized a University Missionary Band and send forth their own representatives, one of whom bears the significant name of Mr. Go-forth!

Simultaneously, a few hundred choice students at Mt. Herman, Mass., in the Summer Bible School of 1886, meet for four weeks of prayer and study of the Word. They ask the humble writer of these pages to address them on missions. He thinks it is the clamor of a few, who are perhaps over-zealous, but he consents. The hall is crowded to its utmost capacity. There is simply a representation of the great field and the facts, but no special appeal. The writer is ashamed to say that the results far exceeded even the wish of his faith. The small number already having the foreign field in view swelled in a few days to one hundred. Then, purely of their own motion, without a suggestion from myself or Mr. Moody, these students set apart four of their number to go through the colleges and present to students the great question of God's need of workmen and the vastness of the harvest field.

Three of the original four dropped out, but dear brother Wilder said, "The work is God's; I dare not stop," and asking Mr. Forman to go with him, these two started on their holy crusade, and now, after about nine months of labor, they report that 2,100 students have declared for the foreign mission field!

And now, what do we see? Some professors in colleges and theological seminaries, and editors of religious newspapers, are raising the question, "Whereunto will this grow?" and in some cases are more or less directly and vehemently opposing it. "Their strength is to sit still!" It is said this is a burst of enthusiasm; like a prairie fire it will burn fiercely for a time and burn itself out. Well, why not let it? These students are, many of them, yet in college, some of them, in the lower classes. Time is a great test. It has a way of shaking at the four corners the napkin in which our resolves are hidden, and sometimes shakes them quite out forever! It has a way of cooling our excessive ardor and fervor; if the fire is not fed with fuel and fanned by the breath of prayer. If this thing be of God, ye cannot overthrow it—let it alone, lest haply ye be found even to fight against God!

Of course, young men may be over-zealous—there is a zeal without knowledge; but it is not half so disastrous as a knowledge without zeal! That was a great French preacher who has told us that if he wished to train a child from the beginning, to a consecrated life as a lover of liberty and a patriot he would have said and sung at his cradle the story of Washington. And what is the imperative need of the church to-day? At the cradle to say and sing the story of Jesus, and inspire love for the perishing souls that he left heaven to save.

COLLEGE BOYS AND COLLEGE MEN.

BY MRS. A. E. KELLOGG.

INTRODUCTORY.

There was stir and expectation in the old Massachusetts town where a popular college was situated; for examinations were over, and there was a fair prospect that the finest class which had ever graduated at that noble institution would be ready to receive their diplomas one year hence. True, two or three would need to make the best use of vacation for making up some deficiencies, but there would be plenty of time; and proud and hopeful were the Junior Class.

The Junior Hop was to be given at the house of Professor Wise, whose fair daughter was expected home from school in time for the festivities and the intellectual gymnastics of Commencement week. An invitation had been sent to a dear friend of the young lady, to accompany her home so as to double the pleasure. This invitation had been accepted, and Mrs. Wise invited Harry Glenn to accompany her to the railway station on Saturday evening to be surprised at the presence of his only sister, Miss Susie Glenn. The two young girls were classmates in the Seminary and both Juniors which brought them into sympathy with class doings, and feelings.

Therefore this Commencement time would be exceptional, and no other could ever be like it, or half so interesting. This was a pause, a semicolon, next year it would be a period; and an index finger would head the next paragraph in life's history, pointing to the responsibilities and the struggles which must follow Commencement week; while the question of what he, or she, "is to be, or not to be," would pon front them.

Now the week was before them. On Sabbath morning, a sermon before the Literary Societies by one of the city pastors. In the evening, a sermon by joint invitation of the different fraternities by a visiting alumnus who had been a member of the first chapter organized in the College. The whole week was filled with social and intellectual pleasures, to which of course the young ladies were invited, Fred, Wise being a Senior, and Harry Glenn a Junior. Two notable parties in honor of the Seniors gave great pleasure to the girls so fresh from the restraints of boarding-school. On the Thursday evening occurred the memorable Junior Hop. Mrs. Wise made the occasion one of especial brilliancy on account of Miss Susie and her daughter who entered with great zest and helpfulness, feeling of much importance as they found themselves consulted about this and that, instead of the leading strings to which they had grown accustomed at school. And then there was such a sense of freedom in associating so freely, though wisely, with the young gentlemen, from whose society they had been so rigidly excluded as to cultivate the longing for it to a most unreasonable degree,—a state dangerous by reason of the false light in which they viewed these gentlemen, a light favorable to most unwise conclusions, as they were apt to imagine a very ordinary Junior to be an embryo hero, and to clothe them with attractions quite invisible to practiced eyes, and to possess them with virtues and graces for which their own fancy would be responsible. In these circumstances therefore it would not be strange if some little seeds of sentiment had planted themselves, in the course of this busy week, which would have quickly perished in the sunlight; but jealously guarded by seclusion and warmth in a warm corner of a young and susceptible heart, they would doubtless germinate and come to fruition either sweet or bitter as the coming years should prove.

On Sabbath the President preached the Baccalaureate discourse. On Monday evening came the Junior Exhibition, pronounced the best ever given. One young man, tall, and of dignified bearing, impressed the young ladies very much, not so much by the depth of his oration as by the manner of it, and if so remarkable as a Junior, what would he be as a Senior!

CHAPTER I.

[Railway Station, Williamstown, Massachusetts. Several students going off for the holidays.]

George Green—"Halloo, Simms! Going away?"

Joe Simms—"Yes! going home. Won't you go along? I assure you a cordial welcome."

Green—"Thanks, but I am spoken for. Is Harry Glenn here? I am going home with him."

Simms—"With Glenn? how is that? I did not know that you were friends!"

Green—"A sudden fancy, you see. Let us go across the street and get a little spiritual consolation, the last for me, for a time. You see, Joe, I am going in for a new kind of a 'lark,' and when I come back look for news from the subscriber; rich, racy, and rare; for your individual ear, mind; and no blabbing."

Simms—"Blabbing! What do you take me for? Keep your old affairs to yourself."

Green—"Here, old fellow, take this and don't be so touchy. (Both drink.) Now no time to lose; Glenn must not see me here. Give a fellow something to take this infernal odor out of my breath; he must suspect nothing. (Hands him some seeds.) Thanks. There he comes. In time, you see!" (Joining him on the platform.)

Glenn—"Glad of it. How are you, fellows? We shall have a gay party. Good! I did not know that so many were going in this direction. Now this is jolly."

While waiting, all join in a college song, and with especial spirit in the elegant refrain, which ran, "Saw my leg off! Saw my leg off! Saw my leg off short!" to the astonishment of a countryman who had supposed that students were earnest young gentlemen, seeking diligently for the knowledge which would make them men, stronger, wiser, and better than himself; whereas he hastily concludes that they are little better than lunatics; and after looking them over, and learning who they are, he turns away in disgust, saying to himself, "If that is what it does for 'em, my Bill will never go to college, never!" Toot, toot, sounded the whistle. "All aboard," shouted the conductor. The song stopped short. Satchels were caught up—a rush for seats, and quickly the station was deserted and the rollicking group were being whirled to their destination.

CHAPTER II.

[Fine evening during the holiday vacation. Handsome party in the Glenn mansion. Miss Glenn, Harry Glenn and his friend George Green of Williams College are present.]

H. G.—“George, will you make some last calls with me this evening? I suppose we must be in our place at the proper time or old Prex. will give us fits. For my part I think it precious shabby to give us only a week.”

Susie Glenn—“Harry, I am sorry to hear you speak in that way. Of course we should be very glad to have you with us longer, but when duty calls, our pleasures should yield; and it does seem to me that you need not pick up all the slang that is floating about. I have seen students who could get along very well without it.”

Harry—“A compliment to my friend here, I see! He never uses slang, never! ha, ha! But, say, old fellow, you have not answered my question. My pious sister has given you no chance.”

George—“Indeed, Hal, I should be most happy; but, as it is to be our last evening, it seems that something is due your parents, and especially from me, after the pleasure which their hospitality has afforded me, coming as I did, a stranger.”

H.—“Yes, ‘and took you in.’ But you came by my invitation, and I do not see the weight of obligation. However, if you prefer to stay here and mope, I will not urge you; but must ask to be excused for a little while. And, Susie dear, be careful of the young man, and see that he uses no slang.”

[Exit Harry.]

G. G.—(A little embarrassed).—“Do you believe in special providences, Miss Susie?”

Susie.—“Yes, indeed! and I hope you are not skeptical on the subject.”

G. G.—“Oh, I scarcely know that I have had any belief on the subject; but to-day it has been much in my mind, and I may say that if I had not believed before I am quite convinced now.”

Susie.—“I do not understand you; please explain.”

G. G.—“Well, in the first place, why did your brother invite me for this vacation, when there were others of his classmates so much more worthy? and why did his invitation come before others? I might have been with Simms in his country home, or in one of several other places, as well as to have been in Glenville, if we drift, as many believe.”

S.—“Perhaps I have given the subject less thought than you, for I have always believed it; and it seems to me that it requires no argument to prove anything so clearly taught in the Bible.”

G. G.—“I wish I possessed your beautiful faith, Miss Susie. It is like my mother's. I too have been taught to trust in Providence; but I find myself full of doubts and questions, and when some of the fellows talk of the narrowness of Christians, and the absurdity of believing Christ divine, or that the salvation of the race could depend on the voluntary sufferings and death of one man, however exalted; and that every person must be their own saviour, I confess that although I am shocked, I have no arguments to offer which at all satisfy me. If my sister was near, or, if I may presume to say it, yourself, I might feel stronger to resist their sophistry.”

S.—“I am sure I should be frightened if I found myself doubting the teachings of my Bible.”

G. G.—“Then you believe in the inspiration of the Bible all through, even to the story of Elisha's bears, Daniel's lions, and Jonah's whale?”

S.—“Certainly. They are so interwoven that it seems to me that they must stand or fall together. There are many, many things in the Bible which I do not understand; but that part does not touch my faith. What I do not know now I may know hereafter.”

G. G.—“Miss Susie, I would love to sit at your feet and learn this beautiful faith.”

S.—“I should be glad to help you if I might, but you must learn of a greater and better than I.”

G. G.—“Miss Susie, I must think that a special Providence has favored me this evening; for I have something on my mind that I much wish to say to you before I leave. May I speak, Miss Susie?”

S.—(A little frightened).—“I am sure, Mr. Green, that you cannot wish to say anything to me which I ought not to hear.”

G. G.—“Not that, Miss Glenn, but I dread your answer. So before I speak let me beg you to make no reply at present. I know that I should have returned to my books still guarding my secret; but I cannot, indeed, I cannot. A horrible dread lest another, and a better, should steal from me the prize which I so much covet forces me to tell you that I love you, even knowing as I do that a long college year stands between me and the possible fulfillment of my dreams. After that I hope no obstacle shall appear, as my father will provide for my making a handsome beginning in life. Pardon me if I have gone too far.”

S.—“Mr. Green, I am speechless with surprise; so late a perfect stranger! I cannot understand.”

G. G.—“Strange to you, doubtless. But from the day that I looked into your eyes as your brother introduced you at Commencement, your image has haunted me and my resolve has been unshaken to make myself worthy of you. So please allow me to go back to my dusty books, with the sweet hope nestling in my heart that one day you may return in some measure the affection which so abounds toward you.”

S.—(Quite overcome).—“Indeed, you take me so utterly by surprise that I do not know what to say.”

G. G.—“Then please say nothing and let my dream go on.” (Takes her hand and kisses it reverently.) [Enter Harry.]

Harry—“What, here alone yet? and looking as if you had been reading your own funeral sermons.”

Susie.—“You must have made some short calls. I hope they were pleasant, but if they were they must have been few.”

Harry.—“To tell the truth they were not so very pleasant, for all the girls looked past me to see if I was alone, and then looked disappointed, so I just came home. A pretty story, to be superceded after such a fashion.”

Susie.—“I hope you are not jealous of your friend. However, I am glad that some cause sent you home so that we may have you for a little while.”

[Enter Mr. and Mrs. Glenn.]

Mrs. G.—“I had begun to fear that we should lose the whole evening. A neighbor happening to come in has detained us until now. I hope, children, you have not allowed Mr. Green to find it dull.”

Harry.—“Dull! Yes, indeed, I should say so. I was obliged to run out for a little while, this worthy young man refusing his company; and when I came back I found these two looking as solemn as owls. Mother, what ails Susie, anyhow? I should think that she was going to be a missionary the way she preaches.”

Mrs. G.—“I can readily believe that your sister has preached no sermon that a youth about your size might not profit by.”

Harry.—“Well spoken, noble matron! Worthy ancestress of a noble line.”

Mr. Glenn.—Harry! I fancy that another year in college will return you to us an idiot, if you go on in this way.”

Harry.—“Dear papa, were you not once a student and will you please tell this august company if you were always grave and sensible?”

Mr. G.—“I hope I never quite forget to be a gentleman.”

Harry.—“I most humbly beg to be forgiven by everybody.”

Mr. G.—“I quite regret, Mr. Green, that your stay is so short. Where do you pass your summer vacation?”

G. G.—“I should be very glad to visit Niagara, and to spend some time in the Adirondacks, but my father finds his business is growing to be quite a burden to him, and he counts the weeks until I can be with him. I shall give my summer to assisting him.”

CHAPTER III.

[Evening after the departure. Mr. and Mrs. Glenn and Miss Susie Glenn in the same parlor.]

Mrs. G.—“How lonely it seems to-night! I think I miss Harry more every time he leaves us.”

Mr. G.—“This young Green seems to be a manly fellow. His father is wealthy, I conclude, and it is very commendable in the young man to go to his assistance at vacation instead of seeking his own pleasure. I wish our Harry would sober down and take to business a little more.”

S.—“Yes, and leave off his slangy way of talking.”

Mrs. G.—“All in good time, my dear. Harry is a good boy, true and loving as ever, and I think, Susie, you should take his nonsense for what it is worth. I trust Harry entirely and think he is much more a man than his friend with his tall dignity. Indeed, I am not as favorably impressed with our guest as your father seems to be. To me there is a sinister expression about his face which does not promise well, and a scarlet shade upon his lips tells me that he will one day be a drunkard, and that he is not a stranger to the wine cup, even now.”

Mr. G.—“You generally read character well, my dear; but I hope you may prove to have been mistaken this time. Did you caution Harry?”

Mrs. G.—“No; not directly, fearing to confirm his fancy by putting him on the defensive; but I shall try to guard him, nevertheless.”

Mr. G.—“I am glad I can trust you, my dear, for

I should go at him in such a way as to provoke the thing which I wish to avert.”

S.—“I can not help thinking you are just a little severe in your judgment this time, mamma; for he certainly seems a very thoughtful young man and his conversation is quite improving.”

Mrs. G.—“I hope I may be convinced of hasty judgment this time but I greatly fear that I have made no mistake.”

(To be Continued)

WHY DOES “PROHIBITION PROHIBIT?”

The saloons in Atlanta, Ga., have been closed for months, and the vast majority of the people who spent their earnings for liquor, now spend their money for better things. Yet some people will violate the law. In the Atlanta Constitution of July 12th, 13th and 14th are reports from the court room, which show the experiences of the few who still persist in violation. Wine-rooms are allowed under the law, with permission to sell domestic wines, but not by the drink, and when sold by the bottle or quart the purchaser cannot drink it in the wine-room. On the 11th of July a case was made out against a Mr. Daus, a wine-room proprietor, and his colored employe. This was not Mr. Daus's first offense. He had paid a fine before. Judge Anderson delivered the sentence, which was that Daus and his employe should pay a fine of forty dollars and spend twenty-five days in the chain-gang, each. “Your honor,” said Mr. Daus's counsel, “did you say forty dollars or twenty-five days in the chain-gang?” “No, sir,” said the judge; “I said forty dollars and twenty-five days.” “Mr. Daus,” says the Constitution's reporter, “was the first man of prominence sentenced to the chain-gang. As he heard the sentence his chin dropped upon his breast, and the picture presented was a touching one.” An effort was made to get a pardon from the Mayor. The result was, Mr. Daus made an affidavit that he would not, within the city or county, sell or keep on hand any spirituous liquors or intoxicating beers, so long as the sale is prohibited; and then the chain-gang part of the sentence was suspended, to be enforced if the parties again be detected in violating the law.

Again, Mr. Kennebrew was found guilty of violating the prohibition law, and was fined five hundred dollars in the police court. The fine was paid, and he was then brought before the city court and fined fifty dollars more for the same offense. When the second fine was imposed, Mr. Kennebrew surrendered to the Mayor his wine-room license, and filed an affidavit that he would not again violate the law; and upon these conditions the Mayor remitted $40 of the second fine.

On the 13th of July, Judge Anderson gave two more wine-room men a fine and twenty-five days in the chain-gang. Their case will go to a higher court.

But this is what makes “prohibition prohibit” in Atlanta. The saloons have gone out of business months ago; the wine-rooms are the “dying embers.” The Constitution's reporter publishes, in the issue of the 13th, his interview with an old toper. The old man said he had lived in Atlanta thirty-five years, and had been painting his nose daily for fifteen years with from one to a dozen drinks a day; “but now,” said he, “the town is dry all over. This morning,” he continued, “I went into a wine-room and asked for my tonic. The barkeeper looked at me a little solemn, and said: ‘Can't give it to you, old man. We've quit. Don't want any Daus in ours.’ I went to another wine-room, and met the same story. Begging won't get a drink. They can stand the fine, because they are making money, but when it comes to the chain-gang, they don't want any of it.”—Correspondence Southwestern Presbyterian.

HORACE GREELEY'S SENSE OF HUMOR.

Joel Benton writes in the July Cosmopolitan:

Mr. Greeley's sense of humor was of a peculiar sort, but it was allied to genius. So many anecdotes have been told of him in illustration of this, that one can hardly expect to produce any now that some one has not repeated. Those who tried to joke with him to his disadvantage were generally worsted, whether they did it orally or through the press. One evening an associate editor of the Tribune accosted him as he came into his desk with some such question as this:

“Didn't you know, Mr. Greeley, that you made a dreadful blunder in one of your statistical editorials this morning?”

“No; how was it?” said Mr. Greeley:

"Why, you said something about 'Heidsieck and champagne.' Don't you know Heidsieck is champagne?"

"Well," said Mr. Greeley quietly, "I am the only editor on this paper that could make that mistake."

On another occasion a person who wished to have a little fun at the expense of his consistency, said in a group where Mr. Greeley was standing:

"Mr. Greeley and I, gentlemen, are old friends. We have drank a good deal of brandy and water together."

"Yes," said Mr. Greeley, "that is true enough. You drank the brandy, and I drank the water."

Tobacco was his especial dislike; and a friend of mine, knowing this well, while handing around a box of cigars to a few who were present with Mr. Greeley, took especial pains to hand him the box, with great ostentation.

"No," said Mr. Greeley, "I thank you, I haven't got so low down as that yet. I only drink and swear."

I must say, however, in contradiction of a charge that must have been exaggerated and purposely distorted (for it was a favorite imputation against him with many), that I, at least, never heard him use expletives that could not be repeated in a refined circle. He had as justifiable occasions, though, for obnoxious epithets as any one I ever knew; and if he had not sometimes spoken vehemently he would have been truly angelic. His handwriting, in spite of all that was said of it, was not the worst in the world; but it was very nearly the homeliest. It was fairly appalling to look at. But it did have a somewhat uniform alphabet. Almost all the words, like a certain one in Rufus Choate's penmanship, looked like "gridirons struck by lightning." But when you once discovered the key to this chirography, it was not so very hard to read. The stories about it, though, are more numerous than the fables of Aesop.

In the time of Oliver Cromwell, the magistrates in the north of England punished drunkards by making them carry what was called "the drunkard's cloak." This was a large barrel, with one head out and a hole through the other, through which the offender was made to put his head while his hands were drawn through two small holes, one on each side. With this he was compelled to march along the public streets.

The claim that the use of beer will diminish drunkenness and largely take the place of spirits is not borne out by Parliamentary report in Belgium. This report says intemperance is spreading fearfully in the kingdom. Next to Bavaria, Belgium has the reputation of being the country where most beer is consumed, the amount per year being 240 liters, or over fifty-two gallons per head. It also comes next to Russia and Denmark in the consumption of spirits; the amount consumed of the latter being thirteen liters per head a year.

The law should take notice of the conclusions of medical authority and punish the drinker for his crimes committed while drunk, and also punish him for getting into a state of intoxication. Let the punishment be, for the first offense, a fine; second offense, fine and imprisonment; for the third offense, add disfranchisement for two years; next offense, add disfranchisement ten years, and so on, making the penalty severer each time, and taking drunkards out of the lists of our voting population. No man has any business getting drunk, and when he so far lowers himself, let him be punished for his crimes committed while drunk, and let his name be stricken from the roll of citizens.—Aurora Express.

Arendorf was not convicted for the murder of Haddock, and a postponement of the second trial has been secured. Although he has escaped punishment thus far in one direction, it seems that some measure of punishment is overtaking him from another source. The Chicago Daily News, in a lengthy article, reveals the fact that the expense of securing witnesses and retaining them to repeat the stories they have already told, has cost and is costing so much that the great brewer is already about ruined financially. The witnesses employed to prove the innocence of the prisoner are now and then drawing "blood money," and of course their demands cannot be ignored, lest they should "squeal." It is said that without aid from brewers, especially from the Franz brewery in Sioux City, the defense must have failed for lack of funds long ago. The only chance for them is to continue in the line they have chosen. On this subject the News says: "The only possible chance of the defendants, even for temporary escape, is to stand together. A break in the phalanx of the defense, or among those who have gained knowledge of its secrets, or who have done dangerous service on the witness stand or elsewhere; must be fatal. Consciousness of this fact, and of the peril of a break at any moment in a multitude of places, must be a punishment worse than the courts can inflict."

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—Pastor W. Van Driessen of the Wesleyan church at Jacksonville, Monroe county, Wisconsin, informs us that a new house of worship will be dedicated by the church next Sabbath, August 14th. Rev. J. A. Richards of Fort Scott, Kansas, will preach and have charge of the services, and all Christian reformers will be welcomed on the occasion.

—Four open-air services were conducted in Boston on a recent Sunday by the Y. M. C. A., one on the Common, another in Haymarket Square, and the others at Franklin and Marine Parks. At the latter point 1,000 people assembled. As this is the work for which H. L. Hastings and William F. Davis have been arrested again and again, it is evident that their sacrifices have borne some fruit.

—The Holiness and Divine Healing Association of Oberlin, of which Deacon O. M. Brown is president and Cyrus Houghton, secretary, invite the Christian public to attend an assembly for rest, fellowship, consecration and Bible study at Linwood Park, Vermillion, Erie county, Ohio, twenty-eight miles west of Cleveland, from September 3d to 13th. Special attention will be given during the meeting to foreign missions. Rev. A. B. Simpson of New York, Miss Carrie Judd of Buffalo, Rev. Dwight Norton of Chicago and Prof. D. Clark of Richmond, Ind., are among the invited speakers.

—Mrs. Kendall, a young widow, educated at Vassar College, has resolved to go at her own charges as missionary to Japan. She is moved in part by the example of Dr. Henry M. Scudder, late of Plymouth church in this city, who went with his family some weeks ago to spend his remaining days on mission ground. Four others are spoken of by the Missionary Review as having given themselves to the work in Japan, and will be self-supporting.

—The Rev. Dr. R. S. Storrs has positively declined the presidency of the American Board of Missions, made vacant by the death of Dr. Mark Hopkins.

—Rev. Mr. Tong, a Chinese Baptist preacher, delivers exhortations in front of a large pagan temple in Chinatown, San Francisco, every Sunday.

—A force of 2,000 colporteurs distribute sermons among the non-church-going people of Berlin, Germany. More than one hundred thousand sermons are thus distributed each week.

—More than one-half of the Congregational ministers in the United States engaged in pastoral work are home missionaries—1,571 in all, and the proportion is constantly increasing.

—The churches of Philadelphia have formed an Evangelical Union. A conference will be held in October, and plans for a regular city campaign next fall and winter are already in active preparation.

—The Presbyterian churches in New Jersey have made arrangements to hold special missionary meetings in all parts of the State, ending November 19, for the purpose of arousing greater interest in foreign missions.

—One million of dollars for foreign missions, one million dollars for the fund for veterans honorably retired, and eight hundred thousand dollars for home missions, are among the grand contributions for the coming year set by the General Assembly of the Presbyterian church.

—There is now a well-directed movement towards the systematic study of the English Bible in American colleges. Professor Harper, of Yale, is the moving spirit in the enterprise, and he, with Professors Ballantine of Oberlin, Beecher of Auburn, and Burroughs of Amherst, is preparing a series of "Inductive Bible Studies" which will appear monthly in the Old Testament Student, published at New Haven, beginning with the September issue. The aim is to study the Bible from a literary and historical point of view, and Yale and Amherst have already gone so far as to place the course among their regular optionals.

—The Bible stand at the Crystal Palace was opened on July 9th, 1862. From that date to December 31st, 1886, twenty million, nine hundred and fifty-nine thousand, two hundred and fifty-three separate Gospels, including a large number of Bibles and Testaments, Scripture cards and leaflets, have been circulated in thirty-six languages.

—In the missionary conference of the young men from college at Northfield, Prof. Drummond had happened in an address to refer to cant. When the hour came for him to answer questions one of the students asked him what he meant by cant. "There is," said he in reply, "such a thing as the religion of a young man; and there is such a thing as the religion of an old woman. Now when a young man talks as if he had an old woman's religion, that is cant."

—The heathen will never be judged for not accepting a Saviour "of whom they have never heard," and it is wholly unfair to present any such man-of-straw conception for the sake of a lame argument; but the Christian church will be judged for not proclaiming a Saviour to the heathen, and that is the fact which it most concerns the church to ponder. It is not God's compassion towards them that needs vindicating, but our own.—The Foreign Missionary.

—The New Testament, which was translated into Hebrew by the late Rev. Isaac Salkinson, missionary among the Jews of Vienna, has been reprinted there in a second edition of 120,000 copies. By means of the subscription of one generous Scotch donor, 100,000 copies are at his request to be distributed among the Hebrew-reading Jews all over the continent.

LITERATURE.

The principal feature of the "Lincoln Life" in the August Century is the account of Lincoln's famous Cooper Institute speech, which was an important though unintentional step in the direction of his Presidency. This installment also includes accounts of Lincoln's Ohio speeches, John Brown's raid and Lincoln's view of it and the Charleston Democratic Convention of 1860. Messrs. Hay and Nicolay deal with old John Brown with a severity which suggests some remnant of political hostility. They at least fail to judge of his actions from his own words, and seem to have little regard for the enormities of American slavery against which John Brown believed it his duty to take up arms. The frontispiece of the number is a portrait of Mrs. Julia Ward Howe, author of a paper on "The Song of the War" by Brander Matthews, which includes authentic accounts of the origin of the most notable of the songs, with autographs, in whole or in part, of Randall's "My Maryland," Mrs. Howe's "Battle Hymn of the Republic," and Mr. Gibbon's "Three Hundred Thousand More;" altogether a most readable paper apart from its relation to the War. To this Mrs. Howe adds an account of the circumstances attending the writing of her immortal hymn. The solid paper of the number, and one which appeals interestingly to a large variety of readers, is by Edward Atkinson, and has the title, "Low Prices, High Wages, Small Profits—What Makes Them?" This paper is a continuation of Mr. Atkinson's discussions of the Labor Question, which have received wide attention, and have been the subject of general comment and discussion in the press. Mr. Atkinson establishes standard, average portions of food, clothing, boots, shoes, and fuel, and the cost of these he afterwards makes use of in the computation of the purchasing power of a day's or year's wages. General A. W. Greely describes a most touching episode of the Lady Franklin Bay Expedition, under the title of "Our Kivigtok," a kivigtok being, in the language of the explorer, a man who has fled mankind and through a solitary life amid nature's surroundings has acquired a gift of clairvoyance. General Greely's paper records much that is curious and interesting in regard to his experiences in the polar regions. General Joseph E. Johnston gives an inside view of his campaign, in "Opposing Sherman's Advance to Atlanta;" Colonel Henry Stone describes "Hood's Invasion of Tennessee" after Johnston had been relieved and Atlanta had fallen. Colonel Stone's paper includes a description of the battles of Franklin and Nashville.

Editorial remarks in August Babyhood include novel suggestions concerning the eating of candy, and a reply to the question, When should young children begin to eat meat? Dr. Jerome Walker writes of "Dysentery and Kindred Diseases," giving common sense directions for home treatment. The article on "Poisonous Plants," by Dr. Dorning, is so fully illustrated that it must be of service to all parents spending the season in the country with their children. Dr. Floyd M. Crandall writes of "Heat-Rash," its symptoms, treatment, etc.; Dr. Cyrus Edson, of the N. Y. Health Department, of "Feeding of Cows, and its Effect on Milk." Clara W. Robinson advocates sensibly a special "Training for Maternity," and Dr. Yale writes of "The Purification of Water," giving directions for a home-made filter, etc. The most varied topics, such as "Shall the Baby Go to Church," "An Embryo Artist," "Prominent Ears," "The Refusal to Nurse and its Consequences," are discussed in its departments.

In the English Magazine, Richard Jeffries continues his "Walks in the Wheatfields" of England with his lessons of poetry, of poverty and of progress. The original and humorous illustrations of Hugh Thomson are this month devoted to caricatures of the country militia. "A Visit in a Dutch Country-house" is another illustrated paper full of humor and sense in its account of the scenes and customs of Holland.

In spite of drouth Vick's Magazine is as bright and unwithered as a June rose after a shower. Practical hints for the garden, for the lawn, and for the more permanent decoration with ornamental trees, are found in the August number.

LODGE NOTES.

It is announced that the steam-fitters of Pittsburgh and Allegheny City will withdraw from the Knights of Labor.

There are reported 6,033 Grand Army posts. The national meeting at St. Louis next month is expected to be a great affair.

The Prince of Wales recently conferred the degree of Master Mason upon his son, Prince Albert Victor. Shame on such a father!

The officials of the Knights of Labor are perfecting their plans for bringing suit to test the legality of the evictions of the salt works strikers at Natrona, Pa.

A gang of union sailors attacked non-union men on a schooner at Toledo, Ohio, and in the battle one of the crew of non-unionists at work on the ship was fatally shot.

The street-car employees of the United States and Canada, at Buffalo, N. Y., Wednesday, perfected the formation of an international association, under the auspices of the Knights of Labor.

The strike at the Black Diamond Steel Works, at Pittsburgh, Pa., is at an end, the employees going to work unconditionally. The men went out because the employers refused to recognize the Knights of Labor.

The present strength, total membership, of the "Ancient Order of United Workmen" is reported to be 176,352. Total beneficiary disbursed, $238,001. Total amount received, $238,906.20. This has an appearance of keeping close to its professions by this lodge, but we learn that the lodges of Pennsylvania had $77,544.20 on hand at the end of 1886, after paying $15,892.92 for charity and sick benefits.

Joseph R. Buchanan, a well-known agitator of the reckless sort, has been named as a delegate to the Minneapolis meeting of the Knights of Labor by District Assembly, No. 89, of Denver. There is a vague hope among an inner circle of the Knights that at that meeting Powderly will be forced to resign the place of Grand Master Workman. If he should do so, an attempt will be made to elect Buchanan to the place, he being very popular with the radical element in Chicago and other large cities.

A Providence, R. I., special says: The announcement that the reports of the Massachusetts Knights of Labor show that the order has lost largely in membership creates no surprise in this State, where the order has exercised but little influence on the course of industry for many months. When the manufacturers of Rhode Island organized for self-protection about a year ago, they resolved that there should be no interference by Knights of Labor with their business, and to this resolve they have strictly adhered. The manufacturers have in every instance refused to arbitrate or to listen to any suggestion as to arbitration by committees of Knights of Labor, and they have given unequivocal evidence of their purpose to adhere to this line of conduct.

The partial statistics of the Odd-fellows are thus given in a lodge journal:

Grand Lodges.....	54
Subordinate Lodges.....	7,956
Grand Encampments.....	44
Subordinate Encampments.....	1,947
Lodge members.....	627,310
Annual Relief.....	$2,180,961 93
Annual Income.....	5,309,688 77

Increase in membership since 1864..... 379,687

And a total revenue of four millions.

This table does not tell how many new members are received annually, and how many leave this order through disgust at its performances or disappointment in the nonfulfillment of its promises.

THE RESORTS OF COLORADO.

Colorado has become famous for its marvelous gold and silver production, for its picturesque scenery, and its delightful climate. Its mining towns and camps, its massive mountains, with their beautiful green-verdured valleys, lofty snow capped peaks and awe-inspiring canons, together with its hot and cold mineral springs and baths, and its healthful climate are attracting, in greater numbers each year, tourists, invalids, pleasure and business seekers from all parts of the world.

The journey from Chicago, Peoria, or St. Louis and other Chicago, Burlington and Quincy R. R. stations to Denver

(the great distributing point for Colorado), if made over the Burlington Route, C. B. & Q. R. R., will be as pleasant and gratifying as it is possible for a railroad trip to be. At all principal ticket offices will be found on sale, during the tourist season, round trip tickets via this popular route at low rates to Denver, Colorado Springs and Pueblo, Colorado. When ready to start call on your nearest ticket agent, or address Paul Morton, General Passenger and Ticket Agent C. B. & Q. R. R., Chicago, Ill.

BUSINESS.

SUBSCRIPTION LETTERS.

The following have made remittances of money to the Cynosure from Aug. 1 to Aug. 6 inclusive:

E. B. Gillett, W. Thompson, W. Fitch, Rev. S. A. Gilley, A. Coleman, Mrs. N. P. Merrell, P. Sjöblom, Rev. A. H. Reed, Mrs. M. A. Walker, D. H. Harrington, H. G. Harrison, W. M. Van Driessen, Jno. Winkler, Dr. A. Benham, R. T. Wylie, Prof. E. Whipple, S. A. Perky, S. A. Pratt.

There has been received for our Foreign Fund from:
Jno. Dorcas.....$ 5 00
H. L. Kellogg.....2 00
A. Austin.....1 50

Besides the literature sent as already noticed in the Cynosure there was $4 worth sent last week to Jamaica, West India, to a friend, who writes: "The Freemasons and Odd fellows are making a raid on the poor, ignorant natives of this place for members." Who will add to the Foreign Fund and help these faithful missionaries.

THE SUMMER CAMPAIGN.

Turn again to the statement of W. B. Stoddard and G. A. Conrad in last Cynosure, and reread the success which they met with in canvassing for the Cynosure in one of the hardest times for such work that Illinois has known for years. Is it not a prophecy for the coming year?

WHAT HAVE YOU DECIDED TO DO?
Mr. E. H. Collins sends this answer: "I had to take one of my papers to get him to take the Cynosure."

M. L. Worchester sends in a new name for one year, and writes, "I find that your suggestion respecting exchanging the Cynosure for labor works well."

Are there not more who can find some neighbor that will pay for the paper in work?

Robert Wilson renews his subscription and sends in ten trial subscribers. "Now there are diversities of gifts, but the same Spirit." We cannot all work alike, but if all work, much can be accomplished even during these warm and busy months.

Jos. Ramsey renews and sends in five trial subscribers.

Rev. H. A. Day writes: "Send me for another year the best paper of its kind in the world." Who will canvass for the paper, Bro. Day, in your city?

A faithful minister in the East, who has been driven from one pulpit because of his faithfulness, looks out those who would be benefited by the Cynosure and then finds some one who will send it to them. Hence three will receive the paper.

Bro. C. F. Hawley sends in two new subscribers from Iowa.

ANTI-LODGE LYRICS.

Sing the Reform

Into the Hearts of the People

One of the most popular books against lodgery is the latest compilation of

George W. Clark,

The Minister of Reform:

A forty-page book of soul-stirring, conscience-awakening songs, appropriate for lectures, conventions and the home circle. What can add more to the interest of a meeting than a song well sung? What means will more quickly overthrow the power of the secret lodges than to sing the truth into the popular conscience?

Get this little work and use it for God and home and country. Forty pages.

Price 10 cents, postpaid. Address,

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canadian jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freeman to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his name to the letter, but ATTACHES HIS AFFIDAVIT TO IT.

In closing his letter he writes: "I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the Anti-Masonic excitement" by a sincere desire, first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influence of "secret societies."

The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the latest historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. (Chicago National Christian Association.) Single copy, 5 cents.

HOME AND HEALTH.

TIME FOR MEALS.—The time to give children their breakfast is not the moment they are dressed; let them have a little frolic with the pater, and come to the table with warmed blood and beaming faces, for appetite will be helped thereby. They should not be hurried through their meals, nor made to eat more than the appetite craves. Nor, if they refuse good, plain food, should they be allowed dainties in its place. If the appetite for plain food be spoiled by indiscriminate feeding, it is hard to re-establish it.

Let the less they drink with their meals the better; but copious draughts of good water between meals will benefit. No child, or person, should eat when over-heated or fatigued. Rest fully half an hour to recuperate power to digest the food.

An hour of romping after the supper, which should be no later than five o'clock, will help to insure a quiet sleep.—Demorest's Monthly.

"EARLY TO BED."—Growing children should have all the sleep that nature demands. To make sure of this, the bedtime should be no later than seven o'clock for children under ten. This habit of early bedtime will take care of itself, if it be persevered in by parents at first. Some men and women would be not only stronger, but cleverer, if they had had all the sleep they needed when children.

The difference between children whose parents enforce obedience in this respect and those little old people who sit up late at night is very marked. The clear eyes, rosy cheeks and round, strong limbs of the former should rebuke parents who allow children to sit up because they wish to. Nothing can be more pernicious than to allow children up late at watering-places. They taste then of the highly-spiced society life, none to healthy for the strongest, and in the hot-house air and stimulating influences, their natures are forced to results that may break down their own health, and the hearts of their parents also.—Demorest's Monthly.

RULES OF HEALTH.

The following rules, published in Farm and Forest, are worth heeding by those who believe that an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure: Never lean with the back upon anything that is cold. Never begin a journey until a breakfast has been eaten. Never take warm drinks and then immediately go out in the cold. Keep the back, especially between the shoulder blades, well covered; also the chest well protected. In sleeping in a cold room, establish the habit of breathing through the nose, and never with the mouth open. Never go to bed with cold or damp feet. Never omit regular bathing, for unless the skin is in active condition the cold will close the pores and favor congestion or other diseases. After exercise of any kind never ride in an open carriage or near the window of a car for a moment; it is dangerous to health and even life. When hoarse speak as little as possible until the hoarseness is recovered from, else the voice may be permanently lost or difficulties of the throat may be produced. Merely warm the back by the fire, and never continue keeping the back exposed to the heat after it has become comfortably warm. To do so is debilitating. When going from a warm atmosphere into a cooler one keep the mouth almost closed so that the air may be warmed by its passage through the nose ere it reaches the lungs. Never stand still in cold weather, especially after having taken a slight degree of exercise, and always avoid standing on ice or snow or where the person is exposed to cold winds.

Some attention has of late been directed to "badges of servitude." Any badge which is imposed on an employee to show that he is a lower class of being than his master, is necessarily an injustice, and badges are chiefly of that description. And even when they are not, it is necessary, in order to prevent any mistakes of identity that might occur, to make nurses and housemaids wear caps in order to distinguish them from their mistresses? The Christian and the American sentiment ought to make the "help" one of the members of the family in every way except that she may have more work to do and be paid for doing it. If the lady of the house is to show that she is more of a lady than her servant she must do it by her conduct. The imposition of a badge of servitude on her help lays her open to the charge that she had to do it to prevent the servant from being mistaken for the real lady.—Witness.

NATIONAL SUICIDE,

AND

ITS PREVENTION.

BY OSCAR F. LUMRY, PH. D.

Prof. Lumry's book, "National Suicide and its Remedy," will be read with profit even by those who do not accept its doctrine, that taking interest for money loaned, over 100 per cent, is sin, taking something for nothing. For, as Goldsmith said of his Vicar of Wakefield, 'Tis his fallings lead to virtue's side.

—Cynosure.

Dr. Lumry is a man of ideas and never fails to make his readers understand just what they are. Every sentiment he writes has such an air of honesty that it will in a measure disarm those who read to criticize. It is a good book to set people to thinking, whether they believe his theories or not. The book is well worth a careful reading and study.—Inter Ocean.

On all the points named they differ radically from those which prevail in the organization of society. Either they are true or false. It is a curious fact that all of them have been stigmatized by men of letters, and yet nearly all of them have been for some years steadily gaining the adherence of men of intellectual ability.—Times.

The Danger—The Laborer's Grievance—The Laborer's Foë—The Laborer's Fallacy—The Laborer's Hope—Mind and Muscle—Co-Laborers.

TIMELY TALKS ON AN IMPORTANT SUBJECT.

The Papers Say of this Book:

"It is well to remind the world of the great law of human brotherhood, but how to make the more general application of it? 'Aye, there's the rub!' Our author contributes his mite in that direction, and his voice and reasoning will reach some ears and perhaps touch some understandings and move some selfish hearts that are buttressed up very closely and hedged around by over much respectability and comfortable prosperity."—Chicago Tribune.

"The writer does his work in a way remarkable alike for its directness, its common sense, its impartiality, its lucidity and its force. He has no theories to support; he deals with facts as he finds them; he fortifies his assertions by exact and demonstrative statistics. The work is among the best of the kind if it is the best that has yet been seen. While it is scarcely possible for it to be put in the hands of all our wage-workers, we wish it to be read by every one of them."—Chicago Interior.

OF

WESTERN AFRICA.

BY J. AUGUSTUS COLE, OF SHAINGAY,
WEST AFRICA.

Bishop Fleckinger of the U. B. church says that, "This volume will well repay a careful reading not only for its discussion and exposition of these societies, but because it gives much valuable information respecting other institutions of that great continent."

J. Augustus Cole, the author of this pamphlet is a native of Western Africa, and is of pure negro blood. He has given much time and care to the investigation of the secret societies and heathen customs of Western Africa. He joined several of the secret orders for the purpose of obtaining full and correct information regarding their nature and operation. His culture and superior powers of discrimination render what he has written most complete and reliable.

FIFTY YEARS AND BEYOND;

OR,

Old Age and How to Enjoy It.

A most appropriate gift book for "The Old Folks at Home."

Compiled by REV. S. G. LATHROP.

Introduction by

REV. ARTHUR EDWARDS, D. D.,

(Editor N. W. Christian Advocate.)

The object of this volume is to give to that great army of men who are fast hastening toward the "beyond" some practical hints and helps as to the best way to make the most of the remainder of the life that now is, and to give comfort and help as to the life that is to come.

"It is a tribute to the Christianity that honors the gray head and refuses to consider the oldish man a burden or an obstacle. The book will aid and comfort every reader."—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

"The selections are very precious. Springing from such numerous and pure fountains, they can but afford a refreshing and healthful draught for every aged traveler to the great beyond."—Witness.

OF

A Happy Life.

28th THOUSAND.

Baptist Commendation.

"We are delighted with this book. It reaches to the very core of Christian experience, and is eminently experimental in its teachings. It meets the doubts and difficulties of conscientious workers after the bread and water of life, but whose efforts result only in alternate faintness and gloom. The author, without claiming to be a theologian, sends out the results of a happy and rich experience to help others into a happy Christian life."—Baptist Weekly.

Presbyterian Endorsement.

"The book is so truly and reverentially devoted in its spirit that it disarms criticism. It contains so much that is sound and practical, so much that, if heeded, will make our lives better, happier and more useful, that the intelligent reader who really wishes to lead a life hid with Christ in God can scarcely fail to derive profit from its perusal."—Interior.

Methodist Word of Praise.

"We have not for years read a book with more delight and profit. It is not a theological book. No effort is made to change the theological views of any one. The author has a rich experience, and tells in a plain and delightful manner."—Christian Advocate.

United Brethren's Approval.

"We have seldom met with a more interesting volume, abounding throughout with apt illustrations; we have failed to find a dry line from title-page to text."—Religious Telescope.

Congregational Comment.

"It contains much clear, pungent reasoning and interesting incidents. It is a practical and expending al lesson taught out of God's word, and is worthy of universal circulation."—Church Union.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

The Interior Department has information that the law of February 25, 1885, to prevent the maintenance of illegal fences on public lands, has been generally complied with throughout the West, especially in Arizona and New Mexico.

Surgeon General Hamilton, assisted by Manning Logan and Major Tucker, reset Mrs. John A. Logan's fractured shoulder-blade and elbow, the surgeon having made the discovery that the parts had begun to knit in the wrong places. The operation was entirely successful, and Mrs. Logan, though suffering intense pain, is reported to be resting quietly without suffering any ill effects from the ether she inhaled.

Chamber of Commerce and other bodies, of Cincinnati, Ohio, which have united to invite President Cleveland to visit that city, telegraphed him a letter of invitation, which will later be presented, formally engrossed.

CHICAGO.

The jury in the omnibus boulder case, after deliberating six hours Friday, returned a verdict of guilty, and fixed the penalties of the defendants as follows: Van Pelt, McClaughey, Wren, Ochs, Varnell, Wasserman, and Leyden, two years in the penitentiary; McCarthy, Caselman, Gells and Oliver, a fine of $1,000 each. Those of the boulders sentenced to the penitentiary were taken to jail. The penalties would have been heavier, but for jurymen Clark, a lively stable-keeper, who voted not guilty in spite of evidence plain as the sun at noon.

Edward J. McDonald, who was convicted with McGarigle, was formally sentenced by the Court to three years incarceration in the penitentiary.

William J. McGarigle, the runaway Freemason boulder, it is said, was seen to leave Quebec on a steamer bound for Gibraltar on Friday. Crown Prosecutor Greenhields, who attempted to arrest him on the Baxter warrant, says he acted in the matter for the Washington authorities.

James Baxter, the well-known financial broker of Montreal, swore out a warrant for the arrest of William J. McGarigle, charging him with conspiracy, the cause of action dating back to the time when the boulder was Chief of Police in Chicago.

The box factory of J. W. Hill, on North Branch street, above Division, was totally destroyed by fire, entailing a loss of about $85,000. One hundred employees had a narrow escape from death or serious injury. One girl was badly burned, and three firemen were overcome by the heat.

COUNTRY.

The National Civil Service Reform League held its sessions at Newport, R. I., Wednesday, and re-elected George William Curtis, president. The latter, in his address, criticized the conduct of the administration touching appointments to office, remarking that it was not, in any strict sense of the word, a civil-service reform administration. The resolutions state that a circular addressed to officials in July, 1886, has been disregarded, especially in Maryland, and points out changes that should be made in conformity to the law. It was stated that of 194 appointees in the Philadelphia postoffice 192 were Democrats.

The Glenn bill passed the Georgia House of Representatives Tuesday by a vote of 124 to 2. Two colored gentlemen opposed the measure, and the Atlanta colored university will probably fight it in the courts.

A large meeting of white and colored citizens was held Wednesday evening in Boston to protest against the enactment of the bill recently passed by the Georgia House of Representatives prohibiting the mixture of white and black pupils in the same school. Resolutions were adopted declaring the bill unconstitutional and likely to call down the judgment of heaven on the heads of the people of Georgia.

Gentiles claim a victory in the election in Utah Territory Monday. They elected six members of the Legislature.

The prohibition amendment was defeated in Texas by a majority ranging between fifty and sixty thousand.

In an election fight at Manchester, Ky., six men were shot or stabbed to death, and a number wounded.

General B. F. Butler denies that the first colored troops in the late war came from Massachusetts. He states that in 1862 he enlisted three regiments of colored troops in New Orleans, and had them in action long before colored soldiers were used at other points.

An earthquake shock was felt at Cairo, Jacksonville, Jonesboro, Centralia, and at other points in Illinois, about 12:30 o'clock Tuesday morning. No damage is reported.

Paul Grottkau, the Milwaukee anarchist, under sentence for inciting labor riots, was surrendered by his bondsmen Tuesday, and will have to remain in jail until the Wisconsin Supreme Court passes upon his case.

The big bull deal in wheat collapsed in San Francisco Wednesday. Top prices were reached last Monday, when the bulls offered $2.17½ per cental for wheat. Yesterday the market dropped to $2.14. This made the price 2½ cents per pound in San Francisco, against 1½ cents in Chicago, 1½ in New York, and 16-10 in Liverpool. The collapse of the deal was not attended by the usual excitement. Close estimates as to the losses inflicted by the collapse make them between five and six million dollars, in addition to which the clique is still holding and paying storage on enormous quantities of wheat.

Millbrook, Mo., a place of 500 inhabitants, was ruined by a windstorm Thursday evening. But one house in the town escaped being damaged. A boy was killed, and twenty-five other persons were wounded; none fatally.

Within forty-five minutes over two inches of rain fell Monday at Wheeling, W. Va. Many cellars and first floors were flooded.

Heavy rains Sunday and Monday in various portions of Kansas will, it is stated, be of great benefit to the corn crop.

Refreshing rains fell in some portions of Illinois and Indiana, Thursday, doing the crops a world of good. Farmers are hoping for an average yield.

Large tracts of pasture in Grundy county, Illinois, have been destroyed by fire. The fences have also been burned.

Thursday was the hottest day ever known in Buffalo, N.Y. In the street, in the shade at 1 o'clock, the thermometer registered 99 degrees.

Thousands of acres of land have been burned over in the neighborhood of Joliet, Ill. The flames were in some instances twenty feet high, and the fires rolled along the prairies faster than a man could run. One house, hay, machinery, fences, etc., were destroyed. The men are organized as fire-fighters; women are offering prayers for rain.

Five fatal cases of sunstroke were reported Friday at Pittsburgh, where, with a humid atmosphere, the thermometer registered 92 degrees.

A crazy Irishman calling himself Conrad J. Mooney, attempted Wednesday to blow up the British ocean steamship Queen at New York, but the fire which the explosion created was speedily extinguished. Mooney was apprehended and locked up.

The walls of a burned elevator at Minneapolis fell Wednesday morning upon a gang of workmen who were digging out the damaged wheat. Six were taken out dead and one was fatally injured.

A small excursion steamer having a party of locomotive engineers on board, capsized Thursday night in Lake Manawa, near Council Bluffs, Iowa. Five bodies have been recovered, but it is believed that two or three others also perished.

Four men were killed and several injured Friday by the falling of fifty tons of rock in the Cascades tunnel being built by the Northern Pacific railroad at Ellensburg, Washington Territory.

A beer-kettle in Rahr's brewery at Green Bay, Wis., exploded Wednesday night, scalding seven men, six of whom died of their injuries. The seventh will recover.

A Hungarian coke-drawer returned to work at Gallitzin, Pa., Tuesday, and his countrymen murdered him because "he was a traitor to the cause of their strike."

James Martin, a painter, fell from the Brooklyn Bridge 130 feet into the water Monday forenoon. The fireman of a passing tug jumped in and rescued him. Martin sustained no serious injury.

Miles Morris, of Jalapa Post, Ind., was fatally injured Thursday by the premature discharge of a cannon, in the sham battle which marked the close of the soldiers' reunion at Marion. Major George W. Steele was slightly injured by the reckless firing of another cannon.

For the sixth time in six months, some miscreants, supposed to be anarchists, attempted to burn the building occupied by the New York Zeitung.

Fire at Baltimore Thursday morning destroyed a cracker bakery, a cracker, cake, and candy factory, and a stove warehouse of Linbrandt, McDowell & Co. Portions of the stores of E. Whitman & Sons, Newton Kurtz & Son, E. B. Owens & Co., and E. L. Parker & Co., were also burned. A fireman is buried in the ruins, and Chief Engineer Hennick, of the fire department, was fatally hurt. The financial loss exceeds $500,000.

FOREIGN.

Further advices from Henry M. Stanley in Africa say that on June 6th the expedition reached a point half-way between Yambi and Yambunga, the latter being the farthest point on the Arwhimi reached by Stanley in 1883. Navigation was difficult and slow, because the boats were carrying all necessary supplies for Emin Bey in addition to the supplies of the expedition. Stanley chose the Arwhimi route in preference to the Stanley Falls route because he learned that by the former he would have better resources, and because the natives were friendlier.

Hawaiian advices to July 13, state that King Kalakaua signed the constitution on July 10. The time fixed by him for signing was July 7, but he postponed it until popular feeling was so worked up that any further delay would have worked disastrously to himself. This deprived Kalakaua of monarchical powers, and leaves him only power to draw salary and grant pardons. The advices also state that ex-Premier Gibson escaped on a bark sailing from Honolulu, and is now on his way to San Francisco.

The Czar recently sounded the Ameer of Bokhara as to whether his subjects would assist Russia in the event of war. The Ameer replied that his subjects were Moslems, and would rebel if he assisted Russia. A proclamation of the Czar has been posted on the gates of Samarcand, promising that Russia will not interfere with Turkomans and Uzbeks, provided Russian troops are allowed a free passage through the country.

On the 30th of June the city of Cuenca, Ecuador, was almost destroyed by earthquake shocks, but no loss of life is reported. Heavy damage resulted from the shocks at Azogues and Canar. At Quito, Cuenca, and other towns, the oscillations are reported as of a frightful character. Loss of life followed the disturbances at Guaranda, and at Guayaquil the shock broke all the telephone wires.

From January to June of this year there were 10,236 deaths from cholera in Chili, and the government spent $1,000,000 in fighting the plague.

There are some marked contrasts between the late National Educational Association which met in Chicago, and the ordinary lodge gathering, from the aristocratic Knight Templar to the humble Red Men. One of the most notable is suggested by an exchange which reports the remark of a saloon-keeper: "O, this convention is no good, no good at all. We provided 26 extra kegs of beer, but not a glass of it have we sold, not a drop; trade is just as usual, not as good as sometimes."

Elisha A. Robinson was the man who did the grocery business for the Chicago "boodlers." He is represented by the papers as lying right and left to vindicate himself, and in the midst of the general demoralization he cuts a sorry figure. He was a member of one of the city clubs, and resigned the other day to anticipate expulsion, which would have been genuine. The loud talk of the Freemasons about McGargle's obligation to Sheriff Matson, and the threatened expulsion of some of the conspirators must be regarded as buncombe until we learn what charges can be brought against them under the moral code of Masonry. The Daily News, in an editorial Monday, exclaims, "There is not a Masonic lodge, not a trades union, or association of any kind that can afford to keep on its roll of membership a self-confessed briber." It is this popular pressure that is compelling the lodge to act upon principles unknown to the old landmarks, and expel gamblers, saloonists, thieves and bribers.

To the reports of the disintegration of the Knights of Labor, the Craftsman of Washington, an able organ of labor societies, though tainted with the Henry George fallacy, gives some attention. Acknowledging the report as true the reasons are suggested. Heavy losses from expulsions, from the withdrawal of Germans because of the temperance clause of the new constitution, the alarm at the socialism and anarchism which prevail in some portions of the order—these are mentioned. "But," says the Craftsman, "this is not what is costing the most in loss of members. It is the direct opposite of any social movement. It is the intense individualism which is growing up. It is the growing desire to subordinate the general good to individual ambitions. While strenuous efforts have been made to keep the order out of politics, politics have succeeded in getting into the order." This is a confession that the independence which our American institutions foster is asserting itself against the cast-iron oaths of secrecy and obedience which the lodge demands of its slaves. The leaders of the Knights of Labor have endeavored to suppress individuality, and subject men of every grade of genius and skill to the same Procrustean rule. If the bands of their lodge are burst by the explosive force of the royal spirit of independence, it will be a good day for the workmen of America.

The Odd-fellow and Grand Army orders dropped the scenic and terrorizing part of their initiation when the discussion of the lodge had made them obnoxious and scandalizing. But this did not stop the growth or break the strength of those orders. If the skull act of the Knight Templars, the "rough road" of the Royal Arch, or the three ruffian performance of the Blue Lodge was cut out, Masonry would not weaken. To abolish polygamy would have the same effect on Mormonism. George S. Peters, the United States Attorney who succeeded Mr. Dickson, has begun such a suit as corresponds to our demand that the charters of the secret lodges be revoked, their oaths made illegal, and their accumulation of great properties impossible. The suit is against the Mormon church itself, to disincorporate it and wind up its business, escheating its property to the United States for the benefit of the public schools of Utah. Similar proceedings are to be instituted against the "perpetual emigration fund," which is used to send out missionaries and gather in their dupes. This puts the ax to the root of the tree, and if the government will sustain this action and carry it through, President Cleveland will have a claim on the gratitude of the nation which no small honor will satisfy.

We have, as a people, been slow of understanding in this Mormon business. As an ecclesiastical despotism, every crime under the heavens could be practiced in the name of religion if its priests have the power; and nearly every crime has been. Rev. Edward A. Lawrence, writing in the last Independent, tells of the suffering from open robbery and adultery enforced by the Mormon bishops, and adds, "I wonder how near our Eastern people are coming to see, what I have never before fully understood, that the secret, central evil of Mormonism is not polygamy, but hierarchy, and that the iniquitous system can be extirpated only by measures which shall break up the authority and destroy the influence of the priesthood. Polygamy is the cement to hold Mormons together. It is the bond which implicates them in a common guilt and crime, uniting in a common defense those liable to common penalties. Mormonism is a system of politico-ecclesiastical despotism. The claims of the Pope of Rome are not so exclusive as those of the Mormon priesthood." Their priestcraft gone, the tyrants of Mormonism will be like Samson shorn—like other men. Their power gone, their followers will go with it.

The railway disaster near Chatsworth, some seventy-five miles southwest of Chicago on the Toledo and Peoria road, last Wednesday night has had no equal for slaughter in the history of railroading in this country. The horrible details, which have filled page after page in our news sheets, amaze us that they should have reached such proportions, even after the first reports of 150 killed had been cut down by one-half. This long list of killed and wounded must be accounted for by the crowded condition of the long excursion train. Attracted by the low rate of $7.50 from Peoria to Niagara and return, some 700 people were crowded into fifteen cars and were plunged along through the night down a grade at a mile a minute, until the partially burned culvert was struck. The momentum of the train was so great that but a few car trucks were left in the shallow gap, and the cars drove one into another with a grinding crash, telescoping those before from end to end and piling seats, timber, iron-work and bodies of men, women and children in great heaps, deluged with blood. Some of these bodies were so crushed that neither personality or even sex could be recognized. Such a wreck can be accounted for by the high speed and the six sleeping cars hurling their immense weight upon the coaches ahead. This terrible wreck is a judgment against railroads for wooden culverts and trains of unmanageable length and weight; against the stock gamblers of New York for despoiling the road so that a reckless and fatal economy must be practiced to allow any profits; and it is also a judgment against the whole people for our rash indifference to the value of human lives. The Word of God while warning of its brevity and telling us of its poverty compared with the hereafter, yet everywhere admonishes of the value of the human life. Headless and selfish we rush on after pleasure, wealth and fame until God lets us see for a moment the end of our ways and we stand appalled and breathless at the sight.

SOUTHERN BARBARISM.

BY REV. H. H. HINMAN.

It is somewhat remarkable that people are not always consistent even in their moral convictions, and that now, not less than in ancient times, men tithe mint and rue, and omit judgment and mercy.

It is said that once on a time the good people of Newport, Rhode Island, were greatly shocked at hearing the clang of a blacksmith's hammer on a holy Sabbath morning. They hastened to find out the reason for such a desecration, but soon learned that a slave-ship had just arrived in the harbor and there was a deficiency of manacles on board. To protect this slave property they condoned the offence. They did see that Sabbath-breaking was a great sin. They did not see that slave-trading was a greater, or even any sin at all.

No friend of humanity but has rejoiced at the earnestness with which the South generally, and especially the State of Georgia, has taken hold of the temperance reform. Her distinguished ex-governor, Colquitt, has been not less eminent for personal morality than as champion for State and National prohibition. There has been most praiseworthy effort for the promotion of general education, and her colored citizens have not been forgotten. The distinguished author of "Our Brother in Black" has contributed largely and manfully to the great work of Negro culture. How strange, then, that the Georgia legislature, which makes annual appropriation for the support of Atlanta University, should favorably entertain a proposition to punish the self-denying Christian men and women of that institution with heavy fines and imprisonment in the chain-gang, because they have, while educating the Negro, given instruction to their own children in the college classes.

Christian men and women of the North have contributed in the aggregate some millions of dollars to the support of this and similar schools. Teachers of the highest culture and refinement have endured social ostracism and much privation to do a work required not less for the well-being of the State than for the interests of humanity. They took pains in securing the charters of these institutions to provide that none should be excluded from their benefits on account of race, and they find themselves rewarded by a proposed law that shall compel them to not only exclude all white people who may wish to avail themselves of these excellent schools, but even their own children, under the penalty of the chain-gang, the special and far-famed barbarism of that State. That the old hatred to the Negro should still survive, and seek renewed recognition in the laws of the land, is not very strange; but that so gross an abomination should be endorsed by the public press of the South is most astonishing.

The fear is that a time may come when there will be mixed schools. Not content with stringent laws excluding all persons who have the slightest trace of Negro blood from white schools, they propose to interfere with the personal rights of parents and guardians as to how and when they shall educate those under their control. They profess to fear that ere long there will be social equality and miscegenation; and yet, strange to say, no class of persons have done so much to despoil the ex-slaves of their native color as the class of men who propose and press such enactments as the one now pending. In Georgia, and all over the cotton-growing States, there are many men who are living in unlawful cohabitation with colored women, and they pass as respectable. Some of them have, in times past, been those whom "the people delighted to honor." If any of these men had honorably married any of the women that they have thus wronged and dishonored, or if they had treated them as socially equal, they would have been cast out of society. Their great crime against God and humanity is quietly ignored.

Whatever may be said of social equality, there is a broad distinction between this and the right of education in the public schools. No Southern student feels compelled to extend social equality to all the students of his college. If amalgamation be an evil, nothing tends so much to promote it as the degradation of the Negro; or to postpone it, as the Christian education of both races. The right of all persons, without distinction of race, to a Christian education, will surely be vindicated. Already several colleges in the South admit all persons without regard to race, and this revolution will not go backward.

I am somewhat glad that this exclusion in Georgia, by the proposed law, is based on having a white instead of a black skin. I imagine that her white people are not so lost to all decency and self-respect as to deny to the white youth the privileges they provide for the Negro, or to send men and women to the chain-gang for educating their own children. THE WONDERS OF PROVIDENCE.

BY REV. J. M. FOSTER.

Rev. David Nelson, in his "Cause and Cure of Infidelity," has some facts which are of interest to all. Air once breathed is not fit to be inhaled a second time. Exhaled air is poisonous, and if we were compelled to breathe the same air again and again, we must all die. There is a provision for this. The air cast out of the lungs is heavier than the other, and falls to the ground. But it will certainly pile up strata upon strata, taking first the animals whose nostrils are nearest the ground and finally killing us. That cannot occur, for the grasses, weeds, flowers and leaves drink it up as the fleece drinks in the dew. In the winter time there is no green thing to perform this office. Then the creeks, lakes and rivers perform it. The frosts may sheet these with ice; then the winds sweep away the poisonous vapors into the lakes and seas. From decaying animal and vegetable matter there arises a poisonous vapor called hydrogen gas. It is lighter than common air and ascends to the clouds. But the air above will certainly become charged with it if not removed. There is another gas in the air called oxygen, and this united with hydrogen forms water; but it takes a powerful force to unite them. As the earth revolves upon its axis a current of electricity is generated which encircles the earth. This is very powerful, as we know from the fact that when it leaps from the clouds to the earth it shatters mighty oaks. When it thus powerfully leaps from one cloud to another it strikes together these two gases and forms water. You have noticed it rain harder just after a flash of lightning or a peal of thunder. Thus rank poison is converted into a refreshing shower.

In midsummer the heat increases very rapidly during the early part of the day. If it continued increasing at the same rate until night, the harvest hands would be driven from the field, and the crops consumed. But it does not. Sprinkle a room on a very hot day and the water soon evaporates. During the process the room is made cooler. As the water was converted into mist it took up the heat or caloric in the room and carried it away. Take away heat and you have cold left. So the summer sun shining on fountain, lake and river, converts the water into mist, which is constantly flying away with the caloric, and the heat does not become unbearable. At twilight in midsummer it gets cooler. The cold increases during the early part of the night. Should it continue to increase at the same rate until morning, all the crops would be destroyed by frost.

But it does not. As the cold increases, the mist of the day is again changed into water and descends in the form of dew. When converted into water it again parts with the heat which it took up; so that the heat it took away in the day-time it brings back at night. So there is a provision made against destructive heat in day-time and destructive cold at night.

Some substances mix more readily with water than common clay; others not so readily. Sugar and water unite at once. Sulphur and water commingle with great difficulty. Now had our earth been of the same consistency as sulphur, the rains would have swollen the rivers without profiting the soil; or had it been like sugar, we could not have stepped out of doors after a shower without being mired. But a kind Providence has made it neither one nor the other, but a happy mean. As a farmer takes up his ax or plow he can profitably remember that of the twenty-nine metals, iron is more plentiful than all the rest, more tenacious and durable, and it alone may be mended by the process of welding.

But all these are natural provisions; have we any extraordinary? Take the map of South America and you will find that the mountains skirt the sea instead of being in the center of the continent. In those inland territories they have no rains. The Andes mountains are very high. The trade winds carry the clouds against them and there is a perpetual thunderstorm. The rivers are kept in a constant freshet, and they are very large. This answers the purpose of irrigation. The hot sun shines upon these mountain showers and converts much of them into mist. This is converted into dew during the night. The dews are heavy in South America, almost amounting to showers.

It does not rain in Egypt, and there is no mountain in the proper place to intercept the cloud, nor is there any current of passing clouds to be there condensed, even had the Andes lifted their heads along the shores of the Red Sea. No cause, or combination of causes, is found powerful enough to water plentifully the fields of Egypt, yet it has been called the granary of the world. 1. Egypt is unlike every or any kingdom of which we have read, in being not level merely, but flat enough to be overflowed. 2. A river runs through the middle, large enough to flood a wide range of the earth's surface. 3. The mountains of the Moon invite the clouds, or a number of causes unite to produce the result. It rains there with sufficient profusion to swell a river high enough to cover a kingdom. The Nile rises in the mountains of the Moon. 4. The distance from where the Nile receives the rain to Egypt is sufficiently protracted. It takes the flood several months to descend, so that the waters do not reach the fields where they are needed too soon, or at an improper season of the year. 5. The rains fall at the proper season of the year, and in sufficient abundance.

Greenland is without a forest. Do you ask how are they warmed in winter? Sailors tell us that train-oil is their fuel. If you had no resource for fuel but train-oil, you could not get that, for the whale is ordered to swim nearest to those who most need his flesh. But wood is wanting. Their houses must be covered; their spears and javalins must have handles. Without domestic or hunting utensils, boats or fishing tackle, their homes cannot be tenanted; without wood these things cannot be made. Travelers tell us that a certain current of the ocean, or certain winds, or both united, bear along in a proper direction the once stately tree, and another and another with abundant constancy, and lodge the needed forest between the islands. There it remains until needed by those whom the Lord forgets not. The soil does not nourish the needed oak for their convenience, but the billows obey His voice and bear it to them.

A single glance at these adaptations is sufficient to satisfy us that all God's works are tributary to man's well-being and happiness. The same Being who made man, formed, it is evident, the animals which minister to his comfort. Animal life, again, is dependent upon vegetable life, and vegetable life is dependent on the soil and atmosphere; and so the wide earth is seen to be one great whole. Animal and vegetable life are again dependent on the changes of the seasons produced by the relation between the earth and the sun, on the length of the days of the years, and these are occasioned by the laws and adjustments of the solar system. The solar system, again, is manifestly connected in the government of God with other systems; for it "appears that our sun is advancing nearer to certain fixed stars, and moving away from others, and that in obedience to laws which regulate other suns and systems of suns." So we see that "this vast, majestic, interminable universe of God" is all made tributary to man's well-being and happiness.

SOME SIGNS OF THE TIMES.

BY W. H. MILLER.

A young man, a personal friend, was the other day being solicited to join one of the ready-made "brotherhoods" that are springing up all over the country. Being present, I was asked for my opinion of the order, and gave it promptly and in no very complimentary terms. The recruiting agent of the "Legions of Mysterious Palaver" was very much surprised to hear me speak in that strain, and although he was a "High Priest," "Princely Potentate of the Petrified Pig Stickers," and no telling what else, he turned to me with an oath and said, "Well, I didn't think you were one of those — long-haired cranks who are opposed to all secret societies." Just having had my hair cut, I was compelled to acknowledge that my appearance was somewhat against me, but told him that nevertheless the cause of those long-haired cranks was my cause.

But after he had turned contemptuously on his heel and walked away, I could but think that after all he was right in sizing up the Anti-masonic element in Streator as a collection of fossils or century plants. Here on one hand is a poor little church standing alone in opposition to the cohorts of regalia-decked secretism. In it a few old gray-haired veterans in the fight, like Joel T. Buckley, and only some four or five young men who are known as open opponents of the lodge. On the other hand there is a "chapter" of the R. A. M. numbering among its members almost all the young business men of prominence in the city, eight Knight Templars among them, the oldest being less than twenty-seven. Besides this a dozen other organizations filled with young men.

Now away down in my heart of hearts I love and respect a "crank." I admire his stick-to-itiveness. I glory in his spunk; because he is a radical of the radicals. But being a "crank" brings with it its peculiar disadvantages, as well as its benefits. Reformers are sometimes so intent upon the final outcome of the struggle that they fail to notice and take courage from the signs of improvement along the way.

Take for instance the temperance reform. No one but the most sanguine of the many thousands of noble men and women engaged in this work would ever think of looking for results in the saloons. Yet fifteen years ago if a man called for a glass of lemonade in a saloon the bar-tender would look at him with the same amiable expression that ornaments the face of a mad bull when you shake a red rag at him. Now, all this is changed, and in any of our fashionable hell-holes you will find a list of temperance beverages as long as your arm. Temperance work, temperance agitation and temperance literature are doing their work where least expected.

So with Anti-masonry. Not so many years ago the organizers of these orders dwelt long and eloquently on the high, ennobling and elevating origin, teachings and influences of these societies. But this is an age of scale and crucible and chemical analysis. These pretensions of the lodge have been weighed in the balances and found wanting. Skeptical as are men in modern days, many of them see clearly that the "charity" and "love" that are inspired by fear of having ones internal organism cut out if he should violate some diabolical, blasphemous obligation, is vastly different from the generous, spontaneous out-going of a human heart towards our fellowmen. As a result of this feeling the lodges have been compelled to reduce their so-called "brotherly love" and "benevolence" to business principles. So there have sprung up the numerous "endowment ranks," "insurance branches," etc., attached to the various orders. Now it can be conclusively proved that a man can obtain all these advantages outside of lodges and without being compelled to take an obligation to shield his "brother," Tom, Dick or Harry, from the results of any misdeeds which he may see fit to commit, "murder and treason not excepted."

These facts should be laid before the young men of the country more forcibly than they have ever been before. Keep them away from the influence of the men who say, "the lodge is religion enough for me," and your chances for converting them to Christ will be so much the better. If you can do nothing else, perhaps you can induce him to put off applying for admission to these orders until he is so old and decrepit that they will black-ball him the minute he presents himself for initiation. For the strangest thing about these great "benevolent" orders is that their "love" and interest in their fellowmen decrease as the needs of the latter multiply. O consistency, thou art indeed a jewel — made of India-rubber.

I see, too, that Master Workman Powderly has been expressing himself as being in favor of throwing the next general assembly of the Knights of Labor open to the public. Perhaps the time will come when those who have the interests of labor truly at heart will realize that the existence of these secret orders, which claim (and too often have substantiated that claim) to grant their members superior privileges over their fellows, are in a great degree responsible for the existence of the strong caste feeling which manifests itself more and more in our country. A feeling which too often causes labor to confront the insolence of money with nothing more reasonable than the insolence of muscle, instead of solving the whole difficulty by a consistent and practical application of the Golden Rule.

These views may interest no one but myself, nor can I claim that my studies of men and events are very deep or profound, but I think they are at least practical. So from my review of the field I am constrained to take a hopeful view of the situation. My situation and abilities are such that I, perhaps, can do but little in the fight, but from my standpoint of youthful, optimistic hopefulness I wish to send a word of encouragement to the grand old warriors who are in the midst of the fight.

Streator, Ill.

PRACTICAL NOTES.

While the great mass of Freemasons would, no doubt, disclaim the assumption that their order is a religious institution, every intelligent member must be aware of its tendency to teach some sort of theology. Ronayne says that Masonry is a perpetuation of the old Baal-worship, and then, from Masonic authorities, shows that it professes to be a substitute for the "new birth" prescribed by the Word of God. It is true that the order is not bound by any of the creeds of the churches, but ranges all the way in its religious liberty from "The Great Architect" to "good devil," so long as Christ and his religion are not openly confessed in the lodge. "Every man has his religion," it is said, whether he worships money, a canonized woman, a graven image, an idea, or the God of the Bible.

If further evidence is needed to prove that Masonry is a religious institution, the following historical fact should settle the question forever: At Cherokee Hill, eight miles from Savannah, Georgia, May 23, 1821, "the society of Freemasons of the United States, with the Grand Master at their head," organized a new "church for all denominations, expressive of the universal love of the Great Architect to all his creatures." Whether it survived the summer heat or not, I never heard.

Imagine a prayer-meeting conducted by "dyed-in-the-wool" Masons only—such men as usually "meet upon the level and part upon the square"—men who swear by the lodge and live off the profits of it. I think it would resemble a Universalist prayer meeting at St. Charles, Ill., several years ago, which failed because no one present could lead in prayer. It was new business for them!

"I don't care what the institution is. I know that if I had $150 with which to join the Masons it would be the best investment I could make." The speaker was "a young man, the son of a widow," and she was one of the Lord's own dear people. A few weeks afterward I heard that he had stricken down his saintly mother with his clenched hand, and I wondered if he would not have found the lodge a genial retreat.

I have before me a little book, written by a Mr. Baddeley—ominous name!—which speaks of "Lutier, Calvin, Wesley, Whitfield, and other deluded and wicked men;" says that "Fox's Book of Martyrs is full of lies; to speak modestly, there were in them," (Fox's writings) "at least 10,000 notorious lies;" that "there is nothing in the Protestant religion that can make a man more holy or more virtuous;" that Protestants "receive no benefit when they go to the Lord's supper, because they receive nothing but a sup of wine and a morsel of bread;" that "they have no houses of devotion, no convents or monasteries—scarcely a book of spirituality; no restraints to put upon their passions and appetites," with an abundance of other nonsense of the same sort. The title of the book is "A Sure Way to Find Out the True Religion." I prefer the Bible way.

And now the Grocery and Butchers' Clerks' Association of Chicago, with a membership of 1,800, apes the older secret clans and has its Secretary (two, in fact), Treasurer, Orator, Sergeant-at-Arms, Guard, Sentry, Supreme Council, etc. I suggest that they adopt the lamb's tail, instead of the lambskin apron for a badge.

OLD AMERICAN.

THE COVENANTS OF MASONRY: ARE THEY IRREVOCABLE?

ADDRESS OF REV. C. F. HAWLEY BEFORE THE CHRISTIAN CONGRESS.

Masonic oaths or covenants are not imposed upon men either by the authority of church or state. They are, therefore, extra-judicial.

Because they are not imposed by law, they cannot be enforced by law. Men are not held, therefore, by the authority of civil government to adhere to their Masonic covenants. Legally, they have no binding force. To renounce them, therefore, is not a crime.

If civil government has not authorized, and, therefore, will not enforce Masonic covenants, by what authority are they administered, and by what power enforced?

Christ, into whose hands the Everlasting Father hath given all power in heaven and in earth, has commanded, saying, "Swear not at all." From his authority there is no appeal. He is the supreme law-giver, as well as the supreme judge of the universe. If he does not mean to forbid the taking of an oath, when required to do so by the authority of church or state, as the Friend Quakers believe, he does, at least, mean to forbid all unauthorized, or extra-judicial swearing. Oaths administered in voluntary associations, such as Masonic lodges, are extra-judicial, and hence forbidden by the Supreme Lawgiver of heaven and earth. If extra-judicial and forbidden, they must be profane and wicked.

If civil government will not punish the breaking of Masonic oaths, because they are not legally administered, will the divine government punish men for renouncing Masonic covenants that they were forbidden to take? It must be a sin to do what Christ forbids. Who will affirm that it is morally wrong to renounce sin?

It is the covenant that makes the Mason. By it Masons are bound or yoked together. Christ, by the Holy Ghost, forbids his people to be yoked together with unbelievers. Yea, more, he commands those who are thus yoked to separate themselves so entirely as not to touch the unclean thing. Masonic oaths cannot be irrevocable when those who have not taken them are forbidden to do so, and those who have taken them are commanded to renounce them, so entirely as not to hold themselves bound in a single point; for if, in a single point, the renouncing Mason is still bound, at that point he touches the unclean thing. Dare any one affirm that it would be a wicked perjury to do what Christ by the Holy Ghost commands?

What is an oath? Is it not an appeal to God to judge and punish us if we do not do as we swear to do? God is a holy being, and he will punish us if we commit sin. We cannot morally bind ourselves to commit sin. In other words, we cannot make it right to do wrong by promising or swearing that we will do a wrong. If we could, the man who would do enough swearing, could nullify the whole law of God, and make it right for him to commit all manner of iniquity and sin.

What is the character of that oath that binds to sin? It is blasphemy! The oath must be renounced; the course to which it binds forsaken; and mercy obtained through our Lord Jesus Christ, if such an one would escape the wrath of God. The Masonic covenants bind to sin. God forbids sin, and commands repentance. The covenant that binds to sin is nullified by the divine command to repent; and hence cannot be perpetual, as is claimed.

Do you say, I admit the force of the argument if the premise that Masonic covenants bind to sin is true?

To prove that the covenants of Masonry bind to sin, let us analyze some of them. The Entered Apprentice is sworn "ever to conceal" as well as "never to reveal" Masonry. But Masonry has been revealed. Adhering Royal Arch Masons have testified under oath, in the courts, to the correctness of the revelations, and that repeatedly; so that any one who knows the facts is absolutely certain that Masonry has been truly revealed.

Can a Mason be morally bound by an oath to conceal that which has already been revealed? President Finney, before he became a Christian, was made a Mason. After he was converted he met with them, and told them that he perceived that the lodge was not the place for a Christian; and that he should meet with them no more. Upon further reflection, he says, "I saw that I could not be morally bound by my Entered Apprentice obligation 'ever to conceal' that which has already been revealed, unless I could be morally bound perpetually to lie." "For," he adds, "I saw no way by which I could conceal what has been revealed only by duplicity and falsehood."

Master Masons are sworn to keep each other's secrets, murder and treason excepted. Royal Arch Masons are sworn to keep each other's secrets, murder and treason not excepted. The Master Mason may elect whether, or not, he will conceal the crime of the murderer, or the traitor to his country; but the Royal Arch Mason is sworn to conceal the crime of the murderer and the traitor, as well as the crimes of horse thieves, burglars, swindlers, counterfeiters, adulterers, and saloon-keepers who violate prohibition laws. And these oaths by which Masons are bound to keep criminal secrets are administered with the knowledge of the fact that the persons taking them are liable to be summoned as witnesses, and judicially sworn to tell the whole truth in regard to the matter that they have been Masonically sworn to keep secret.

We do not affirm of any particular Mason that he would disregard his civil oath and commit perjury. All that we affirm is, that in such a case, if he adheres to his Masonic covenant he must commit perjury. The Mason swears without any mental reservation. His covenant, therefore, cannot mean, I will keep these criminal secrets unless judicially sworn to divulge them. If, when brought to such a test, a Mason does not brave the wrath of God, and perjure himself as a witness in the court, it will not be because he is not held to do so by his Masonic covenant. Nor will it be because he has not been taught to regard his Masonic covenant as a supreme obligation, that cannot be nullified either by civil or ecclesiastical law.

The men who teach Masonry by the authority of the Grand Lodges, have taught him that his Masonic covenant is perpetual; that no law of the land can affect it; no anathema of the church weaken it; that it is irrevocable. Yea; they have gone so far as to assure him, that if he strictly observes his obligations he will be free from sin. If, then, a Mason, when the contingency arises, does not become the accomplice of the rascals and murderers and traitors, whose crimes he is sworn to conceal, by strictly observing his obligation, and committing perjury in the court, it will be because he chooses to repudiate his covenant as a Mason, rather than trample on both human and divine law.

Will any one have the hardihood to claim that a covenant that binds to sin and crime is perpetual? We have shown that an oath that binds to sin is blasphemy. Christ offers to forgive all manner of sin and blasphemy, except the blasphemy against the Holy Ghost. But Christ will not forgive those who do not repent. God has commanded all men everywhere to repent. But how can a man repent, who has committed blasphemy by taking an oath that binds to sin, except he renounces the covenant by which he is bound? When God commands repentance, and Christ offers to forgive the blasphemy that has been committed in taking the oaths that bind to sin, are not those men apostles of Satan who teach that the covenants of Masonry are irrevocable?

Again, Master Masons are sworn to apprise each other of all approaching danger, if in their power. As criminal secrets are to be kept inviolate, the conclusion is irresistible that the obligation to warn of approaching danger includes the danger arising from the commission of crime.

When a Master Mason realizes the fact that he is bound to complicity with crime, must he conclude that the covenant by which he is bound is irrevocable? A Master Mason is sworn to fly to the relief of those who give the grand hailing sign of distress, at the risk of his life, if the person who gives the sign appears to be in real distress. A Royal Arch Mason is sworn to espouse the cause of a companion Royal Arch Mason, when in any difficulty, so far as to deliver him out of the difficulty, whether he be right or wrong. We have shown that men are not held by the authority of civil government to adhere to Masonic covenants. Will any one affirm that God holds them bound by his authority to warn criminals of their danger of detection or arrest; and when arrested and brought to trial, to commit perjury rather than witness against them; or as jurors adjudge them guilty; and though guilty, espouse their cause, so far as to deliver them from suffering the just penalty of violated law?

Civil government is ordained of God: and he who conspires against it by seeking to defeat the equal administration of justice, cannot hope to escape divine vengeance by pleading that his Masonic covenant bound him thus to do. When a man takes the oath of an Entered Apprentice Mason he consents to have his throat cut, and his tongue torn out, if he does not, without any evasion, keep his covenant. When he is made a Fellow Craft he consents to have his heart torn out if he does not faithfully observe his covenant. When he takes the Master's degree, he consents to have his body severed in twain, and his bowels burned to ashes, if he does not keep his covenant. When he takes the Royal Arch degree he consents to have his skull smote off, so as to expose his brains to the scorching rays of the sun, if he does not become the accomplice of all manner of criminals, murderers and traitors not excepted. Does not that man become the accomplice of the criminals whose crimes he covers, and whose cause he espouses, so far as to deliver them from just punishment?

What horrible blasphemy for a man to appeal to a just and holy God to judge and punish him if he does not strictly abide by a covenant that binds to sin and crime! And what shall be thought of that man who consents to be brutally murdered if he does not commit the wickedness he swears he will commit. Is not that man who kills himself as really a murderer as he who kills his neighbor? Has a man, therefore, any more right to consent to his own murder than he has to consent to the murder of his neighbor? And yet each Mason has implicated these savage penalties upon himself if he does not strictly observe his covenants.

We might examine the higher degrees. But, as we have shown, Masonry is bad in the beginning, and continually grows worse as we advance to higher degrees. We have seen that the Masonic covenants bind to sin. The wages of sin is death! God does not delight in the death of the wicked. He commands the wicked to turn from their wicked ways and live. May not those, therefore, who have been guilty of profanity, and blasphemy, in taking the covenants of Masonry, renounce those covenants and obtain mercy through our Lord Jesus Christ? Will any one affirm of the Holy Lord God, that he requires them to continue in sin? Said a pastor of the M. E. church to me, "I committed a great sin when I was made a Mason; but I have obtained mercy through Christ." He then declared that Masonry was correctly revealed as far as he had gone.

Oaths, the administration of which are unauthorised, and the taking of which Christ has forbidden, are manifestly, as we have shown, profane and wicked. Oaths which bind to sin and crime are clearly seen to be blasphemy. Satan would be a party to a covenant that binds to sin; but dare any one affirm of the God of holiness, in whom there is no unrighteousness, that he would be a party to such a covenant? that he requires men to commit sin and crime, if they have affirmed or sworn that they will do so? If God does not bind men to keep the covenants of Masonry, then such covenants are not morally binding. It cannot, therefore, be a sin to repudiate and break them. It was a sin to take them; but it is not a sin to renounce and break them.

With the fact before us, that the covenants of Masonry have no legal nor moral force; that neither the civil nor the divine government will enforce them; and that it is neither a crime nor a sin to break and cast them off forever; there may be still the feeling in some hearts, that it would be dishonorable to do so: that if the covenants of Masonry have no legal or moral force, they have at least the force of a bond of honor.

You, my Masonic friend, have heard so much about the ancient and honorable institution of Freemasonry, that you feel that somehow it would be dishonorable to repudiate your Masonic obligations. But were those obligations fraudulently obtained? Is there nothing in them that "can conflict with any of the exalted duties that you owe to God, or your country, or your neighbor, or your family, or yourself?" as the Master of the lodge, upon his honor as a man and a Mason, assured you. When they examined your head, after you had been knocked into the canvas with the setting maul of Jubulum, and pronounced your skull broken, did they give you an honest and truthful opinion? When they assumed to bury you six feet deep in the earth, did they actually do it? When they dug you up, was your body the putrid corpse that they assumed it to be? And were you actually raised from the dead? as they assumed that you were.

"O, no!" you say. "There was nothing real or truthful in this. When they assumed to kill and bury me, and then uncarth me after my body had become putrid, and resurrect me, they were only acting a part in Masonry, saying words that Masonry had put in his mouth to say, just like those which declared that your skull was broken by the setting maul of Jubulum. But you were made to believe that he was giving you an honest, truthful judgment of the Masonic covenants. But now that you know that Masonry put a falsehood in the Master's mouth the same as she did in the mouth of him who pronounced your skull broken with the setting maul of Jubulum; and that the covenants of Masonry do conflict with your duty to God, to your country, to your neighbor, to your family, and to yourself; and that it is neither a crime nor a sin to renounce them; can you for a moment fancy that you are in honor bound by a covenant that was so fraudulently obtained?

Is the pure-minded maiden, who is beguiled by false representations into consenting to become the wife of one who, as she afterwards learns, has a lawful living wife, in honor bound by her promise to him, who by lying pretensions had won her confidence? When she finds that her contemplated marriage would be unlawful and sinful, and that her promise to become a wife was gotten by deception, must she conclude that she is in honor bound to the deceitful wretch by a promise given, as she supposed, to an honest and honorable man?

Again, I ask, is that man who has been induced to become a Mason, on the assurance that there is nothing in the covenant he is required to take that can conflict with civil or divine law, in honor bound by that covenant, when he finds that Masonry is a Satanic conspiracy against the law of God and the Gospel of Christ, as well as the administration of equal justice among men? Must he always hail, ever conceal, and never reveal this wicked conspiracy against Christianity and civil government?

When the victim of Masonic fraud sees no way to conceal what has already been revealed, only by duplicity and falsehood, and foresees that he may be judicially sworn to reveal the criminal secrets, that he has sworn as a Mason to keep inviolate, must he conclude that he is, at least, in honor bound to live and act a lie? and when the contingency arises, to commit perjury in the courts? Who will affirm such a horrible doctrine, and thus seek to shame the dupes of Masonry into perpetual allegiance to sin and Satan?

We have seen that civil government has not authorized the administration of Masonic oaths, and, therefore, will not punish their violation; that to break a Masonic oath is not a crime. We have further seen that Christ, in whom dwells all the fullness of the Godhead, and into whose hands, as mediator, all power, in heaven and in earth, is given, has positively forbidden men to take the oaths of Masonry; and through his apostle, commanded those who have taken them to renounce them so completely as not to hold themselves bound in a single point thereby. We have also seen that the oaths of Masonry bind to sin and crime, and that therefore it is an insult to reason and conscience and to the God of holiness to assume that they have any moral force. We have further seen that Masonic covenants cannot have the force of a bond of honor because gotten deceitfully. If, then, Masonic covenants have no legal or moral force, nor even the force of a bond of honor, what force have they?

I answer, they have brute force. The savage penalties imprecated awaken fears of possible assassination. The Masonic boycott, too, has its terrors for the man of business. Then, many lack the moral courage to do right, in spite of the scorn that will be poured upon them if they repudiate their Masonic covenant. Others are superstitiously held, by being made to believe that the oath of Satan, that binds to sin and crime, is just as morally binding as the oath of God that binds to duty and to truth. So when men see that they are bound by their Masonic covenants to commit sin, they superstitiously believe that it would be a greater sin to renounce these Satanic covenants than it would be to go on and do the wrong they, as Masons, are sworn to do. And so by physical or moral cowardice, or by religious superstition, men are chained to Satan's chariot wheels and dragged onward to perdition.

How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of them who preach glad tidings of deliverance to these captives, the opening of their prison doors, and a release from their bonds. Let the good work go on, and the day hasten when Gospel converts in Christian lands will renounce Masonry as uniformly as the converts to Christ in heathen lands renounce pagan idolatry.

The old lodges were the churches of heathenism. The modern lodges are heathen churches in Christian lands, and their dances and pilgrimages are like the festivals of the older mysteries, when Aaron had set up the calf, the people sat down to eat and drink and rose up to play. It is not necessary to say that many worthy men are in these orders and are ignorant of their character. The Gentiles thought that they were sacrificing to the sun, moon and stars. They thought themselves worshipping forms of beauty and sources of power; but the Holy Spirit said that they were sacrificing to devils. Ministers of the Gospel now preach Christ on the Sabbath, and then write and speak for these infidel associations, which profess to send men to heaven without confession of sin, prayer for pardon, or the mediation of Christ. They make pilgrimages with knights who dance, drink, and travel on the Sabbath. If Paul were to write of their proceedings he would probably speak as he did of the secret societies existing in his own day.—Christian Conservator.

OUR BOSTON LETTER.

GEORGE E. McNEILL'S VIEWS ON THE SOURCE OF INTemperance.

One of the most conspicuous names that appears in connection with the labor movement in this country, is that of the president of the Eastern Division of the Knights of Labor, and editor of a leading workingman's journal published in this city—George E. McNeill. Should Mr. Powderly be deposed, it is strongly probable that McNeill would succeed him as Master Workman.

It cannot be doubted that McNeill's practical knowledge of the most advanced doctrines and workings of political and social economy is as extensive as that of any other agitator of his species, and his executive abilities have been sufficiently demonstrated in the minor offices of the order to recommend him as a candidate for the responsible, not to say perplexing and thankless position which Mr. Powderly occupies.

In regard to the temperance phase of the wage question, while it is evident that Mr. McNeill believes in the fundamental principles of temperance, his views concerning its cause and propagation must be criticised as being the result of either near or farsightedness. I am loth to suspect sophism.

Honestly enough, perhaps, as he asserts, he sees intemperance evolving from poverty, rather than poverty from intemperance. And this is to be considered as only a sort of optical delusion, especially when it is remembered that McNeill wears the glasses of the cause he espouses. Everything must be reduced to the focus of its doctrines. If poverty is the consequence of capital's dominion over labor, it is perfectly consistent for laborites to attempt to squeeze the juice of intemperance from the fruit of capital's alleged oppression—poverty. To acknowledge that poverty is congealed from intemperance would be most disastrous. One of labor's strongest arguments is poverty, which it claims has been created by capital. Therefore, it can be easily seen that an admittance that poverty is largely the result of intemperance would mitigate the effect of the accusation heaped upon capital. Here sophistry on the part of labor might be employed, and doubtless is.

While we are not prepared to say that all poverty is caused by the inordinate use of alcohol, yet we sincerely believe all poverty is caused by intemperance in the broadest sense—intemperance in business, living, pleasure, etc., etc., all lead to poverty, ultimately.

Capital takes advantage of poverty, and utilizes it for selfish interests, but never creates it.

In reply to many requests for an expression of his views on the temperance phase of the labor enigma, Mr. McNeill enters somewhat exgetically into a lengthy elucidation of the cause or causes of intemperance, and arrives at a conclusion which he claims incontrovertible, that those born in poverty are not responsible for that condition; furthermore that the poor are not inheritors of land or water, the machinery of production, because they are capitalized; that the course of the poor man's child is fearfully hampered by his environments.

Now, it is wholly needless for Mr. McNeill to assume a defensive attitude in the utterance of propositions which no rational mind would dream of antagonizing. They are self-evident facts. Presumably, Mr. McNeill would infer, (his meaning at this point being somewhat ambiguous), that because of their impoverished circumstances the children of the poor are doomed to intemperance. But this would be sophistry. To avoid his superfluous as well as superficial argumentation, Mr. McNeill's definite conclusion, in a word, is that poverty is the source of intemperance.

Now as a theorem, which I think can be easily demonstrated, I maintain that alcoholic intemperance is not born of poverty according to the common application of the term, but is caused directly by the abnormal condition of the reasoning faculty, ties, social morals, and appetite; that though intemperance is not always the parent of poverty, it is its sister, and never its child. Such a child would be a monstrosity.

If poverty, as Mr. McNeill claims, is the cause of intemperance, how does he account for the fact that at least 50 per cent of the intemperance of the world exists among the well-to-do and wealthy classes, and that a larger per cent of temperance can be found among the abject poor than among the more wealthy? To recapitulate, a larger quantity of liquor is purchased and consumed by the well-to-do and rich classes than by the poor. There are as many, if not more, rich drunkard's graves as poor.

To say that poverty supports and enriches Boston's thousands of licensed saloons would be to ignore philosophy, logic and fact. To say that the thousands of saloons support Boston's poverty would be altogether in harmony with the elements of sound reason. Nine cases of poverty caused by intemperance can be produced to one case of intemperance caused by poverty.

There can be little doubt that disappointment has driven persons of inferior brains, or others whose minds were temporarily deranged, to intemperance, and it may be that Mr. McNeill speaks from experience, since his followers in this city have been doomed so often to disappointment, but he must be careful not to confound temporary disappointment with chronic poverty.

TO IOWA READERS OF THE CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE.

DEAR FRIENDS:—I hope you will all renew your subscriptions to the Cynosure. Some of you have been readers of the paper from the first, or at least for years, and you say, Why, of course we are going to renew; you can count on us to sustain the organ of the N. C. A. reform until it shall triumph, or we be called to our final reward. Others of you have subscribed during the year past. Will not you, also, please to renew your subscriptions?

As an organized despotism, the secret society system is undermining the foundations of civil liberty. As an organized system of idolatry and deistic infidelity, it must be regarded as a Satanic conspiracy to subvert Christianity, by reviving idolatry and spreading deistical infidelity. Surely the enemy has come in like a flood, but the Spirit of the Lord has lifted up a standard against him. The Cynosure is a necessity for the promotion of this reform.

Subscribers are a necessity to this, as well as every other paper. You may differ with some correspondents, or with the editor about some things, but you are in sympathy with the reform the Cynosure advocates. Seeing, then, that you are in sympathy with the anti-secret society reform, and every reform must have its organ, please to help the reform by continuing your subscription to the Cynosure.

I especially appeal to you who have received the Cynosure through my agency. C. F. HAWLEY,
State Agent of the Iowa C. A.

THE NEW IBERIA SCHOOL.

NEW IBERIA, La., Aug. 8, 1887.

DEAR EDITOR:—Before I left Wenona, Ill., Mr. Peter Howe decided to buy the property for the Iberia High School and hold the deed in his own name for a time, when, if the colored people do the best they can and satisfy him as to their business capacity and their ability to properly conduct a good school, he has promised to give them a quit-claim deed. He sent the money to Rev. Byron Gunner, president of the Iberia Christian Educational Association, and entrusted him with the conduct of the entire business, and as Mr. Gunner was able to pay cash he obtained the property for $4,500.

Mr. Jerome Howe, son of Mr. Peter Howe, and one of the firm, was here for a few days after the bargain was consummated, and he examined the property and expressed himself as perfectly satisfied with the transaction. He attended an educational mass meeting, at which the colored people spoke of their interest in the school, and their determination to do all in their power to make it a success. Mr. Howe gave an excellent address in which he spoke words of encouragement to them, and said he was delighted with the spirit of self-help that they manifested, and with the interest they showed in their own improvement, and was sure that if his father were present he would consider his donation to the Iberia School the best investment he had ever made. Contributions were called for, as has always been done on similar occasions, and over $30 were raised. When Mr. Howe saw the colored people come forward and place their dollars, fifty cents, etc., on the table, he remarked to the writer that it reminded him of the widow's mite. Mr. H. contributed a barrel of paint. The building needs to be painted inside and out, and they require a great deal of money to put suitable desks and seats in it, and supply it with black-boards, maps, etc. They are also in great need of a piano. They expect to open school the 1st of October, and very much desire to fit it up respectably and comfortably by that time. Who will help?

CHRISTIAN WORK FOR THE ILLINOIS STATE MILITIA.

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., Aug. 10, 1887.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Your correspondent spent several days this week in visiting Camp Lincoln near the beautiful city of Springfield. The camp is a fine tract of land one mile long by one-fourth wide, and has been purchased and improved by the State of Illinois at great expense, for a permanent camp for her soldier boys, of which she has about four thousand. The boys have been in camp by regiments this year ever since July 29, and will continue in camp for some weeks to come, as each regiment stays in one week or eight days. The 8th Infantry, which is now in camp, is one of the largest, numbering some 700 men, and it would be hard to find that number anywhere else that would have such a number of gentlemen in it. They are a fine set of "boys," and are a well-drilled regiment, doing honor to their commander, Col. Smith. The Y. M. C. A., with which your correspondent is connected, is doing a noble work among the soldier boys, and its influence can be seen in the conduct of the men of the "Illinois National Guards." Every evening there is singing and a Gospel meeting at the tent of the Association on the grounds, which is largely attended, and the interest manifested is marked. What our soldiers want is a chance to receive good home influence, exercised by good men and women; for give them half a chance and they will be an honor to our State and country. If we look down on them and shun their company as soldiers, we drive them to seek company of evil men and women, which is too much the case with our soldiers, both Regulars and Guards. Then, fellow Christians, reach out a helping hand and save those who are most exposed to danger. Yours in the work,

S. A. KEAN.

TOKENS IN THE SOUTH.

THE LODGE LOSES ITS GRIP ON ANOTHER CHURCH.

MEMPHIS, Aug. 10, 1887.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—We have had another victory for God and the right, over the secret society empire. The Pleasant Grove Baptist church at Marion, Ark., eighteen miles away, which was closed by the edict of the clan in a high-handed proceeding a month or so ago, has been re-opened by the decision of the chancery judge last week. Just think! Four hundred men and women left their fields and crops, and attended court two days, watching and waiting to see and hear if a judge would give their church property to thirty men who belonged to the lodge. Lawyer Crittenden, a white man, after whose ancestors the county was named, fought bravely for the lodge party. Hon. W. M. Randolph, also white, of Memphis, was employed to assist him. Before the judge he deplored his condition, and said he thought he was on the side of the majority and hence on the side of the church. The judge ridiculed the idea of thirty men attempting to take the church out of the hands of four hundred, and talked of impeaching the colored Masonic magistrate by whose authority the church was closed, for he was a party to the transaction, hence, incompetent to have issued any such order.

Immediately after the judge had rendered his decision, the church bell was rung, and the valiant four hundred marched in, singing, "All hail the power of Jesus' name." They resolved themselves into a regular business meeting and excluded every one of the Masonic and Odd-fellow satellites from the church. The brethren sang, the sisters shouted, and all gave God the glory.

The following week, the lodge gents concluded that there would never be any harmony between them and the church, so they sent for some of the prophets or priests of the Baal kind from Memphis to come over to (Macedonia) Marion, and help them organize a new church, whose creed would be lodge-ry; and on Saturday I learn that some of the priests were on hand, but the organization did not pan out.

Bro. Robinson is very eager now, that we have an association of ministers in this part of the country composed exclusively of ministers who are opposed to the lodge iniquity. Not a single week passes that we have not some public demonstration from the lodges. My heart grows sick as I see daily the depth to which the people of my race have sunk in lodgism. I cannot divine the infatuation with which they seem to be enchanted. A few days ago there was a large funeral and something like two hundred men were in line of procession. The funeral was attended at the large church a few doors east of our office, and for one and a half hours they remained within the walls. It was scorching hot, and by the time they had reached the church three men in the line of the procession had burned out, and two of them had to be sent home in hacks. One of the dignitaries, an old friend of secret-society, ante-bellum days, came in the office and I shamed him and told him of the folly of killing half a dozen men to bury one. He acquiesced, pulled off his regalia and went home. After the preaching some ungodly men read some heathen burial service, and the religious members came out grumbling.

"The good time is coming on," and soon I expect to see the Babylonian empire of secrecy fall to the ground. There was, however, one sad sight that greeted my eyes last Sabbath. I had heard during the week that several of the members of the church had children in the secret societies (Juvenile departments), and I concluded to try the Sunday-school and see how many could be found, and out of 152 scholars 70 of them had been baptized into the lodge, and 50 of them are now in good standing in the Juvenile Tents. I was shocked, stunned, completely abashed. In nearly every instance, these children had ungodly fathers who belonged to some secular body, and not to the church; not one of these children were over 10 years of age.

I succeeded in getting one of these little ones to tell how she joined, and this was her story: "They tied a hank'chief on my eyes so tight it hurt me, and then they rattled a big chain all around my feet, and I got scared and just hollered as loud as I could, and they told me to stop or I would be killed, and then a big man called 'father of the tent,' made a noise like a goat; and they put me on a wooden goat covered with hair and jumped me up and down, and then they tied a big rope around me, and they pulled me way up to the wall. My eyes was tied, but I could see all the time, and when the rope went up I just hollered, I thought they would let me fall. Then they said, 'Let there be light,' and they stamped with their feet and untied my eyes quick! And then they said I was born. I don't know what they meant, but I knowed I wasn't born. And then they stood us all up and a man came and drewed a big knife like a sword across our throats and told us if we told he would kill us. But I wasn't afraid, and went home and told my mother and I did not go back any more, for I did not like it."

This little girl is only 10 years of age and as bright as can be, but you have no idea of the amount of anger that was kindled in the little hearts of some of the other children who belonged to the same tent in which this little girl was initiated. Now I have a new fight on my hands; I expect to wade in and by God's help get these little ones out of these lodges. I expect to make a house-to-house visit, and will report to you the result of my labors in that line.

I am also leading a detachment of the Prohibition brigade and we are by the grace of God making some strides in that way. The white people here are wide awake to the issue.

Rev. R. A. Venable, pastor of the white Baptist First church of the city, preached one or two pointed sermons on the subject in his church in which he impeached municipal and state officials. He was summoned before the grand jury for his utterances, but they were afraid of him, and did not question him—in fact, were afraid to do so. We hope to carry the State for Prohibition on the 29th of next September. Pray for our success.

R. N. COUNTREE.

SEVENTH DAY AND FIRST.

EVERLY, IOWA.

EDITORS CYNOSURE:—I have long time withheld my testimony and council, not for lack of interest, but knowing that there are so many that are so much more gifted and able than I am I have seemed to shrink from the undertaking. I have felt a deep interest in the Sabbath question, and have read all that has been published in the Cynosure with deep interest, yet to my mind it seems to me there is a lack of knowledge of what the Bible teaches on that subject. I care but little what man or sect teach; I want to know what God teaches about it, so I have for some time been searching his Word to find out.

I joined the church when eleven years old. In the creed that I subscribed to I said, "I believe in the Christian Sabbath." I took it for granted that that was taught in the Bible. Some four or five years ago a lady asked me if I had ever examined the Bible on the Sabbath question. I said I never had. She said, "Will you?" I said, "I will." I knew she was a Seventh-day Baptist, and I had no doubt but I could prove from the Bible that the first day of the week was the Sabbath. But when I found that the word Sabbath was used 167 times in the Bible, and after finding each text and reading it and its connections, I could not find a sentence or word or syllable about the changing of the Sabbath from the seventh to the first; that it ever was changed or ever would be; that not one of the disciples or Christ ever changed it, or that any one of them ever kept the first day for Sabbath, but that Christ and all the disciples invariably kept the seventh day for Sabbath, I was utterly confounded and ashamed and mortified to think that I had been preaching so long and had put so much confidence in man as to let any man write a creed for me and not compare it with the Word of God. But it has cured me. I can never belong to a sect again. God has put no man in this world to lord it over me and tell me what I must believe. His Word is my creed, and not the word of man. God has set me free.

I am here at Everly, Clay Co., Iowa, preaching in six different places once in two weeks; have no church organization at any of the places, but preach in school houses, and have good audiences usually. I am farming about seven acres of land and cut my own hay to feed three horses. I have to travel about twenty-five miles per Sabbath, four or five of the distance on foot, because I choose it. My health is good; crops are A, No 1. I do not think I ever saw all kinds of crops as good as here. The rust did some injury to wheat, but not much.

I think if my health continues good I may, when the evenings get longer, go out and lecture some through the week in this county, and perhaps get some Cynosure subscriptions. But this hot weather I have all I can well do. As I never write my sermons I can't go back over my old ones, so I have to study considerable to keep up with the times. We are having a good shower as I am writing. We have had plenty of rain all the season. I have corn that stands higher than I can reach, just in the silk. I. BANCROFT.

MASONIC M'GARIGLE.

FREEMASONRY TURNS THE BOODLER LOOSE.

The Chicago Journal says:

It appears about time that the Masonic order, of which McGarigle is a member, should purge themselves of the scandal and disgrace that he has caused. He is a convicted felon and should be excluded from their ranks. In addition to this, he violated his parole of honor with Sheriff Matson, a Mason of high rank, causing the latter great injury. An outcast every other way, he should be cast out of Masonry.

The beloved boodler and the sheriff, both sworn brethren, sworn to the very life, and that obligation backed by the most fearful death penalties known to fallen man. This convicted felon, still a good Mason, in care of a Masonic sheriff has considerable Masonic license and is now off on Masonic parole. How proud the people of Chicago should be of the beautiful workings of Masonry. The citizens should foot up the costs of the trial with becoming grace, remembering that Freemasonry is a grand thing.

JAH-BUH-LUN!

LINCOLN'S MEMORY DISHONORED.

I was at the Kansas Chatauqua, day before yesterday, or on Soldiers' Reunion day. I heard and saw many things in which I delighted and approved; but there were two circumstances which were horrible, in my opinion. The first was General Tuttle of Iowa, who asserts himself commander-in-chief of Iowa G. A. R. When he was first introduced, I thought of him as the Copperhead candidate for governor of Iowa; but the loyal people of the State said he was a good man, but he was "snake-bit." After his speech had progressed far enough to allow an opinion to be formed of him, I was reminded of Andy Johnson's career, and I should be afraid to trust the snake-bitten general. If he could see any chance to make a haul by turning traitor, I am afraid he would accept, and secure the prize.

When I afterward got a seat immediately in front of the speaker's platform for the last exercises of the day, I saw ex-President Lincoln's picture where I believed he would not suffer if it was living, and had any knowledge of its use. It was in the center of a banner, the top line of which read, "Lincoln Post, No. 1." The bottom line showed that it belonged to the G. A. R. of Topeka, Kansas. As to Lincoln's position on the secrecy question, let those answer who know of the Masons telling him at Cincinnati, they wouldn't vote for him unless he joined the lodge. He retorted, "Are you so foolish?"

AN OLD SOLDIER.

PITH AND POINT.

MISS WILLARD AND THE GOOD TEMPLARS.

I was much interested in Mrs. Blanchard's letter to Miss Willard and her reply. I believe Miss Willard is all right at heart, and I hope she will come to see before long that Mrs. Blanchard's position is the one most consistent with Christ's teachings. I believe the majority of the Good Templars would be willing to quit "their rat-hole lodges," as Pres. Blanchard says in a late Cynosure, if she and other W. C. T. U. women would present the truth as winningly and sweetly as Mrs. B. has done. Would it not be well to publish her letter to Miss Willard or something similar for distribution among the W. C. T. U.—E. E. FLAGG.

NOT MANY MIGHTY ARE CALLED.

When Talmage and some of our most gifted preachers and college professors refuse to use their influence and powers to crush this secret foe of the human race, we seem to hear the Master again saying: "If these should hold their peace the very stones shall cry out." If these men refuse to honor God by preaching his truth God can pluck witnesses from the darkest land on the globe, and from the most despised race of earth, and his name will shine and his fame will last through all time and in eternity he will stand at the right hand of Him who is trying to overthrow heathen worship and hear the Master's "well done," while some talented minister, seeking wealth and popularity will cry out, "When saw we thee?" in the bondage of darkness and came not unto thee.—A. BUTLER.

BREAKS AN ARM BUT NOT HIS COURAGE.

I am writing this with my left hand. I am unfortunate enough to have broken my right arm in the elbow joint—a bad break,—so I am discouraged from writing much though I continue to do a little. I often wish I could join you in your hard but noble work of assailing the Prince of Darkness in his secret strongholds and with you hold forth the Word of Life. The Lord bless your work and extend your influence.—JOEL SWARTZ, Gettysburg, Pa.

A WORD FROM INDIA.

What a tangle of secret sins and base vices we have to fight against! The demon Lust is at the head of most of it. The terrible vice in high society in England, which was so clearly exposed by Mr. Stead and others, is largely hidden behind secrecy; and Romanism, heathenism, spiritualism, etc., have their mainprings in vile sexual lusts. Among millions the religion they profess is only a cloak.—W. J. G., Bombay.

THE INFLUENCE OF SECRET SOCIETIES ON THE CHURCHES.

The address of Bishop Milton Wright in the Christian Cynosure of Aug. 4, 1887, was read by the undersigned with an increasing degree of approbation. It is both true and convincing. Concerning the final phrase, "O, that Zion would arise," etc., remember that every bishop, pastor or layman is called upon to give an account of his stewardship because they have absolved in the name of Christ the oath-bound members of secret societies, knowing that they are spirits which do not confess that Christ is come in the flesh. Show to me a minister, who, with clear knowledge of the facts, can defend himself for the act of celebrating or administering the Lord's supper to members of secret societies, and the writer will defend to you how Zion shall arise, shake herself from the dust, and put on her beautiful garments of purity, light, righteousness and salvation.—K. BIBLE LESSON.

STUDIES IN THE NEW TESTAMENT.

LESSON IX.—August 28.—Piety without Display.—Matt. 6: 1-15.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Man looketh on the outward appearance, but the Lord looketh on the heart.—1 Sam. 16: 7.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

COMMENTS ON THE LESSON BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The right way of almsgiving. vs. 1-4. The teachings of this passage may seem at first view inconsistent with the command, "Let your light shine before men." But when we come to examine it carefully we shall find there is no real discrepancy. It is the seeking of human praise which is here condemned, the doing of good deeds for the purpose of being seen of men. He only has come to "the full stature of a perfect man in Christ Jesus" who does his noblest actions with a grand unconsciousness of self. When we are perfectly healthy we think nothing about our bodies; so if spiritually healthy our thoughts will be entirely outside of ourselves. It is impossible to always keep good deeds hid, as in the case of those who give their whole lives to the service of humanity. But they can still keep the spirit of the command. The most valuable gift we can make our fellow-men is to give ourselves, and he who sincerely does this has no longer a self. It has passed out of his keeping, like the sacrifice already bound to the horns of the altar. Self-surrender is not merely the duty of a few philanthropists; it is the privilege of every Christian. It is a state of mind rather than a form of conduct which is here commanded. He whose only object is to win the praise of God will not be ashamed to offer his mite, when a mite is all that he has to give, anyone than he will be lifted up with pride if fortune has favored him so that he can cast in much. "Do not sound a trumpet before thee." We shall always find that just in proportion as an organization has selfish ends in view it will do this very thing, trumpet its charities. This is the grand characteristic of the secret orders. They are always publishing abroad the good they do, but the church gives no report of its charities to the world, and the veriest child should be able to discriminate by this test alone between the vine of God's planting and the strange slip which is not of his planting and whose end is to be rooted up.

2. The manner of true prayer. vs. 5-15. True love is not demonstrative in public and before strangers. Our love to God follows the same natural law. When we sincerely want to commune with him the impulse is towards privacy as it would be in the case of a dear human friend. At the same time there is no secrecy about true affection, and should the tongue of slander assail the loved one's name it will not lack courage to defend its own. So this is no command to keep our religion secret or shrink from showing our colors when we wear the honor of God's name impugned. Vain repetitions are either a proof of insincerity or of small faith. They are either mere forms like the Chinese prayer wheel, or they are real petitions addressed to a deity in whose readiness or willingness to answer them the petitioners have no full belief. This is to pray the prayer of heathen; and the Lord's prayer is so modeled in its grand conciseness and childlike simplicity as to be a continual rebuke to all such lip service whether in the closet or the pulpit. We are to seek first the kingdom of God. It will have the first place in our petitions if it has the first place in our hearts. Then we are to pray for all needed blessings for ourselves and others. Give us this day our daily bread cannot be restricted to the bare necessities of life, for man does not live by bread alone, but it means everything necessary to our highest well-being. And lastly, we are to keep to the thought that it is an all powerful being of whom we ask these things. Thine is the kingdom and the power and the glory forever. Not shall be but is.

Notes of Rev. Dr. Brookfield in the Truth.

Our Lord here is no longer dealing with the law, as in the preceding chapter, but shows the disciples that they have to do with their Father in secret. Hence he says, "Take heed that ye do not your righteousness (r. v.) before men to be seen of them." This practical righteousness is to be displayed, not before men, but before God, in the three forms of almsgiving, prayer and fasting. These are just the things in which man's vanity betrays itself, and our Lord would cut it up by the roots, when he forbids us to let our left hand, not some other person's left hand but our own, know the gifts bestowed by the right hand. Of course he does not forbid public prayer, but only that private prayer shall be in secret. Then follows "The Lord's Prayer," as it is called, or as it is really, "The Disciples' Prayer," the former being found in John 17. No one but a believer, or one born again, has any business to use it, for none but the regenerated can say, "Our Father." As commonly uttered by the ungodly, it is as useless as the senseless repetitions of a parrot.

1. "Hallowed be thy name." With a true child of God this is always the first petition, the starting point of all other supplications. Lev. 10: 3; 2 Sam. 7: 26; 1 Kings 8: 43; Ps. 137: 17-19; Isa. 6: 3; Luke 2: 14; 1 Cor 10: 31; 1 Pet. 4: 11; 1 Tim. 2: 16; Rev. 4: 8-11.

2. "Thy kingdom come." If the kingdom had already come, as the post-millennialists say, there would be no propriety in offering this prayer. Ps. 2: 6-9; 45: 1-6; 72: 8-11; Isa. 2: 2-4; 9: 6, 7; Jer. 23: 5, 6; Dan 2: 44; 7: 13, 14; Luke 1: 32, 33; Rev. 11: 15.

3. "Thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven." This is the desire of a soul subject to God, and it will be gratified when the promised kingdom shall have come. Isa. 11: 6-9; 54: 13; 60: 19-21; Jer. 31: 34; Dan. 4: 34, 35; Mic. 4: 1-4; Hab. 2: 14; Rev. 19: 16-21.

4. "Give us this day our daily bread;" the word rendered daily being variously translated sufficient, necessary, convenient for one's subsistence, supplied with the coming day. It includes, therefore, all of our wants, temporal and spiritual. Ex. 16: 15; Ps. 33: 18, 19; 34: 10; Prov. 30: 8; Isa. 33: 16; Matt. 4: 4; 6: 25-34; John 6: 31-35; 2 Thess. 3: 11, 12; 1 Tim. 6: 6-8.

5. "And forgive us our debts, as we forgive our debtors." If an unregenerate man means anything when he offers this petition, he is invoking the judgment of God upon his head. The forgiveness of a believer rests upon very different ground. Luke 24: 47; Acts 5: 31; 10: 43; 13: 38; Eph. 1: 7; Heb. 9: 22; 1 John 2: 12.

6. "And lead us not into temptation." Matt. 26: 41; 1 Cor. 10: 13; Jas. 1: 12; 1 Peter 5: 8, 9; Rev. 2: 10.

7. But deliver us from the evil one. Acts 10: 38; Eph. 4: 27; 6: 11; Heb. 2: 14; Jas. 4: 7; 1 John 3: 8; Rev. 20: 2, 3. This beautiful prayer, divinely perfect as it is, was not designed to be an established formula for all time, since we find our Lord afterwards saying to his disciples, "Hitherto have ye asked nothing in my name; ask, and ye shall receive, that your joy may be full." After the descent of the Holy Ghost it is never mentioned, but now we pray in the name of Jesus.

OBITUARY.

GEORGE SMITH died at the residence of his mother in Willimantic, Conn., July 26th. Bro. Smith was born in Stonington, Conn., Oct. 1st, 1843. He gave his heart to Christ when about twelve years of age but did not make public confession of his faith by uniting with the church until later in life. He was a zealous Christian worker, always manifesting an especial kindness to those destitute of the comforts of life, even willing to divide with them his last shilling and then point them to the Lamb of God for a cleansing from sin. He also took a deep interest in all moral, and especially the temperance and anti-secrecy reforms. The following is from the Connecticut Home, a prohibition paper published in Willimantic:

Mr. Smith has long been known as an earnest worker for the moral welfare of Willimantic, and in his quiet, humble way he did many kind and generous acts. He was an active advocate of all reforms and took special interest in the success of the Home. Of late years he has been chiefly engaged in nursing the sick, for which he had rare natural fitness, and his services in that capacity were in demand as long as his strength held out. He leaves a mother and three sisters and many friends to mourn his loss. The funeral will be held at his late home Friday morning at 10:30 and will be private on account of the smallness of the cottage. Elder Hezekiah Davis of New Britain will officiate.

IN BRIEF.

San Francisco physicians have discovered 107 cases of leprosy among the hoodlum class of boys who smoke cigarettes made by Chinamen.

The population of Russia, according to the census of 1882, is given at 77,879,521 in European Russia, of whom 38,651,977 were males and 39,227,544 females. The total population of the entire empire including Finland was a little over 102,000,000, or about one-twelfth of the population of the globe.

The Mormon missionaries who are proselyting in Great Britain held a meeting in London recently, and reported that their greatest success had been in Scotland and Wales. In London their mission had been an entire failure, for which they adopted a resolution invoking the curse of God on that city.

One of the most singular features in the scenery of the Territory of Idaho is the occurrence of dark, rocky chasms, into which creeks and rivers suddenly disappear and are never more seen. The fissures are old lava channels, produced by the outside of the mass cooling and forming a tube, which, when the fiery stream was exhausted, has been left empty, while the roof of the lava duct, having at some point fallen, presents there the opening into which the river plunges and is lost. At one place along the Snake one of these rivers appears gushing from a cleft high up in basaltic walls, where it leaps a cataract into the torrent below. Where this stream had its origin or at what point it is swallowed up is absolutely unknown, although it is believed that its sources are a long way up in the North country.—Virginia (Nev.) Enterprise.

The laughing plant is so called because its seeds produce effects like those produced by laughing gas. The flowers are of a bright yellow, and the seed pods are soft and woolly, while the seeds resemble small black beans and only two or three grow in a pod. The natives dry and pulverize them, and the powder, if taken in small doses, makes the soberest person behave like a circus clown or a madman, for he will dance, sing, and laugh most boisterously, and cut the most fantastic capers, and be in an uproariously ludicrous condition for about an hour. When the excitement ceases the exhausted exhibitor of these antics falls asleep, and when he awakes he has not the slightest remembrance of his risiky doings.—Shanghai Celestial Empire.

An English writer tells the following: A family let their house furnished, leaving it in a large dog. The tenant was an old lady who liked to sit in a particularly comfortable chair in the drawing-room, but as the dog was also very fond of this chair, she frequently found him in possession. Being rather afraid of the dog, she did not care to drive him out, and therefore used to go to the window and call "cats!" The dog would then rush to the window and bark, and the lady would take possession of the chair. One day the dog entered the room and found the old lady in possession of the chair. He ran to the window and barked excitedly. The lady got up to see what was the matter, and the dog instantly seated himself in the chair.

It appears from careful investigation that President Cleveland, who is represented as the enemy of the soldiers, has approved, within the two years and five months of his administration, seventy-seven more private pension bills than Presidents Grant and Hayes approved in twelve years, and one hundred and twenty-seven more than Presidents Garfield and Arthur approved in four years. Upon the same careful inquiry it is stated that he has appointed more ex-Union soldiers to office than any other President, and he has approved various acts increasing the pensions of Union soldiers, and of their widows, minors and relatives. Moreover there have been 139,180 more pension certificates issued in the first two years of the present Democratic administration than in the preceding two years of a Republican administration. In the same time there has been an increase of more than $16,000,000 in disbursements on account of pensions, and a net gain of 15,408 pensioners upon the rolls in favor of the Democratic administration. The cry against the President upon this subject is political. It is an attempt to prostitute the Grand Army of the Republic into a partisan agency. But intelligent citizens see that it is not the ex-Confederate brigadiers who are fostering sectional hatred and attempting to rekindle for a party purpose the passions of war.—Harper's Weekly.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, AUGUST 18, 1887.

MASONIC BOODLE.

"The devil was sick, the devil a monk would be:
The devil was well, the devil a monk was he."

There is reason to believe that several of the convicted boodlers will get a new trial anyway, even though the State declines to stand the expense. Those of them who are Freemasons have committed offenses over which the State has no jurisdiction, but for which they will undoubtedly be tried nevertheless. Chief among these is McGargle, though his chances for a speedy trial are much less favorable than those of some of the others. Varnell is a Mason, and, with ex-Warden Frey, belongs to the lodge of which County Attorney Bliss is Master. Grand Secretary Gilbert Barnard said in reference to the matter yesterday that the Grand Lodge would take no action in trials of these men for unmasonic conduct. Those trials, he said, would be conducted by the lodges of which the guilty persons were members.—Chicago Tribune.

The Missouri Grand Lodge has lately turned half prohibitionist, and forbid Masons to keep saloons though they may and do drink the liquors over the saloon counters by the hogshead.

Since a brisk fire is opened on the whole lodge system, like the devil sick, the lodges must turn saints. They have shammed a condemnation of the atheism of the Grand Orient of France; and now they will try the "boodlers;" though every man of them who has taken seven degrees is sworn under penalty of death to defend the boodler Masons, be they right or wrong.

After the Morgan infamy had sunk 1,500 lodges, the papers were full of projected Masonic asylums; but who knows now what or where they are. So poor old Dr. Ely of Philadelphia travelled the United States to collect one dollar from every Mason, to purchase Maria College of Missouri to make a Masonic college. He got some dollars, but not the college.

"O what authority and show of truth Can cunning sin cover itself with."

THE AURORA AUSTRALS.

Do the readers of the Cynosure all know that there are Southern as well as "Northern Lights." They are of electric origin like the Northern, seen in extreme Southern latitudes; and like the Northern, they fill the heavens with beaming coruscations, coming from no one knows where. Well, if any one doubts that moral sunlight is now rising in the South, let him take up last week's Cynosure and read over and again Rev. Lewis Johnston's letter from "the dark and bloody ground," on page 5th, the vote of St. Marion Association.

"Yes," said one, "the ministers (colored) of St. Marion Association went with a rush to the Lord's side, after their leaders; but they may yet rush back again, when led the other way." But we trust not. The National Republican of Washington, D. C., has been sent to the colored preachers, containing a discourse against the lodge, and the Memphis (Tenn.) Appeal has been widely circulated among Southern Democrats, containing another discourse spoken in Bro. Countee's Tabernacle church. Bro. Hinman has for years "scattered the living coals of truth" in Southern churches and colleges. The American Missionary Association, which (the negroes have learned) was born of the struggle to save the Mendi Africans from the tortures of the slave-pirates, Montez and Ruiz, has taught the ex-slaves, who can read, that secret societies are their enemies, and as fast as the colored churches revolt against the lodges, their Northern friends will hold them fast to the right.

But all human labors, in this cause, are like holding out a dozen tin lanterns to help produce an Aurora Australis.

As Mr. Johnston says: "God was in the fight" at Varner, Ark., and the moderator (Robinson) was right when he reminded the crowd that Christ's final separation of the wicked from the good was prefigured in that vote which put Christ's worshipers on the right hand, and the worshipers of Baal on the left. God grant that the colored people throughout the United States may yet be thus unanimous for Christ.

Let us hear from Moderator Robinson, and from Bro. J. C. Battles; aye, from every one of the ministers of St. Marion Association. Do they all know that a large central church building in the city of New Orleans is engaged for an N. C. A. convention next winter? Does Rev. Byron Gunner wish to have a meeting at New Iberia, before or after the New Orleans meeting?

The colored people of the South have a full million of votes; and they have learned one thing of the old masters, that is, not to stop at the logical half-way house, but to follow their principles to the practical end. Neither Frederick Douglass nor John R. Lynch belong to secret lodges; and as the colored pastors now clearly see that the lodges are destroying their churches, there is time between now and November, 1888, to secure a balance-of-power colored vote which will force the successful candidate for the Presidency to take ground against liquor and the lodge. Douglass is an Anti-mason and Prohibitionist.

Let us begin at once to work and pray for an Aurora Australis the coming winter. Dr. Henry M. Smith of the Southwestern Presbyterian is as pronounced against the secret Baal worshipers as Dr. McCosh of Princeton. So are Drs. Witherspoon of Nashville, and Stratton of Natchez. Indeed, in our extensive travel and conversation in the South, we could not hear of a single minister of the Presbyterian Church South who is a Freemason; and as Jefferson Davis, whom the colored people with good reason regard as their evil genius, has, by his Texas letter, ranged himself on the side of the saloons, the colored voters will naturally lean to the American Prohibition party against liquor and the lodge.

Let us hear from the South. How many colored ministers will attend a national meeting in New Orleans next winter? All write to the Cynosure at once.

REFORM POLITICS.

It is announced by the prohibition press that "John B. Finch, chairman of the National Committee of the Prohibition party, has issued a circular calling a meeting of the committee in Chicago November 16. The object of the meeting is to make arrangements for the National Convention of 1888. On November 17 a general conference of Prohibitionists will be held in Chicago, for suggestions and consultation, and all members of the party are invited."

The first National Prohibition party convention met in Farwell Hall, Chicago, Sept. 1, 1869. It adopted the name Anti-Dramshop party in compliment to Gerrit Smith, but afterward changed it to "National Prohibition." February 22, 1872, the party met at Columbus, Ohio, as a mass meeting, owing to its "imperfectly organized condition." They nominated Hon. James Black and Rev. John Russell for President and Vice President of the United States.

In 1876, May 17, "over one hundred delegates" met in Cleveland, Ohio, as a second nominating convention and nominated Hon. Green Clay Smith of Kentucky for President, and Hon. Gideon T. Stewart of Ohio for Vice President.

June 17, 1880, one hundred and forty-two delegates met in Cleveland, Ohio, and nominated Hon. Neal Dow of Maine for President, and Rev. H. A. Thompson of Ohio for Vice President.

The present Prohibition party was formed by a joint convention of the Prohibition Reform party, the Home Protection party, and a "People's Call" for a convention, issued by the National Liberator. These three bodies met in Farwell Hall, Aug. 23, 1882, fused and formed the present Prohibition Reform and Home Protection party. This is the party which nominated St. John at Pittsburgh, July 23, 1884.

THE AMERICAN PARTY.

In May, 1872, at Oberlin, Ohio, a large convention formed the American party, so named because the founders and framers of the United States Constitution forbid both Congress and the State legislatures conferring "titles of nobility" or to create "privileged orders," both of which are done by Masonic lodges; and they enforce and protect them by their secret oaths and tribunals, as shown by the able State paper drawn by Wm. H. Seward. Seeing, moreover, that brewers, distillers and saloon-keepers are commonly Masons, the framers of the American party, whose platform is prohibition, were afraid to trust prohibitionists who are bound by Masonic oaths to the importers, manufacturers and vendors of liquors. They will either keep those secret oaths or break them. If they keep them they will betray the temperance cause. If they break them they are traitors to the lodges while professing to belong to them. Hon. Gideon T. Stewart was "facile princeps," acknowledged leader of the joint convention in Farwell Hall, Aug. 23, 1882, which formed the party which nominated St. John in 1884, and which is now called to consult next November by John B. Finch, chairman of its Executive Committee. He is also head center of the secret temperance lodges; and J. N. Stearns, a seven-degree Mason, sworn to stand by Masons, "right or wrong," is also an active member of the party.

Being in Washington when Mr. Stewart issued his call for a nominating convention to meet at Pittsburgh, we wrote him asking whether those who objected to fuse with men who meet and plan behind tyed doors apart from the general body of prohibitionists would be admitted to seats in this Pittsburgh convention. Mr. Stewart wrote us to send a delegation by all means; that we could cooperate with them on the principle that none should be nominated by the convention but those who did not belong to secret orders, or who would withdraw from all such orders when nominated.

This letter was laid before friends then in Washington, among whom were ex-Senator Pomeroy, Messrs. Bailey, J. P. Stoddard, H. H. Hinman and others; and at an American party convention in Chicago we appointed a strong delegation to the Pittsburgh convention, called to meet May 21, 1884, but afterwards changed to July 23.

We were represented in that Prohibition Home Protection convention by Pres. C. A. Blanchard, who was introduced by Rev. Mr. Haney, one of the most popular members of the body. Pres. Blanchard received a cordial greeting till he said, "We hold that men who are under special secret obligations to one portion of the community are unfitted to rule over the whole." John B. Finch exclaimed from back near the gallery, "I object! I object!" and he was seconded by a dozen or two in the great convention, who made so much noise that Mr. Finch's objections were not given to the convention or the reasons for them. The turmoil was brief, and we were thence forward treated with cordiality by the convention.

The convention, as is known, nominated Gov. St. John and Hon. Wm. Daniel; and Mr. Pomeroy said he was unwilling to run against St. John, who had assured him before witnesses that he stood square on every plank of the American platform; and we had letters, which have been published, in which, over his own name, he said he had not been in a lodge for many years, and that "he never should be in another." After Senator Pomeroy's withdrawal, as is well known we voted for St. John.

The above-recited facts warrant the following conclusions:

1. The present Prohibition party is not a secret party, or party made up of secretists. All its meetings have been open from the first; and an attempt to impose or require an oath, pledge, or promise of secrecy, of that great Farwell Hall union meeting, which formed the party Aug. 23, 1882, would have shocked all present.

2. As the W. C. T. U. at Lake Bluff Association, August, 1881, appointed Col. Bain, Dr. Jenkins, Frances E. Willard and R. W. Nelson a committee to form the Home Protection party; and as women cannot be Masons, but are classed by the lodge with "libertines and fools," the only rational and just principle of united action is the one laid down by Gideon T. Stewart, that no adhering secretist shall be nominated to office by the Prohibition party.

3. All caucuses, conventions or conferences summoned by the Prohibition party, or committees thereof, are as open to Americans as to Home Protectionists, under the rule laid down by their chairman of Executive Committee, Mr. Stewart, which is the rule of reason and right.

The Georgia politicians who have conceived the prison and chain-gang for teachers of mixed schools, are perhaps too far gone to heed the appeals to reason and conscience which come to them from every quarter. But they are queer politicians if they do not see that their course will be a powerful argument in the next political campaign, and is likely to be an expensive experiment. The bill passed the lower house with but two colored representatives opposing, but the senate will probably learn wisdom and drop the matter. It is indeed a great matter from so small a fire. Atlanta University was chartered by the American Missionary Association twenty years ago for the education of both races; the whites avoided it, so it has become practically a colored school with white teachers from the North. Because these teachers preferred to instruct their own children, though in black classes, is the sole reason for all this threat of fines and chain-gang. We read the other day of a white woman of the Virginia "F. F. V.'s" looking for a colored nurse girl and playmate for her children,—whom she would send to school with them? Not a bit of that. She wanted her to sleep with them!

—Word comes from Bro. H. A. Day that the Michigan State meeting will be held some time in September. The date will soon be announced.

—Friends in Belvidere are pleased with the prospect of a State convention in their midst, and definite arrangements will be soon completed and notice given.

—The thanks of the Cynosure are hereby heartily given to Mr. B. Tunnilliff of Seymour Lake, New York, for a copy of the latest report of the Labor Bureau of that State. The report contains some valuable statistics of the secret labor lodges, which we hope soon to lay before our readers.

—Brethren Hinman and Cole have closed up their partnership work. The latter was engaged for three months, intending then to visit the Wesleyan conferences in the East, arousing an interest in his African mission. He was last week at Houghton, N. Y., and Bro. Hinman has returned to Washington, hoping soon to visit East Tennessee.

—Rev. K. Koerner, pastor of the St. John's German Lutheran church of Kirchblayn, Washington county, Wisconsin, has begun the publication of a small periodical in German, called Zion's Watch-voice, which will, we have no doubt, deal faithfully with the secret orders in the name of Christ whom they reject, yet who is the light of the world.

—Dr. Josiah Strong, secretary of the Evangelical Alliance, writes to the editor of the Christian Nation that the managers of the Alliance are expecting to create a bureau of information touching all moral reforms and methods of Christian work. This will be an important agency by which the principles upon which our reform is based may have a wider dissemination.

—Rev. George Warrington, pastor of the United Presbyterian church of Birmingham, Iowa, and editor of the Free Press of that place, is the nominee of the Prohibition party for State Superintendent of Public instruction. Good men, without respect to party, should vote for Mr. Warrington. In him they may have the assurance of a capable officer, under whose oversight the public schools of Iowa would enjoy the noblest prosperity.

—A late notice of the New Iberia school and the munificence of Mr. Howe contained the statement that the school property would be held by Mr. Howe with the expectation that the Educational Society of New Iberia would purchase it. Our information, it seems, was not altogether correct, and did injustice to Mr. Howe's generosity. We learn that he purposes to donate the property ere long without reserve. Miss Farley's letter elsewhere will be read with much interest.

—Mr. Capwell, former president of the N. C. A., having urged that a representative of the Association be present at the Silver Lake Prohibition camp near Perry, New York, Mr. W. B. Stoddard, who returned to his Ohio work last week, has gone on to Western New York. J. N. Stearna, secretary of the National Temperance Society of New York, has secured a recognition of the Good Templars this year by the management of the convocation, and a whole day will be devoted to the order instead of to temperance.

—The Cynosure exceedingly enjoyed a brief call last week from Mr. C. B. Knight, who has been tarrying several months at Abilene, Kansas, and is returning to his family in Worcester. He is a careful observer of affairs, and regards Kansas as one of the most promising of our Western States. The unprecedented drouth is beginning to affect some parts of the State seriously, but on the whole the crops are fair in that State and Iowa. Central Iowa and Illinois are burned up by the long drouth, and must depend upon more favored sections for means of supply for man and beast.

—The Cynosure has noticed the Scandinavian order of Templars, whose organ is the Tidens Fragar of Brooklyn. Until four years ago the society was connected with the Good Templars, but being refused a Swedish Grand Lodge (as the Saratoga compromise compels the colored race to form), they seceded from the rule of Finch and Katzenstein. Their society is not secret, but unhappily retains lodge names. They have Grand Temples in this country, in Sweden and in Denmark. The American body met in Chicago lately. They number 1817 members in 81 lodges. Mr. A. Peterson, an earnest prohibitionist, is the controlling spirit of the society.

—There are two "Voices of Masonry," one in Chicago, the other in Los Angeles, and if any one believes that because they belong to the same "fraternity," and are sworn to each other by unlawful oaths of horrid and blasphemous penalties, they are therefore under the necessity of loving as brethren, let him read the affectionate terms used by each toward the other. This is from the California sheet: "In our editorial experience we have occasionally met with acts of individuals that did not seem to be on the square, but of all the low, contemptible, unprincipled, mean, dirty, low-life tricks, which the very imps of hell should be ashamed of, is the one performed by one John W. Brown, reputed editor of a magazine known as the Voice of Masonry, of Chicago, Ill. He is, in our opinion, not even a blooded dog, but a cur of the lowest degree. Simply because we publish a journal in California using a portion of the name of his paper in Chicago, he advertises us as a pirate, and sends a copy free to all our advertisers. Send them along, Bro. Brown. You will soon have a fine dead-head list in California."

N. C. A. BOARD MEETING.

An adjourned meeting of the National Board was held Wednesday afternoon. There were present of the Board Messrs. Roy, Worrell, Stratton, Fischer, Gardner, Blanchard, and Pritchard. The first business transacted was the acceptance and settlement of a legacy from the estate of Moses Petten-gill. The General Agent was instructed to sign an approval for the proposed cable car line on Madison street. Action was taken respecting the bank deposits of the Treasurer, advising no change. A proposed advertisement of Warner's patent medicines was regarded favorably, but referred. The report of Pres. C. A. Blanchard of his Washington visit was received, and it was voted to send notice to the American Publishing Company that at the expiration of the present arrangement the income of the Washington building would be retained. A new tract was voted, comprising a portion of Rev. A. J. Chittenden's discourse on the Grand Army, lately printed in these columns. Efforts for the extension of the Cynosure were reported, and a general arrangement for occasional payment of contributors made. The General Agent is arranging for a lecturers' institute to be followed by State conventions, East and West, through the fall.

REFORM NEWS.

THE STATE CONVENTIONS.

WISCONSIN.

The outlook for Wisconsin looks more encouraging than when I last referred to the subject. The drouth and general business depression which largely prevails, and the activity of temperance and other specialties weakened the faith and zeal of some who had long borne the heat and burden of the battle, but others are "lion-hearted" still, and write encouragingly. I hope no friend in Wisconsin will take counsel of his fears, or yield to what may seem real difficulties; but that there will be a united forward movement to a rousing rally, at what shall be decided on as the best point for a State meeting this fall or winter. We have a young man of excellent ability who has decided to make our reform his life work, who is available for Wisconsin if friends desire.

ILLINOIS.

The latest word from Belvidere is encouraging for the State meeting there. Bro. Conrad has been canvassing in and about the city, and writes, "All our friends are unanimous in their desire to have the Association meet there." It is an old battle ground on the lodge question, and the former home of Judge Daniel Whitney who was expelled from the lodge for attempting to procure the arrest of S. L. Keith, as lodge brother accused of the murder of Ellen Slade, whom he had ruined. There should be a strong meeting and general rally in this stronghold of the "secret empire," where there are some who remember the parties in this infamous affair, who can probably give some facts not hitherto known to the general public. J. P. STODDARD.

MOCK MURDER BECOMES A REALITY.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—While in Charles City I called upon C. P. Ellis, whose wife's brother was killed by the terrible ruffian, Jubulum, in the Geneva Lodge in western New York, while being initiated as a Master Mason. An own brother of the man who lost his life and Bro. Ellis notified the officers of the lodge that they should institute a legal investigation if a satisfactory explanation was not made them as to how the deceased came to his death. They were accordingly taken into the lodge, and shown the dreadful setting maul of Jubulum, and the canvas with three pairs of loops in which to catch the victim of his vengeance; and the process was explained as to how their friend and brother came to his death. Albeit, they said that this tragedy, in which the candidate personates Hiram Abiff and is slain by the ruffian Jubulum, is a side degree which they were practicing for their diversion, when, alas! what was meant to be a mock murder, was overplayed and made real.

Do not, dear reader, too severely criticise these magnates of the lodge. It was necessary for them to make an honest explanation of how the deceased came to his death to avoid legal difficulty; and, Masonically speaking, it was necessary for them to lie to conceal the fact that they had revealed Masonry, which they had sworn "ever to conceal and never reveal."

From Charles City I took the train for Nashua, and went into the country and visited some friends of the reform, to whom I preached morning and evening on the Sabbath. Bros. Wolden and Greely generously aided the reform. Oasge, Charles City and Nashua, by request of friends, are booked for future lectures.

From Nashua I went to Jackson Junction and looked the field over, distributing literature, and taking one subscriber to the Cynosure. From there I came to Elgin, where I was called by telegram to the funeral of Rev. H. Babcock, the father of my wife, who was a reader of the Cynosure, an earnest Christian and warm friend of reform.

From the funeral I returned to Elgin, and distributed literature and received a subscription of $12 from Bro. C. N. Fox. From Elgin I went to West Union and collected some on last year's subscription to the Iowa Christian Association and received a $12 subscription from Judge Rogers. While here I went into the country to see Mr. Coe, a seceded Mason, in regard to aiding in the reform work. I then went to Brush Creek and called on Wm. K. Morley, who is one of the main supporters of our reform. Here I collected what was back on last year's subscription, and Mr. Morley gave a subscription of $50 for the support of the reform work for the second year, beginning July 15, 1887.

Leaving Brush Creek I reached Masonville late Saturday evening, and spent the Sabbath with my widowed mother-in-law. I preached at Masonville on the Sabbath, and on Monday I went to Manchester and saw Rev. Amadon, who gave his yearly contribution to the Association. He told me of the time when some degree work was done in Manchester, and the turbulent spirit that was developed at the conclusion of the Hiram Abiff tragedy, and we talked up plans of future work. Brethren, pray for us. C. F. HAWLEY.

It is no great matter, as some of our exchanges would make believe, that Ibrahim Pasha, the Turk of Egypt, should join the Freemasons and be initiated into the mysteries of that ancient religion, which so often in its books and lectures goes back to the sun worship of Egypt and Babylon to show its eminent antiquity. Of course I. P. is a Musselman as well as a Mason, and it is but natural that "birds of a feather should flock together." It is little matter what a man's moral character or religious convictions are who would unite with the "Secret Empire," which traces its pedigree back to the worship of Baal. Those initiating him do not inquire much into such insignificant matters, for the simple reason that, as the boys say, "they don't have to." —Sandy Lake News.

At Baalbec, in a quarry, lies a magnificent column, the largest worked stone in the world, almost detached and ready for transportation. And in the ruined Temple of the Sun, near by, is a niche still waiting for it, after forty centuries. So large, so grand, it is a failure, because it never filled the place for which it was quarried and hewn. Like failures are many human lives. Who can tell how many men lie among the waste and ruins of life, but who, when called, refused to go? They folded their talents away and buried them; and forever they will lay in the quarries; pale ghosts of glorious "might-have-beens," while the niches in God's temple, which they are meant to fill, remain forever vacant. —S. S. Times.

The light-house is a very good emblem of a faithful Christian, who shines as a light in the world, "in the midst of a crooked and perverse generation, holding forth the word of life." As the light-house warns of danger, and guides the mariners through the storm and darkness to the port of peace, so the Christian, illuminated by the Spirit of God, sheds a brightness on the world around, and thus may save many who otherwise might go astray and be dashed upon the rocks of sin and destruction. Let us see to it that we are so filled with the light of God's Spirit and his Word that we "so shine" in the midst of darkness, that others, seeing our good works, may glorify our Father which is in Heaven.

THE HOME.

A SONG OF THANKS FOR RAIN.

When the Rev. Charles G. Finney had pastoral charge of Chatham Street Chapel in the city of New York, there was a long season of drouth, and while the pastor and his people were praying for rain down came the precious shower that caused the good man and great preacher to exclaim with tearful face, "Bless God for rain!"

"Bless God for rain," the preacher said,
His lifted eyes were wet with tears.
"That we may have our daily bread;
A cloud freighted with rain appears.
Our Father, thou who dwell'st in heaven,
We thank thee for the needed shower,
The blessed gift which thou hast given
To man and beast and bird and flower."

The dusty earth, with lips apart,
Looked up where rolled an orb of flame
As though a prayer came from his heart
For rain to come, and lo, it came.
The Indian corn with silken plume,
And flowers with fragrant pitchers filled,
Sent up their praise of sweet perfume
For crystal drops the clouds distilled.

Up where the heavy thunders rolled
And clouds of fire were swept along,
The sun shines in a car of gold,
And soaring larks are lost in song.
The rills that run down mountains rude,
Flow trickling to the verdant base;
And the fast tears of gratitude
Bedew the happy preacher's face.

The languid grass is growing green,
The brooklet swells its song again.
The angel's radiant wing is seen
In the soft cloud that brings the rain.
There is a rainbow in the sky
Upon the arch where tempests trod;
'Twas written by the hand on high,
It is the autograph of God.

COLLEGE BOYS AND COLLEGE MEN.

BY MRS. A. E. KELLOGG.

CHAPTER IV.

[George Green and Joe Simms in a room in college at 12 o'clock.]

Joe Simms—"Seems to me the meeting of the Funny Club was a little late to-night. Stale jokes and forced wit made rather thin fun. Somehow there was an odor of home clinging to me which spoiled my relish for club pleasures. By the way, what kind of a time did you have at Glennville?"

George Green—"A splendid time! and I have a long story to tell you according to promise. But first, will you promise to stand by me in a mighty ticklish piece of business? for you see I have launched my frail bark on what may prove a treacherous sea; and I may need help; and you are my man if I am not mistaken."

J. S.—"That depends; no intrigue I hope! Is the business legitimate? Is there a woman in it?"

G. G.—"Rather fast, young man. I will tell you and you can judge. But first, will you be true? Give me your hand on that."

J. S.—"True as steel. But, remember, I don't work for nothing; these talents must pay somehow—there must be either money or glory in it."

G. G.—"All right: you shall lose nothing by it, I assure you."

J. S.—"Well, well! go on; I am getting interested."

G. G.—"So! that's the talk. Well, I am in love; deeply, terribly in love."

J. S.—"What! in love again? With whom this time? I should think that any lady that could relish your devotions would make, at least, a cheap wife; because, you see, she would be willing to live on hash. Your love! Ha, ha! It has been warmed over so many times that it must be a treat, indeed."

G. G.—"Simms, no other fellow would dare say that! But you asked who I was in love with? You might have asked what, this time."

J. S.—"What do you mean?"

G. G.—"Ha, ha! Just this. I have taken a violent fancy to the money bags of the Hon. Henry Glenn, Sr., of Glennville, who has a daughter on whom I have been expending some of the enthusiasm which I feel for the aforesaid; hoping by that means to attain to the joy of its possession."

J. S.—"Green, you are a sinner! But what of the young lady?"

G. G.—"Oh, nothing in particular; very commonplace; very pious; would do, though, with the money. Not without it, my worthy friend."

J. S.—"Have you made any progress in the affair? Had you ever seen her before the visit?"

G. G.—"Once; she was here at Commencement, and I happened in the way, so got introduced, having learned the condition of her father's finances. Since that time I have cultivated Hal, without his knowing it, and made it seem necessary for him to invite me for the holidays, so that I could take soundings and learn how to steer my craft among the breakers; don't you see?"

J. S.—"Ha! that is it, is it? We all wondered how he came to invite you, as he don't belong to our set."

G. G.—"He could not well help it; but I think I made him feel that I conferred a favor in accepting the invitation. But you ought to see how they live! whew! style is no name for it; and old Glenn is solid, I tell you; very rich, and only one daughter."

J. S.—"What kind of man is the old nabob?"

G. G.—"A shrewd man of business, I fancy; but don't look through a fellow like his wife. I tell you, when she looked me over, I fancied her taking an inventory of my motives."

J. S.—"Of course you were not such a fool as to make any direct advances on so short an acquaintance; you surely would not put yourself at so great a disadvantage as that."

G. G.—"Yes, but I did though; yet not in such a way as to be refused. I only told her that I loved her, and hinted that the fact might as well rest between ourselves, as our own secret, trusting that distance might lend enchantment, etc."

J. S.—"Green, you are an idiot. I did not know that you were such long ears."

G. G.—"So! Well, you are wise, my friend; and I, the undersigned, propose to profit by the same. I am going to tell you everything, and then you must help me when I ask you."

J. S.—"Go on; if I am to serve you, I must know what I am about, so that I shall make no blunders. Just how far did you go? and how was it received by the young lady?"

G. G.—"Well, I was distantly polite to the young lady during the visit, until the last evening, when one of the opportunities which we make for ourselves occurred, and I became very pious, and my feelings carried me away to such an extent that I told my love through mistake; it was too fervent to be hidden! But I begged her not to give me an answer (knowing what it must be), but by her silence suffer me to hope that sometime she might possibly return a measure of what I felt for her. Ha, ha, ha! How is that?"

J. S.—"George Green! you will go to perdition before your time. How could you feign such a thing? What did you say?"

G. G.—"Oh, I can't repeat it. It would sound rather thin without the inspiration. But I talked about temperance and Providence, studying her blind side until I got her ears, and then I made a big, brave speech, trying to look pious and sentimental; and then, as if I could not help it, I kissed her hand. Just then Hal came in to my inexpressible relief."

J. S.—"Was there ever such a varnished hypocrite! I have half a mind to expose you and make love to her myself. I know she is too good to be wasted on you. I am really interested."

G. G.—"None of that, old fellow. Remember your pledge!"

J. S.—"Well, I did not think you capable of such a business as this, or I would never have given you my hand on it."

G. G.—"A capable youth, you see! But you may not find the business so bad—your part in it, I mean."

J. S.—"Well, what do you wish me to do for you? I don't see as you need any help."

G. G.—"Only to stand between me and all sorts of possibilities. First: Hal must never be invited to join the Funny Club, for you know we have some high old times there; and though Hal is running over with fun and frolic he is a very Puritan in his principles and personal habits, and if he suspected me of any irregularities I might hang up my fiddle. But I seldom do get what you might call tight, only a little exhilarated, you know, as every fellow does that is good for anything. But now I shall confine my indulgence to the social gatherings of the Funny Club; and, of course, nobody lets out our cats. But don't those suppers cost, though? Well, I meant to have a good time when I came to college, and so far I have succeeded, my friend. Another thing: you must take care of that little affair with Mollie Noble, sweet girl! too good for me; or for you, my friend, but she represents no stamps, which fact is a cooler. Yet I own that so far as any feeling mixes itself with this thing, Mollie has it, sure; but business is business, and you must take her off my hands all the same; and see that you do it tenderly, young man."

J. S.—"When do you intend to give this matter shape, by addressing the young lady's parents?"

G. G.—"It may be necessary to do so soon, for some things might be whispered to my disadvantage—false, of course."

J. S.—"Doubtless, very! Well, I must go to my den, and woo 'balmy nature's sweet restorer,' etc., etc. Here, take some of this, 'sparkling and bright,' before you go." (Both drink, and J. Simms goes, with a guilty feeling quite new.)

CHAPTER V.

[Susie Glenn in her own room, reading a letter, does not hear her mother enter; continues to read until startled by her mother saying:]

Mrs. Glenn—"Your letter must be very absorbing; is it from your brother?"

Susie—"No, mamma, it is from his friend."

Mrs. G.—"I am surprised, my daughter; this is an impertinence! George Green is quite too much a stranger to have presumed to do this. He should have known better!"

S.—"It does not seem like an impertinence. Let me read it to you." (Reads.)

"Miss GLENN:—May I dare address a few words to you on the subject of our last conversation, while I was a guest at your father's house? You may remember that we were speaking of special Providences, a subject on which you felt no doubts, while I could not express the same confidence. I have thought that you might feel some general interest in knowing that since my return I have read a work on the subject which quite sets my mind at rest.

"I remember my visit with pleasure—would like to see Glennville in summer. I am sure it must be delightful.

"Your brother is well; we are working hard. Please present my grateful regards to your parents; and if they approve, I should feel much flattered by a word in return. If not, of course, I submit.

"With sentiments of esteem, yours truly,

"G. GREEN."

(Susie, looking up at her mother, waits for her to speak.)

Mrs. G.—"I still consider the letter an impertinence, and desire that you take no notice of it."

S.—"It seems to me that it is not like you, mamma, to be so prejudiced against any one. Would not Harry feel such a slight to his friend?"

Mrs. G.—(Looking anxious)—"I will talk with your father about it, and show him the letter, if you wish. It may have been thoughtlessness, but I still think it very presuming in the young man." (Takes the letter and leaves the room.)

S.—(Alone)—"How strange! I do not know what to think. Ought I not to tell mother what he said to me that evening? Oh, dear! Oh, dear!" (Mother returns.)

Mrs. G.—"Your father and myself have talked over this note, and have decided that you may send a message to Mr. Green through your brother, and I trust that this may not be repeated."

S.—"Dear mamma, please tell me what harm there can be in a friendly correspondence on general subjects between a lady and gentleman. It seems to me that it might be made very profitable."

Mrs. G.—"My daughter, would it not be well to be governed by your mother's larger experience? There are nice shades of propriety and courtesy which can scarcely be explained, and yet well understood and felt by persons of experience and observation."

S.—"I am sure I wish to be guided by you in every thing, but I suppose the time will come when I must think and act for myself, so I should be glad to understand your objections."

Mrs. G.—"Yes! the time will come too surely and quickly. Why, then, should we hasten to meet it? My precious child, that foolish little note is to me like the quiver of the leaf before the desolating storm. Can I tell you why?"

S.—"Please, mamma, do not make so much out of nothing. I will do as you wish and no harm can come of it."

Mrs. G.—"I will not offend your womanly sense by asking if you feel any particular interest in this young man, for I am sure you would require a foundation of respect for noble qualities before you could entertain a special regard for any young man."

S.—"I do not deny that the young man pleased me, and from his conversation I am sure he is an earnest and thoughtful student, making the most of himself that his opportunities allow; and I do not see why we should not think well of him."

Mrs. G.—"All the same, my child, I wish he had never been my guest. But that is vain; only, beware, my own Susie, beware!" (The mother sadly went her way.)

THE SMALL AND INEXPENSIVE COLLEGE.

Just as we are getting away from commencement exercises it seems timely to note that at the Dartmouth dinner the other night, in this city, a distinguished speaker, Mr. Chauncey Depew, gave utterance to certain wholesome truths which parents and guardians would do well to consider. "He looked with alarm on the growing proportions of the large colleges of the country, because of their being so conducted as to encourage the growth of luxury and the love of excitement, which are the bane of energy." "No man," Mr. Depew said further, "ever reached a place of prominence, or achieved success in any department of life except under the spur of necessity," and he added: "The country is now and always will be indebted for the best opinions that govern men, the best powers that benefit the human race, to the high thinking and free living of the country college; for until the age of forty, men needed restraint and discipline."

There can be no question that the heavy expenses to which students in some of the larger colleges are subjected are becoming a serious drawback to what has hitherto been best in them. We want no arrogant and aristocratic class built up here by financial ability to run into the follies of fashionable dress, and the epicurean sensualities of fancy boarding and club houses. If the curse of the poor man is his poverty, the curse of the rich man is no less his riches—if the rich be not very carefully used. It is no blessing, but on the contrary an immense injury for rich young men to be thrown exclusively together into a college with a public sentiment around them which creates the ambition to vie with one another in an ostentatious flourish of money and the things which money can buy. Every college needs the leaven of poor but earnest students, who force their way to the front, and compel the wealthy idler to recognize that brains count for more than dollars, and that capacity to grasp truth is somewhat better than a fine coat or a patent leather boot.

Nor are the utterances quoted less sound on the matter of college excitements. Too much baseball, or football, or clamorous rowing, or gymnastic circus, or glee club itineracy, or theatrical performances—even though of Greek plays—is certainly antagonistic to the cultivation of those sober and reflective habits of thought out of which alone the highest and truest manhood can spring. The fact is there is altogether too much publicity on the part of some of our colleges. It has developed a chronic itching among the immature boys after newspaper sensations, of which they are the flushed and conquering heroes. They ought rather to be taught, in the words of the German proverb, and as Carlyle maintained in his great inaugural speech, "Silence is golden;" and that it is in the serious, everyday, intense and zealous application to duty with plenty of quiet and solitary thought that forms the great secret of preparation for the coming larger responsibilities and honors of life into which they are fast hastening. The small colleges are not indeed always and necessarily free from the distracting excitements that afflict the larger ones, but they generally are. Hence it would be a calamity to see the smaller colleges crippled in means, in professorships and apparatus, and all patronage bestowed upon mammoth institutions. Many of the noblest and grandest as well as most influential men of our land are proud of the small college from which they were graduated; for they know the individual training, the painstaking and life-giving contact of professors and students and the uninterrupted and meditative course of study, with all its benefits, which they there enjoyed. While, then, it will not be denied that the university has its place, let the community never look slightly upon the small college, nor encourage luxurious habits and distracting excitements in either university or college, large or small. —Christian at Work.

EXTRAVAGANCE IN COLLEGE.

The very parents who speak so bitterly of the encouragement given to young men's extravagance by the modern college life have carefully trained their sons for just the life which they have found. Usually men in moderate circumstances, they have never compelled their sons to earn a dollar in their lives, or to know the cost or value of money, or to deny themselves anything within their reach, or to do anything except spend money when a favorable opportunity offered. The sons, passing for the first time beyond the father's eye, and able to plead circumstances which parents cannot deny from personal knowledge, are in a fair position to deplete the paternal pocket-book, and have never been trained to refrain from improving such an opportunity. It is not for his own selfish gratification that the son joins this or that college society, or takes all the college papers, or "goes with the nine" to watch an intercollegiate game in another college town, or does any of the other things for which his father has to pay—not at all; it is only because he would be ostracized in college if he refrained from such indulgences. Such are the statements which accompany the periodical petitions for checks; and the father, finding it easier to curse college extravagance than to take the trouble of ascertaining the true state of the case, continues his mistreating of the boy by paying his bills, until at the end of the college course, the son is turned loose upon the world, to find at last what a dollar really means.—The Century.

TEMPERANCE.

HIGH LICENSE IS HIGH BRIBERY.

ABSTRACT OF A LECTURE DELIVERED UNDER THE AUSPICES OF THE WOMEN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION IN THE COURT HOUSE, CHAMBERSBURG, PA., AUGUST 2ND, BY REV. J. AUGUSTUS COLE.

Our age is deluged in the flood of philosophy, skepticism and atheism. Infidelity is advocated, godlessness is taught by formulas, and demonstrated by science, and the most to be deplored, vice is legalized. Truly God hath made man upright, but he hath sought out for himself many inventions.

I will not detain you by drawing your attention to those actions by which many powerful and skeptical nations have both blasphemed and defied the Living God. Our subject this evening is

VICE LEGALIZED, OR SIN SUPPORTED BY NATIONAL LAWS.

I mean, sin protected by civilized laws, or immorality licensed by Christian governments. Demanding high or low payment as a permission or indulgence for the commission of crimes, or as a means of preventing them, is a relic of barbarism and heathenism, and should not be adopted by a Christian nation.

I can understand why the barbarous African Mende receives the payment of $75 as a compensation from the murderer of his mother, or why the Yornies would fight anywhere if only paid for shedding blood: but I cannot see why many Christian nations license prostitutes, and legalize immorality by making it a law to license brothel houses. It may not be strange to many of you that this is a fact in many of the British colonies. It is so in China. In India, under the authority of the Christian Governor General, an enactment was promulgated which said, "No woman shall carry on the business of a common prostitute, or the business of a brothel-keeper without being registered, and having in his or her possession the evidences of license or registration." This is now having its death blow by the conquest of true Christian civilization.

But if I have not mistaken, the object of your union is to destroy the present enactment which in defiance of the laws of morality and Christianity says, "No man shall carry on the business of distilling and dispensing poison without having in his possession the evidence of high license or low registration."

License, whether high or low, is a defiance of God's law. Intemperance is an obstacle to Christianity, for it destroys its power, and weakens its influence. The Mohammedans generally use the common expression that Christians speak in the language of beasts, and that their religion will only show them paradise, whilst their spirits which make them animals, prevent them from getting there. Prof. Blyden lately sent copies of the Bible translated into the Arabic language to some of the Mohammedan tribes in the interior of Africa. One of them, after reading those passages which denounce drunkenness, such as, "Be ye sober," "Drunkards cannot inherit the kingdom of God," sends to ask the Doctor, "What people get the book you sent me?"

The Doctor sent in reply to say that the book belongs to the followers of Christ, and it is made by the white people.

The Mohammedan convert wrote in reply, "I do not believe it. Men that read such book will neither make nor drink rum."

It is so lately, the Mohammedan King of Nupe, on the Niger River, wrote a letter in Arabic to the Christian Bishop of that river, begging him in the name of God and his prophet Mohammed, to send and tell the white people not to ship any more rum into his country.

It is natural for us to taste or drink rum when it is shipped to us by a nation to whom we owe our religion and civilization. Men live more by examples than reason. But I think we should live more by the experience of others. Solomon, who knew the difference between all kinds of wine and strong drink, has solved the question, and has left on record what he believed to be the use of spirits: "Give strong drink unto him that is ready to perish, and wine unto those that be of heavy hearts. Let him drink and forget his poverty and remember his misery no more." Prov. 31: 6.

Advocate free traffic, license, or high license, when you make up your minds to perish as a nation. Ship liquors and destroy all nations of the earth, and then prepare to account to God for murder. But you say, No, the American nation says, No! As a Christian nation we shall rectify this evil. We shall rectify it by free traffic and the Gospel. We shall regulate it by license; or we shall check it by high license. The Gospel cannot get to the brain that is set in motion by alcohol.

License is fraud: and what is high license? In the first place, high license is high bribery. The government that condescends to receive payment for crime, or give indulgence to any one, authorizing him to commit murder, make home desolate, destroy heathen nations, make children orphans, or wives widows, is guilty of the basest bribery.

I say again, What is high license? It is high national crime, protected by high national law, and therefore deserves the highest national punishment. High license? As well vote high license for a ruffian, and under the protection of your law, let him administer arsenic to every citizen. Will high license on spirits protect the world, and protect your rising generation? You might as well give high license to a murderer, and permit him for his high payment to place your children on the railway tracks, to be crushed to atoms by a locomotive.

High license is high nonsense. This is a convincing truth that the civilized nations are less influenced by their religion than even the heathen or Mohammedans. The Mohammedan government forbids the use and introduction of rum into many of their cities because the Koran, their book of faith, forbids it. But the Christian governments patronize it in defiance of the Bible, on account of the revenue, or price of blood, they receive from it. "O thou execrable desire for gold, what hast thou not compelled mortals to do?"

My idea of liberty is, that what any one man has a right to do, any other man also has a right to do it. If any man has a right to sell whatever he has, in a free country, for the benefit of the citizens without license, any other whisky man also has a right to sell his liquor (if the nation think it beneficial to them), without license, high or low; but if the provision is poisonous, not only the right of selling, but the article itself, should be sent out of the market and thrown into the sea.

I pray that God may enable you to stand steadfast on your base. You have only one base and that is truth. Truth is a triangle having one base, but falsehood requires three legs to stand. The three legs of intemperance or falsehood, are: Free traffic, license, high license. But Truth has one settled base, and that is PROHIBITION.

"Truth crushed to earth shall rise again,
The eternal years of God are hers;
Whilst error wounded writhes in pain,
And dies amidst her worshippers."

Recent statistics show that the drink bill of Great Britain was, in 1886, £14,382,974 less than in 1876. While in 1876 it averaged £4 9s. in 1886 the average was £3 7s. 8d. per head of the population.

It is now said that the Panama Canal will cost when completed $600,000,000, or five times as much as the original estimate. Even at this enormous expense, however, the American Nation could build a couple of Panama Canals every year out of the money which is now worse than wasted on liquors and tobacco. Give us genuine prohibition, and there is almost nothing this country cannot do in the way of paying out money, almost without feeling it. The man who spends an average of only twenty cents a day for liquor for himself and family, thinks it a very small matter; but if 5,000,000 of men spend 20 cents each, that is $1,000,000 a day, or $365,000,000 a year spent for unwholesome drink, by moderate drinkers alone, without saying anything about those who drink to excess. The only reason why a simple sum like this does not at once arrest attention and impress upon the public conscience the injury done to general commerce by the liquor traffic, is that while the single payment of 20 cents seems insignificant, the aggregate cost is so enormous as to be outside the range of ordinary comprehension.—Witness.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—Pastor D. Simon of Prospect, Ohio, was re-elected president at the thirty-first convention of the First English District of the Lutheran Joint Synod of Ohio at its late meeting in Huntington, Indiana.

—The theological seminary at Gettysburg, Pa., is said to have been remembered in a handsome manner by recent testators. One bequest is reported to amount to $40,000; another, to $100,000. Dr. Baum of Philadelphia assured the Board that he knew of seven or eight others who had given large sums to the seminary in their wills.

—Mission work is carried on by Swedish Christians in Lapland, East and South Africa and on the Congo, in South and Central India, and in the Caucasus.

—Prof. C. J. Kephart, of the chair of Mathematics in Western College, has resigned his professorship to enter the field of pastoral work. He has accepted the pastorate of the First United Brethren church at Des Moines, Iowa. He will move to Des Moines and enter upon his new sphere of work about the first of September.

—Mr. Moody's second Summer School for Bible study opened at Northfield, August 2d, about two hundred ministers and co-workers attending the first service. The attendance later increased to three hundred. No programme was prepared beforehand. Mr. Moody was assisted by Dr. Gordon and others.

—Chief Justice Hale gave regularly one tenth of his income to benevolent uses. Isaac Watts gave one fifth, and Robert Boyle one half. This was before the agitation about "systematic giving." They simply did their duty as they believed they saw it in the Bible.

—During the last fourteen years the number of Protestant churches in Madagascar has been increased by nearly seven hundred, making a total of twelve hundred; all of them are quite self-supporting. The number of communicants exceeds eight thousand.

—Rev. Dr. R. S. Storrs delivered the address at the recent dedication of the Clapp Memorial Library building at Belchertown, Mass., the gift of the late John Francis Clapp, of Brooklyn, N. Y. It is a beautiful building, and cost about $40,000.

—The first Protestant church was opened in Madrid in 1869. Now there are in Spain 14,000 Protestants, and a church in nearly every large town. But there is still much intolerance in the laws, and persecution by the priests.

—Henry Alger, of Brockport, O., a farmer who was never worth more than $5,000, made at different times 47 persons life members of our missionary societies, at $100 each.

—The foreign mission receipts of the Presbyterians, North, last year, was $748,159.59, or three times the total current expenses of all the Baptist churches in the State of Illinois. Yet there was no net increase in their missions.

—Rev. William H. Hague, D. D., the well-known Baptist preacher and author, died on Monday, Aug. 1, at noon, in Boston. He was walking with a friend on Tremont street, and when before the Tremont Temple, suddenly threw up his arms and fell stricken with apoplexy, and died in a short time. He was born at Pelham, N. Y., on January 4th, 1808, and graduated at Hamilton College. His first pastoral charge was in Utica, his second in Boston, and since then he had been settled in Providence, Jamaica Plain, Mass., Newark, Albany, New York, and finally became the pastor of the Wollaston Heights Baptist.

—Thanks to a publisher in Memphis, says the Missionary Visitor of Toulon, Ill., for a copy of his paper. The mechanical execution is good—but what is the matter? The paper is listed in the Year Book as a Baptist publication; yet it contains liquor, theatrical and private medical advertisements, more than forty ball and society notices to three church notices, and not a line of strictly religious reading. We trust this does not fairly represent the colored Baptists of Memphis.

—A general report on the Punjab and Sindh Mission of the Church Missionary Society, by the Rev. R. Clark, shows that the whole number of Christian adherents is 1,802, of whom 616 are communicants. Over 5,000 children are in the schools, and last year there were 115 adult baptisms. Sixteen of these were admitted to the church at Amritsar, one being a native officer belonging to a Punjab regiment stationed at Dera Ismail Khan. He was baptized by his own choice in full uniform, in the midst of a full Sabbath service, that all men might know of his confession of Christ. He is now serving in Burmah.

—At the recent semi-centennial celebration of the American Board in Syria about eight hundred Nestorian women being present, in response to a request that all among them who could read should rise, full three-fourths of them rose to their feet.

—The latest building to add to Mr. Moody's Seminary in Northfield, Mass., is the new library, which is to be speedily erected. Its corner-stone was laid on June 4th with the usual ceremony, speeches and addresses. It is to cost about $25,000, and will hold 40,000 volumes.

—Several Swiss papers are calling attention to the multiplicity of Sunday fetes and amusements in Switzerland. Not only are the churches forsaken, but drunkenness increases, morals degenerate, and the exercise of thrift and economy is much on the wane, so that family and national life is endangered.

—Japan has given its first missionary student to the Bale Mission. Geuso-Igutsi was instructed and baptized (John) in China. The missionaries who have had opportunities of observing him have great confidence in him. It was in 1874 that Buddhism ceased to be the State religion. Since that time the number of Buddhist priests has fallen from 240,000 to 50,000.

—Christ Lutheran church, near Reading, Penn., was struck by lightning and destroyed by fire August 1. This edifice was one of the landmarks of the Lutheran Church in America. Its corner-stone was laid in 1744. The church was rebuilt in 1786 and two years ago it was damaged by a dynamite explosion, after which it was improved at a cost of $7,000. The Muhlenbergs frequently preached there. It was one of the first Lutheran churches built in this country.

—The statistical summary of the Presbyterian Church (North) shows an increase for the year of one synod, two presbyteries, 108 ministers, 156 churches, 29,918 communicants, and about $20,000 in contributions. The figures are as follows: synods, 28; presbyteries, 201; ministers, 5,654; churches, 6,437; communicants, 696,827; Sunday-school members, 771,899. Contributions: home missions, $785,075; foreign missions, $669,903; education, $117,900; publication, $39,439; church erection; $286,690; relief fund, $110,942; freedmen, 103,406; aid for colleges, $127,627; sustentation, $26,419; General Assembly, $62,330; congregations, $7,902,435; miscellaneous, $860,762; total, $11,092,728.

—The statistics for the Presbyterian Church (South) for 1887 give the following contributions: Sustentation, $42,944; evangelistic, $42,434; invalid fund, $11,921; foreign missions, $67,204; education, $39,250; publication, $9,084; Tuscaloosa Institute, $4,152; presbyterial, $13,754; pastor's salaries, $616,583; congregational, $453,977; miscellaneous, $114,015. Total, $1,415,318. An increase is indicated in all these items except the first. The Church now has 13 synods and 69 presbyteries, the same as last year; 1,116 ministers, a gain of 31; 2,236 churches, a gain of 38; 150,398 communicants, a gain of 6,655.

—The minister that is constantly on the look-out among current events for the topics of sensational sermons on the Sabbath, and uses his Bible mainly for texts on which to hang these sermons, is almost anything but a preacher of the Gospel. He had better read his Bible more and study current events less. He will thereby better edify the Church, and be the means of saving more souls.

—The Moravians have an important mission on the Mosquito Coast, Central America, among a mixed population of Indians, Creoles and Spaniards. It was begun in 1849. Down to 1881 it had been quite successful, there being at the beginning of that year about a thousand communicants. Then a great awakening occurred, and all classes of population were most deeply stirred with a sense of sinfulness. Bands of Indians at work in the forest, away from the mission stations, were seized by an overpowering conviction of sin, children at the stations knelt and prayed for forgiveness, and an almost universal awakening followed. It seemed to come spontaneously; it continued without special effort of the missionaries, and there was great excitement which the missionaries labored to subdue as much as possible. The result of the revival was the adding of 1,500 or more to the list of communicants. As tested by time the conversions are proved to have been genuine. Few have fallen away. An earnest spirit of consecration possesses the older members, and the field of the mission has been greatly extended. The natives no longer say that God does not love the poor Indian as he loves the white man. They rejoice in the revival as a special manifestation of God's grace toward them. Not a few heathen and dissolute characters were thoroughly converted and reformed.—Independent.

—Rev. Wm. Taylor is a wonderful instrument in the hands of God. He has missions in India, South America and Africa. He has 40 missionaries in South America and 70 in Africa—not all preachers, but all earnest workers, and ready to preach as they have opportunity. He is independent of all societies, yet prospers as few societies do. He has in 17 months received $44,589 for general expenses, and $19,004 toward his $30,000 Congo steamboat. His agent in New York says: "Bro. Taylor has always been provided for without appealing to individuals or churches, and we desire to do as we have heretofore done, tell all Christians what he is doing, lay before them the present need, and leave it with all interested in his work to assist as they may feel prompted by the Holy Spirit to do. None of the funds are used to pay for anything that is being done here by the committee. They give their time and money to the work because they believe it is God's way."

LITERATURE.

THE WORKS OF WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE. Edited by William George Clark and William Aldis Wright. In twelve volumes. Vols. VII., VIII. and IX. Price, cloth, $6. John B. Alden, New York.

These three volumes of this handsome set contain the last three of the historical plays, as they are generally arranged, with the first six of the tragedies. Amid the multitude of editions of Shakespeare everyone can be suited, but if a handy volume, easily held and read, in large, clear type is wanted, there is nothing to compare with this edition for cheapness and excellence. Such an edition is always sought by those who make a study of the great English dramatist. Nothing more could be desired for neatness, convenience, good type and low price.

RECENT AMERICAN SOCIALISM. By Richard T. Ely, Ph.D. N. Murray, Publication Agent, Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore.

This monograph by the professor of Political Economy in Johns Hopkins University is an enlargement and completion of a series of articles in the Christian Union more than two years ago. Professor Ely notices the communistic features of the early colonists, which were not different than might be expected from men of good sense in similar circumstances at any time. The Shakers, the Harmonists of Beaver Falls, Pa., the Perfectionists of Oneida, New York, the theories of Robert Owen and Fourier. But these were experimental in some degree, and were so far removed from the Henry George movement and the International Society as hardly to be mentioned in the same connection. But the deepest interest centers about the agitation which had for its organs the Truth of San Francisco, by Haskell; the Enquirer of Denver, by Joseph Buchanan (now of Chicago); the Alarm, by Parsons; the Arbeiter Zeitung, the Vorbote, and the Fackel, by Spies and other anarchists in Chicago; and the Freiheit, John Most's New York organ of anarchy and murder. The author reviews briefly the history of this irruption of foreign savagery in this country and shows how active it had become in Chicago. His work being published before the great anarchist massacre of last year, we are disappointed in not reading an interesting chapter upon the legitimate result of such attacks on government, the home and the church as the followers of these men had familiarized themselves. Without an elaborate argument Professor Ely shows the remedies for this social rebellion to be three-fold: 1. A better education in political, social and economic science. 2. The utilization of the social power in the state, or legally organized society, of which he maintains that the state is the product of the God-given instincts which led to the establishment of church and family. "The Christian," he says, "ought not to view civil authority in any other light than a delegated responsibility from the Almighty. When men come to look upon their duty to the state as something as holy as their duty to the church, regarding the state as one of God's chief agencies for good, it will be easy for government to perform all its functions." 3. Independent of the state, the church must claim her full place as a social power. In this, the author finds place for just, but not severe criticism. The church neglects the enforcement of duty respecting temporal concerns. The excellent spirit of this work, and its carefully gathered facts respecting the communistic movement, make it exceedingly valuable and timely.

To the Missionary Review Dr. Pierson of Philadelphia contributes another of his inspiring articles on foreign missions. The successes in Africa and other quarters, but especially the uprising among the colleges for this cause, incline him to prophesy the beginning of an "Evangelistic Era," which we pray may not end. The Review contains also an address by William Duncan, the devoted Englishman whose labors among the Indians of the west coast of British America have been heretofore noticed. In the reports from Independent Foreign Missions there is an account of Mrs. Mumford's mission in Bulgaria.

The August Library Magazine is hardly so practical for American readers as its wont, nevertheless they will find as much as ordinary magazines supply in the articles by Hon. W. E. Gladstone, Richard S. Storrs, D. D., of Brooklyn, Andrew Lang, Grant Allen and the poet Swinburne. "Home Adornment," "A Kitchen College" and "Strange Medicines," are articles suggestive of a score of questions to which wives, mothers and sisters will wish to find an answer.

As an outcome of this year's very successful course of Joseph Cook's "Boston Monday Lectures," there is being published practically a quarterly review of current reforms. The second of these quarterlies, just issued, comprises three remarkable papers. 1. "Proposals for the Education of High-Caste Hindu Widows. By the Pandita Ramabai of Bombay." 2. "Woman in New Japan. By Rev. C. S. Ebey of Tokio." 3. "Progress of Prohibition in Canada. By J. Macdonald Oxley of Ottawa." They all appear in one well printed pamphlet, which can be obtained of the old printing house of Rand Avery Company of Boston at $1.00 for the set of twelve, or 20 cents each.

LODGE NOTES.

The Master Masons' (mechanics) Association of the State of New York met in Rochester lately. In the course of his address of welcome President Gorline said: "I believe that those men who formed the Knights of Labor have made a great mistake. Had they spent the same amount of ingenuity, time and labor in forming insurance and savings institutions they would have accomplished vastly more for the interest of their families and themselves. Its history tells us that the order is a curse to its members, and it will, without doubt, soon be a thing of the past. Trade unions have come to stay so long as they are governed by wise counsel."

William Hughes, a Catholic member of the committee on arrangements to look to the welfare of visiting newspaper men at the meeting of the Grand Army of the Republic, Sept. 14, has resigned from the committee because Dr. McGlynn has been invited to be present.

It is proposed to organize a "Grand Army Fire, Drum and Bugle Corps." The membership of the corps is to be composed exclusively of sons of army veterans residing in Chicago.

At the great fire in Pittsburgh Friday night the Masonic Hall, built fifty years ago, was destroyed. Thirty-one lodges met in the hall and all their regalia and equipment was lost.

The leather workers' troubles culminated in Newark, N. J., Aug. 8, when the manufacturers issued orders that on and after Saturday, Aug. 13, none but non-union men would be employed in their shops. This is the commencement of a bitter fight between the Knights of Labor and the manufacturers, as the men in two shops have already been ordered out by the Knights.

THE RESORTS OF COLORADO.

Colorado has become famous for its marvelous gold and silver production, for its picturesque scenery, and its delightful climate. Its mining towns and camps, its massive mountains, with their beautiful green-verdured valleys, lofty snow-capped peaks and awe-inspiring canyons, together with its hot and cold mineral springs and baths, and its healthful climate are attracting, in greater numbers each year, tourists, invalids, pleasure and business seekers from all parts of the world.

The journey from Chicago, Peoria, or St. Louis and other Chicago, Burlington and Quincy R. R. stations to Denver (the great distributing point for Colorado), if made over the Burlington Route, C. B. & Q. R. R., will be as pleasant and gratifying as it is possible for a railroad trip to be. At all principal ticket offices will be found, on sale, during the tourist season, round-trip tickets via this popular route at low rates to Denver, Colorado Springs and Pueblo, Colorado. When ready to start call on your nearest ticket agent, or address Paul Morton, General Passenger and Ticket Agent C. B. & Q. R. R., Chicago, Ill.

Sing the Reform
Into the Hearts of the People
One of the most popular books against lodgery is the latest compilation of George W. Clark,
"The Minstrel of Reform."

A forty-page book of soul-stirring, conscience-awakening songs, appropriate for lectures, conventions and the home circle. What can add more to the interest of a meeting than a song well sung? What means will more quickly lay overthrow the power of the secret lodges than to sing the truth into the popular conscience?

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canadian jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemasonry to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his name to the letter, but attaches his affidavit to it.
In closing his letter the writer says: "I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the 'Anti-Masonic excitement' by a sincere desire, first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next to arrest the great power and dangerous influence of 'secret societies.'"
The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. (Chicago, National Christian Association.) Single copy, 6 cents.

NATIONAL SUICIDE, AND ITS PREVENTION.

BY OSCAR F. LUMRY, PH. D.
Prof. Lumry's book, "National Suicide and Its Remedy," will be read with profit even by those who do not accept its doctrine, that taking interest for money loaned, one or more per cent, is sin, taking something for nothing. For, as Goldsmith said of his Vicar of Wakefield,
"E'en his failings lean to virtue's side."
—Cynosure.

Dr. Lumry is a man of ideas and never fails to make his readers understand just what they are. Every sentiment he writes has such an air of honesty that it will in a measure disarm those who read to criticize. It is a good book to set people to thinking, whether they believe his theories or not. The book is well worth a careful reading and study.—Inter Ocean.
On all the points named they differ radically from those which prevail in the organization of society. Either they are true or false. It is a curious fact that all of them have been stigmatized as crazy, and yet nearly all of them have been for some years steadily gaining the adherence of men of intellectual ability.—Times.

HOME AND HEALTH.

HEALTH EXHIBITIONS.

In view of the very great success that attended the Health Exhibition in London last year it is proposed that one shall be held shortly in New York City. Such expositions do incalculable good in the attention they call to hygienic and sanitary matters. According to Dr. Billings, of the U. S. Army, over 140,000 lives are lost yearly in this country that might be saved, and at least 200,000 persons are sick who might live healthful and happy lives were sanitary regulations understood and enforced. The money lost to those who are sick and die unnecessarily is rated at about $150,000,000 annually. The death rate of the large cities is on the whole becoming less, due to the institution of health boards and the partial sanitary education of the community. This is a matter which appeals most directly to women. It is they who are the chief sufferers by ill health and the death of members of their families. One of the latest and best Boston notions is the formation of a club of college-bred women to make a special study of sanitary matters so far as they relate to the household. They have published several valuable papers, and their labors tend to make homes beautiful as well as healthful. They object to dark rooms in the construction of houses, and are opposed to carpets because they become reservoirs of dirt and dust. Sleeping rooms should have light as well as ventilation, and gas is objectionable in that it wastes the oxygen of the air. Similar clubs should be established in other cities. The waste of human life by premature death is one of the most appalling facts in the history of the race. Of every million children ushered into life nearly 150,000 die in the first year, 53,000 follow in the next year, 28,000 at the end of the third year. Each year the number becomes reduced until the thirteenth year when about 4,000 die. At the end of sixty years only 370,000 will be alive out of the million; eighty years will see 37,000 alive. Yet were sanitary laws understood this terrible waste of young life would not continue. The fearful mortality of the children shows criminal neglect of duty on the part of their fathers and mothers. Democrat's Magazine.

HOW TO TEST WELL WATER.

Look at it, holding a clear glassful of it up to the light. Taste it, taking care that the mouth is free from anything else. Smell of it, shaking a portion in a closed can, then smelling the air of the can by placing your nose at its mouth. Pure water is free from color, taste or odor.

To be sure apply this test: Get at a drug store a solution of three grains of permanganate of potash and twelve grains of caustic potash in an ounce of distilled water. Add one drop of this to a glassful of the water to be tested. If the pink color produced remains for half an hour the water is pure; if not, it is open to suspicion. Water not known to be pure should be boiled and filtered before using. Many savage tribes escape injury under most insanitary conditions by invariably boiling their water before drinking it. Good Health.

HARD AND SOFT WATER IN COOKING.

All cooks do not understand the different effects produced by hard and soft water in cooking meat and vegetables. The Journal of Chemistry says that peas and beans cooked in hard water, containing lime or gypsum, will not boil tender, because these substances harden vegetable casein. Many vegetables, as onions, boil nearly tasteless in soft water, because all the flavor is boiled out. The addition of salt often checks this, as in the case of onions, causing the vegetables to retain the peculiar flavoring principles, besides much nutritious matter which might be lost in soft water. For extracting the juices of meat to make a broth or soup, soft water, unsalted and cold at first, is best, for it much more readily penetrates the tissues; but for boiling where the juices should be retained, hard water or soft water salted is preferable, and the meat should be put in while it is boiling, so as to seal up the pores at once.

The American Magazine, in "Suggestions for August," advises parents who take their children to country homes, or summer resorts, to give some intelligent attention to water supply and drainage, to guard against the danger of malarial poison. Take in the dressing bag, it says, an ounce vial of saturated solution of permanganate of potash, which any druggist will prepare for a few cents, and put a half-dozen drops into a tumbler of drinking water that is supplied. If it turns brown in an hour it is not fit to drink; if not, it is not especially harmful. If a country hotel's sewage system is confined to cesspools within a hundred feet of the house and near the water supply take the next train to a point farther on. These matters should force themselves on one's personal attention quite as much as the undertaker's bills that occasionally follow neglect.

THE SECRET ORDERS OF WESTERN AFRICA.

BY J. AUGUSTUS COLE, OF SHAINGAY, WEST AFRICA.

Bishop Flickinger of the U. B. church says that, "This volume will well repay a careful reading not only for its discussion and exposition of these societies, but because it gives much valuable information respecting other institutions of that great continent."

J. Augustus Cole, the author of this pamphlet is a native of Western Africa, and is of pure negro blood. He has given much time and care to the investigation of the secret societies and heathen customs of Western Africa. He joined several of the secret orders for the purpose of obtaining full and correct information regarding their nature and operation. His culture and superior powers of discrimination render what he has written most complete and reliable.

TIMELY TALK ON AN IMPORTANT SUBJECT.

The Papers Say of this Book:

"It is well to remind the world of the great law of human brotherhood, but how to make the 'more general application of it.' 'Aye, there's the rub!' Our author contributes his mite in that direction, and his voice and reasoning will reach some ears and perceive touch some understandings and move some selfish hearts that are buttoned up very closely and hedged around by over much selfishness and comfortable prosperity."—Chicago Tribune.

"The writer does his work in a way remarkable alike for its directness, its common sense, its impartiality, its lucidity and its force. He has no theories to support; he deals with facts as he finds them; he fortifies his assertions by arrays of demonstrative statistics. The work is among the best of the kind if it is not the best that we have seen. While it is scarcely possible for it to be put in the hands of all our wage-workers, we wish it could be read by every one of them."—Chicago Interior.

Old Age and How to Enjoy It.

A most appropriate gift book for "The Old Folks at Home."

Compiled by REV. S. G. LATHROP.

Introduction by
REV. ARTHUR EDWARDS, D.D.
(Editor N. W. Christian Advocate.)

The object of this volume is to give to that great army who are fast becoming the "great beyond" some practical hints and helps as to the best way to make the most of the remainder of the life that now is, and to give comfort and help as to the life that is to come.

"It is a tribute to the Christianity that honors the gray head and refuses to consider the oldish man a burden or an obstacle. The book will aid and comfort every reader."—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

"The selections are very precious. Springing from such numerous and pure fountains, they can but afford a refreshing and beautiful draught for every aged traveler to the great beyond."—Witness.

OF

A Happy Life.

28th THOUSAND.

Baptist Commendation.

"We are delighted with this book. It reaches to the very core of Christian experience, and is eminently experimental in its teachings. It meets the doubts and difficulties of conscientious souls after the bread and water of life, but whose efforts result only in alternation of spiritual victory. The author, without claiming to be a theologian, sends out thereunto a happy and rich experience to help others into a happy Christian life."—Baptist Weekly.

Presbyterian Endorsement.

"The book is so truly and reverentially devout in its spirit that it disarms criticism. It contains so much that is sound and practical, so much that, if heeded, will make our lives better, happier and more useful, that the intelligent reader who really wishes to lead a life hid with Christ in God can scarcely fail to derive profit from its perusal."—Interior.

Methodist Word of Praise.

"We have not for years read a book with more delight and profit. It is not a theological book. No effort is made to change the theological views of any one. The author has a rich experience, and tells it in a plain and delightful manner."—Christian Advocate.

United Brethren's Approval.

"We have seldom met with a more interesting volume, abounding throughout with apt illustrations; we have failed to find a dry line from title-page to finish."—Religious Telescope.

Congregational Comment.

"It contains much clear, pungent reasoning and instructive incident. It is a practical and experimental lesson taught out of God's word, and is worthy of universal circulation."—Church Union.

IN THE COILS;

OR—

The Coming Conflict.

A NEW AND STRANGE STORY BASED ON STARTLING FACTS, VIVIDLY PORTRAYING A MYSTERIOUS AND DANGEROUS POWER AT WORK IN THE GOVERNMENT, THE CHURCH, AND THE HOME.

"All will agree that this is a powerfully written story."—Evangelist, (Chicago, Ills.)

"A book which we trust may have a wide circulation."—National Baptist, (Philadelphia.)

"So intensely interesting did I find it that it was hard to pause until the last page was printed. This work places the author high among the writers of fiction."—W. W. Barry, D. D. in Christian Instructor, (Philadelphia.)

"Unless we are greatly mistaken, the work will do more to awaken the American church and people to the evils of Freemasonry than any other book recently published."—Evangelical Repository.

"The book will create a sensation in Masonic circles, and evoke criticism of a most relentless character. The courage of the author in attacking such a rock-rooted bulwark as Freemasonry is something to admire, Fausch thought he be."—Nevada, Wednesday.

"Light is needed on this subject and needed badly, and we welcome this contribution to the literature of anti-secrectism, and cordially commend it to the favorable attention of our readers."—United Presbyterian, (Pittsburgh.)

"A charming work, fit to be classed with 'Uncle Tom's Cabin'; it is indeed less a work of fiction. The volume is as valuable as a book of reference as it is agreeable, truthful and useful. Our young folks will not leave the book, if they begin it, till they 'see how it turns out.'"—Cynosure, (Chicago, Ills.)

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

COUNTRY.

Reports early last week from the parched districts of the North tell of great distress and suffering. The drought still remains unbroken in most places, and, added to its accompanying miseries, are the horrors of prairie and forest fires. In northeastern Wisconsin and northern Michigan the night sky is illumined by the blazing pines and crackling underbrush. Hundreds of acres of standing timber have been swept away, and in some instances the fires have burned to the very edge of the towns. A curtain of smoke hangs over the entire region and far out on the waters of Lake Michigan. People living in towns adjoining the burning forests are nearly worn out from their battles with the flames. In many places the water supply is almost exhausted. Unless rain comes soon there is certain to be a repetition of the horrors attending the Peshtigo fires in 1871, and the Michigan conflagration in 1882.

Forest fires early last week were spreading in Michigan and Wisconsin. In the first-named State the village of Sandusky, county seat of Sanilac, was almost wiped out of existence Tuesday. Every building of any note was burned, and the loss is great. Sister towns were threatened with a similar fate.

On Tuesday and Wednesday general rains fell throughout the Northwest. Reports from Illinois, Indiana, Wisconsin, Ohio, Kansas, and other States, are to the effect that the drought has been broken, but it is feared too late to save the crops, which in many cases had been harvested.

The storm of Tuesday night was severe throughout Northern Wisconsin. Houses, barns, and fences were blown over, and growing crops were swept to the ground. A number of persons were killed by lightning.

The first rain of any consequence that has fallen in Michigan for six weeks fell Wednesday night and Thursday, drowning out the forest fires and saving vegetation.

Renville, Minn., was visited by a destructive tornado late Wednesday afternoon, and almost every building in the town suffered. One person was instantly killed and another was fatally injured.

The mills of M. & J. O'Donnell, situated near Bridgen, Ontario, were ignited by brush fires Wednesday, and before the flames could be extinguished damage to the amount of $150,000 had been done.

Reports of 271 township correspondents to the South Carolina State Department of Agriculture show that if the season continues propitious the largest cotton crop ever produced in the State will be made. The corn crop is reported as generally the best ever grown. Reports of a large rice crop still continue favorable.

A sensation has been created at Boston by the desecration of graves underlying Boylston street by workmen of an electric light company, who are digging a trench. A number of bones and skulls have been exhumed, and some of them have been hung up on the fence of the Common.

At Columbia College, New York, Tuesday, the American Agricultural Association held its first session. The paper that commanded absorbing interest was by Professor Wylie, who claimed that sorghum as a sugar-producing plant was undesirable, his statements being concurred in by Dr. C. V. Reilly, entomologist of the Agricultural Department at Washington.

Fire losses in the United States and Canada during July aggregated $14,026,500, double the average loss for July in the past twelve years. The total loss for the past seven months is $76,928,100, against $63,900,000 for the first seven months of July.

A syndicate of New York and Pittsburgh capitalists have purchased about 100,000 acres of the finest pine forest in South Carolina and Georgia. The price paid was $1,000,000 in cash.

In the National Council of American Firemen in New York the committee presented a draft of a new constitution and by-laws, which called forth considerable discussion, mostly on the clause excluding colored firemen. It was finally decided to adopt the constitution as presented and give it a year's trial.

The National Agricultural Department reports a falling off of 7 points in corn during the past month, owing to drouth. Spring wheat is in low condition, and oats are slightly under the average, while barley promises an average yield. The loss in potatoes during the past thirty days is figured at 20 per cent of the prospective crop, while the fruit and hay crops are very poor. The cotton average is good, and the tobacco plant is in high condition, except in Wisconsin.

The August report of the Ill. State Board of Agriculture of the condition of corn shows a promise of two-thirds of a crop in the northern division of counties, a decrease of 33 per cent during July. In the central division the decrease during July has been 37 per cent, and in the southern division there is a prospect for two-thirds of an average yield.

Hanna, Ill., center of the great hay market, was almost destroyed by fire Wednesday. The flames started from a spark from a locomotive, and burned thousands of tons of hay, hay presses, and other implements. The fire was spreading over the town, when a heavy rain fell, extinguishing it.

Christian Baum, of New Philadelphia, Ohio, Wednesday attempted to rescue his deaf son from in front of a railroad train, but the locomotive came upon him too rapidly and father and son were crushed to death.

The Giant Powder Works, located at West Berkeley, six miles from San Francisco, across the bay, exploded at 2 o'clock Thursday afternoon. The force of the explosion was such that windows along the Battery front were smashed and buildings throughout the entire business portion of the city quivered to such an extent that it was believed the city had sustained a heavy earthquake shock. There were four shocks and eleven workmen were injured.

By the accidental overturning of a working skip at the Cleveland mine at Ishpeming, Mich., Thursday, three men were killed. They fell 200 feet to the bottom of the shaft. Three others were injured, two of them probably fatally.

At St. Louis Wednesday morning the walls of a burned building collapsed carrying with them a portion of the walls of the wholesale grocery house of J. Alkire & Co. A number of firemen were buried under the debris, three being killed and four others wounded, one fatally.

Richard Engleston, an 80-year-old farmer of Madison, Wis., was attacked and almost squeezed to death by a spotted adder Thursday. The reptile wound itself around its aged victim and repeatedly struck its fangs into the legs of his trousers, but, his limbs being protected by boots, did not reach the flesh. Neighbors killed the adder.

It is stated that at a conference held on board the United States flagship Richmond, at Halifax, N. S., last Saturday, Mr. Foster, the Canadian Minister of Fisheries, declared it to be the intention of the Canadian Government to capture the American schooners Argonaut and French wherever found. To this Rear Admiral Luce and Consul General Phelan dissented, emphatically stating the United States would never permit those vessels to be taken outside of Canadian territorial waters.

Alexander Walker, a colored prohibition advocate, was beaten by a mob at Prairie Grove, Texas, last week, and mangled by being thrown against a wire fence. He died Sunday, and his friends claim that saloon adherents murdered him.

The official returns have been received from 110 of the 119 counties of Kentucky. These give Buckner (Dem.), for Governor, 140,412 votes; Bradley (Rep.), 120,567; Fox (Pro.), 8,256; Cardin (Labor), 4,841.

The Mayor, the Street Commissioner and nineteen councilmen of Wilkesbarre, Pa., were arrested Tuesday on complaint of citizens who charge them with failing to keep the streets in order, and for allowing stagnant water to pollute the atmosphere. They were held in $300 each.

Fletcher Franklin, a member of the old Jesse James gang, while being pursued by a sheriff's posse, near Craig, Mo., shot and killed Anthony Delong and Gideon Bostwick. Franklin, his brother Con, and Harrison Stone had escaped from officers, having been arrested for horse-stealing.

Frederick W. Hopt, the murderer, was shot to death in Salt Lake City on Thursday for the murder of John W. Turner seven years ago. Hopt had four trials and was sentenced in 1881, but by the law's delay has been kept in prison ever since. He had the choice of being hanged or shot, and chose the latter.

Willis McDearmon, a school teacher near Gabhatta, Jackson county, Tenn., found his school house guarded by a mob who refused him admission on the ground that he was a Prohibitionist. McDearmon opened another school house, the anti-Prohibitionists installed a new teacher, and the pupils are divided according to their parents' views on the question.

FOREIGN.

A number of Tory peers threaten to reject the amendments to the land bill introduced in the House of Commons, especially the clause providing for a revision of judicial rents. They have also warned the Government not to attempt to deal with the question of arrears. The attitude of these lords has paralyzed the Cabinet's action in further amending the land bill to satisfy the Parnellites.

The most important international contest of twine-binders ever held on the Continent has just been concluded at Etrepagny, France. The trial lasted several days, and was characterized by the utmost fairness, the judges being leading agriculturists of France. The first prize was awarded to an American machine (the McCormick) over all competitors. All the principal English and American machines competed, including the Hornsby, the leading English twine-binder.

The Chinese Government is about to employ a dozen bright young men as reporters of civilization. They will be chosen by competitive examination and will be sent abroad for two years to study foreign countries. Each will take a specialty to work and will send a monthly report to Pekin. After two years the government will use the services of each in the department in which he has done best, and the more promising young men will be ennobled.

A violent volcanic eruption occurred on the Island of Galita, off the coast of Algeria. Streams of lava are issuing from the crater of the volcano, and the glare of the flames emitted are visible for fifty miles.

"IN SECRET HAVE I SAID NOTHING."—Jesus Christ.

WHOLE No. 904.

Such want of magnanimity and such a spirit of bitterness does secrecy engender that the best friend the soldier had when in the field will be spotted by many as an enemy if he dares to lift up his voice against the order in which the soldiers have banded together. And it is more the matter of regret because many of the old soldiers, by reason of the bitter and resentful spirit they manifest, will lose the respect and confidence of those who would otherwise be their friends.

3. As a matter of fact, when a man becomes identified with or ready to defend and apologize for these minor orders he weakens along the whole line.

I know a member, I believe an elder, in the United Presbyterian church who was once a veritable "crank" on the secret society question. He read the Cynosure, he talked the Cynosure, and tried to get everybody to take the Cynosure. But in the course of time he became identified with the G. A. R., and a neighbor and friend tells me that he is now dumb on the whole question. And how can it be otherwise? When such a man goes into any of these orders he must feel that he has sold out, surrendered his principle, and rendered worthless any testimony he might profess to bear against "secret oath-bound societies."

4. When toleration is extended to these orders Masonry and Odd-fellowship demand the same toleration.

At the meeting of the General Assembly of the U. P. church in Topeka in 1885 certain action was taken in reference to the G. A. R. which was interpreted to mean toleration. The next morning the Moderator received a communication from one signing himself a "Presbyterian and a Christian Odd-fellow," demanding in the name of consistency that Odd-fellows should be admitted, as no objections lay against them that did not equally lie against the G. A. R. As a matter of fact, I believe that the influence of the G. A. R. at the present time is doing more to break down the force of the testimony of some churches against secret societies than all other influences combined.

5. These orders seem in some respects to command such attention and such an interest as is not shown toward the church which Christ has purchased with his own blood.

Two illustrations will show my meaning. A ministerial brother said to me with a funny twinkle in his eye, "There is one good thing about the G. A. R. They make lots of delicate women strong." "Why," said he, "I have women too delicate to go to prayer meeting that can climb lofty flights of stairs and be out till midnight helping on with their entertainments." I thank God that I have no story of that kind to tell from my own experience, but I know there are hundreds of pastors who have seen the same thing.

The other illustration is the case of a farmer who I supposed was in fair circumstances. He was a prominent member in the M. E. church but has withdrawn, and, I have been told, gives as his reason, want of ability to pay his church dues. But he is a Grand Army man through and through and able to keep up his dues in that order. Can the reader see the secret of his inability to pay his dues in the church and his readiness to leave the church of God for the man-made lodge? There is only one tenable ground to hold on the question of secret societies, and that is to hold the ground against the whole brood. Neither the interests of society, of the country or the church demand any of these orders; the endorsement of one is practically an endorsement of them all, therefore we say, avoid everything that bears even the image of the Beast.

College Springs, Iowa.

"SECT AND SCHISM."

The Christian Cynosure of July 21st under the above caption states that "Sect is schism and schism is sin," and "our friend can not overestimate the evils of sect and schism."

Our noble Christian Cynosure frequently expresses similar sentiments. Were it only the unstudied expression of a passing moment I would not present "mine opinion." It seems quite probable that I express the views of most of the readers of this paper when I speak in favor of some existing sect or sects, as most of its readers have deemed it wise to belong to some orthodox Christian church, and every such Christian church on the globe to-day, either in itself or its progenitors, is a sect. It may be independent, but the Independents were originally a scion cut off from the Anglican and Presbyterian churches in England and Holland under Brown and Robinson in or about the year 1616.

What is a sect? Let Webster's Dictionary be umpire.

*Sect. From the Latin seco, to cut off, to separate. 1. A body or number of persons united in tenets, chiefly in philosophy or religion, but constituting a distinct party by holding sentiments different from those of other men. 2. A denomination which dissents from an established church.

1. Established churches have wandered into sin and fostered crying evils from the days of the antediluvian to the Mosaic churches and until now. Christ recognized the Jewish church and early in his ministry advised obedience to its rules. He, however, organized a band of reformers, and instructed them in their work, and they organized a church following Pentecost; and it is written that "The Lord added unto the church daily such as should be saved." Most of these founders of the Christian church were formerly members of the Jewish church. Was it a "sin" to organize the new "seco"—the sect which sought to "fulfill the law and the prophets" of the old church? The fact that "the Lord added unto the church" should answer to the correctness of the movement.

2. But the early church wandered from the path of true piety after it ascended the throne of the Cæsars in the person of Constantine the Great. This occasioned the rise of the Papacy; which, however, did not long show an improvement over the former church. But its object at first was no doubt pure.

3. "Protestantism" came next as a Christian "protest" against the evils of the papal church. Was this "sect a schism and a sin?" Is the Ingersoll doctrine that "Protestantism and all the sects which it represents such an evil that it should be kicked out of the back door;" or, as the Cynosure puts it, "Our friend cannot overestimate the evils of sect and schism?"

4. Is separation from a church which panders to popular evil a sin? To separate from sin and sinners for the purpose of purifying the life does not in the reason of the thing prove it to be sin per se. To an average mind it looks as if it might be a pure and holy act.

5. Take the case of a church, no matter if as small as those in the houses of Aquila or of Nymphas, and holding services in the hall of a store or college; if it is according to Webster's definition "a body or number of persons united in tenets, chiefly in philosophy or religion, but constituting a distinct party by holding sentiments different from those of other men,"—then it is a sect. Perhaps it does not believe in the Jewish ritual, hence its "seco"—sect—cut off. Perhaps its members "hold sentiments different from those of other men," because of their opposition to giving Christian fellowship to secret societies and partaking of the cup of devils. Others of their general creed tolerate these societies. Now for the sake of purity before God and acquittal in the great judgment day suppose such a band of brethren "come out from among them and be separate." Is it wise or really truthful to term such a well-meant act "schism and sin?"

6. If it is wise and truthful to call this (to me seemingly Gospel) separation a sin, then the way out of it is for such a church to cease to "unite in such tenets of philosophy and religion" and holding sentiments different from those of other men" as occasion its being "cut off" (seco) and thus becoming a sect. Let it discard its position; let it "disclaim all intention to further agitate the question" or questions which cut them off from their former ecclesiastical relations. No matter who is to blame, for that is not the question. But that it is so is declared to be sin in those cut off.

7. But duty will not stop there if "sect is sin" (omitting middle term.) But that mother church must also throw down those "tenets" which make it "a distinct party" and caused it to dissent from an "established church." If "sect is sin" there can be no rest for any of us outside of the papal church or some of the effete and the decayed systems beyond it.

8. But coming to the main question, is sect schism? Sect is separation from another church, and as we have seen may be upon justifiable grounds. But the schism contended against is not the separation of the true from the false, but is that "breach of charity" (Webster) which rends asunder the people of God. But, as justifiable separation can not be schism and does usually produce sect, therefore we conclude that sect is not necessarily nor usually schism, and that the statement that "sect is schism" can not as a universal proposition be true. That it is not sometimes true is not denied, but that is not the question.

9. If we "can not overestimate the evils of schism," does it follow that to "come out from among . . . and be separate" from a church which sells indulgences, or whose services are purely ritualistic, or who apologize for and participate in human slavery or Freemasonry is schism? Does it follow that those who "come out," if they worship together and determine to perpetuate the pure worship of God according to the dictates of a right conscience (which makes a sect) commit sin, the enormity and turpitude of which "can not be overestimated,"

10. If our general position is correct, would it not be better to make such statements as are criticised with a little more caution and adopt rather the spirit of the article entitled "Separation," clipped from the American and published in the Christian Cynosure of July 30th?

With the highest personal regard for the editors of the Christian Cynosure and a deep regret for seeming to differ a little from them in opinion, I am, with the most unbounded faith in Christ and his church, your brother,

L. N. STRATTON.

STRENGTH FROM STRUGGLE.

Grows thy path dark before thee?
Press on, still undismayed;
Heaven shines resplendent o'er thee,
Though earth be wrapped in shade.

And God, thy trust, hath given,
With word from swerving free,
The angels of high heaven
A trust concerning thee.

Then though thy feet may falter,
Even at early morn,
And from hope's burning altar
The light may be withdrawn,

Yet from thy self-prostration,
Thou shalt awake in power;
From tears and lamentation,
To conquest every hour.

Strong in thy perfect weakness,
Thy strength shall never fail;
Mighty in holy meekness,
Thine arm shall still prevail.

THE GREAT RAILROAD DISASTER.

BY REV. H. H. HINMAN.

Rarely, if ever, has there been so great a railroad disaster as that which occurred near Chatsworth, Illinois. An excursion train of fifteen cars with more than 600 passengers ran through a burning bridge and hundreds are killed or wounded. To all who believe in an over-ruling Providence there will come the conviction that such an event came not causelessly nor without a beneficent purpose from the hands of the Almighty Ruler. It is not to be supposed that these excursionists, any more than the people on whom the tower of Siloam fell, were sinners above all others. Divine judgments, like the rain, fall on the evil and the good; and to each they have their appropriate lesson. The Great Teacher presents many lessons by a single event. Let us consider a part of them.

It goes without saying that the construction, equipment and management of railroads has been reckless, and that there ought to be better bridges and more careful supervision. If the whole dread disaster was the work of robbers (as has been suggested), it is equally obvious that there should be a more rigid enforcement of the law, and a sterner punishment meted out to those who trifle with, and trample on human life.

All this is obvious; but to those who read providences between the lines there is a greater lesson. When God's judgments are in the earth, then, if ever, do men learn righteousness. Great calamities bring us face to face with our Maker, and lead men and women to call a halt in their mad race for wealth, pleasure, and reputation. These are not the true ends of life, and to those who make them so there comes inevitably disappointment and calamity. "Their foot shall slide in due time, for the day of their calamity is at hand, and the things that shall come upon them make haste." Deut. 32: 35. The great fires in Chicago, the pestilence of Memphis, Tenn., and the earthquakes of Charleston, S. C., were so many object-lessons which were not altogether unheeded. They surely "worked together for good to them that loved God," and were the means of bringing many sinners to repentance. If this great calamity, falling as it does mainly on the citizens of Peoria, leads the people of that wicked city to put a stop to whisky-making, in which it has the sad pre-eminence; if it shall lead the railroads to a respect for the Christian Sabbath and a better regard for the rights of employees; and if the power of the secret lodge system, that has so long dominated over the business men, the churches and the Christian ministers of Illinois, shall be broken, and men and women shall once more begin to recognize Christ as the Divine example, and accept him as the true Light of the world, then the blessings that come will be immeasurably greater than even the terrific pain and woe that came so suddenly on that sad night on the trains of Illinois. May God help us to heed the lesson.

THE OPENED SEALS.
Rev. V. and VI.

BY REV. J. S. T. MILLIGAN.

This book or roll sealed with seven seals is understood to be the book of Providence as distinguished from the little book open in the hand of the mighty angel (Rev. 10: 1 and 2), which is the book of revelation in general. "The Lion of the tribe of Judah"—"the Lamb that had been slain," and this "Mighty Angel clothed with a cloud," are the same glorious Lord Jesus Christ to whom has been given the revelation of all important and saving truth to men. His divine wisdom rendered him competent to do so, but the right was by purchase. Essential deity could not thus communicate with sinful men. The right of enjoying such revelation was forfeited by sin, and must be restored only by purchase, or an atonement made for their sin. It was thus that the Mediator "prevailed to open the book and loose its seals."

No mere man in heaven or in earth was adequate to this result; it was the work of the God-man. Well might the Apostle John weep at man's unworthiness and disability to know the wonderful things of prophecy and of providence.

The four living creatures, which represent the Gospel ministry and through them God's ordinance of the church, are really one with four features of character. The face of an ox represents the laborious endurance; the face of a lion, boldness and majesty; the face of an eagle, loftiness of purpose and spiritual vision, and the face of a man, intelligence and heartiness in the service of Christ. The four and twenty elders represent God's ordinance of magistracy, or civil government. The figure is borrowed from the twelve tribes of Israel, each represented by two elders, as was meet according to Bible republicanism. These unite in ascribing worthiness to the Lamb, who opens the book, to receive authority and glory and honor and blessing. The redeemed to God by Christ's blood are those qualified by the mind and spirit of Christ to be kings and priests—to be vested with authority in church and state; and these are the key notes of providence and prophecy: Christ's kingdom administered by his saints, as against all the kingdoms of the world and the glory of them.

To show this we have the prophetic view of the sixth chapter in the opening of the seals. The Lamb opens the first seal and the ministry invite in thunder tones, "Come and see." The vision is a white horse with a bow-clad and crown-honored victor. The horse symbol runs through the most of the vision. It is a beautiful symbol of organized power or civil authority. Each horse has a peculiar color. This symbolizes its moral character or religion. There are no morals without religion, and as man has a spiritual nature he must be a religious being, and will be of necessity characterized by true religion, or false religion, or irreligion. So it will be of all human organizations, because this nature of the man must go into every relation which he constitutes. The white in this instance is a symbol of true religion, as white is a combination of all colors. So true religion includes all divine and human excellence and perfection. It means wholeness and holiness. This white-horse system of government is, therefore, the true system. It has the bow of offensive and defensive warfare, that it may bring down into subjection all the enemies of God and of King Jesus. It is crowned with the authorization of the "King of Kings and Lord of Lords" because it owns God's authority, Christ's administration and divine law. These are the true essentials to validity and legitimate authority. It of course "goes forth conquering and to conquer," because of the power of Almighty God which is pledged to its support and success.

This symbol, then, points back to the organization of authority under the promise: The seed of the woman shall bruise the head of the serpent. Its special or primary period was from Eden down to the days of Nimrod. No nation until the founding of Nimrod had dared to usurp the Divine prerogative and set up authority against the true religion. "Nimrod was a mighty hunter," or persecutor of the true religion; and from his time on until the Millennium there are false systems of organization characterized by the false religions that determine their moral character. But the Millennial reign, under the "Word of God," the "faithful and true" rider of the white horse of Revelation 19: 11, who is followed by the armies of heaven on white horses, defeats and destroys all opposing systems, and casts all their votaries into the lake of fire.

"He shall reign from pole to pole
With supreme, unbounded sway;

He shall reign when like a scroll
Yonder heavens have passed away."

The second seal opened reveals "a horse that was red." He takes peace from the earth, and infuses a spirit of murder and wields a great sword of murderous war. This reveals civil government under the influence of false or heathen religion, the religion of nature. Red is in some sense the symbol of justice, but this view of justice and righteousness is human, and fulfills the old adage, Summum jus est summa injuria, that kind of justice which is the greatest injury. It is "judging without mercy," which deserves "to be judged without mercy." Such is all heathen justice according to the spirit and philosophy of heathen religion. They have no idea of God in Christ reconciling the world unto himself. They have only written on their hearts, "the soul that sins shall die," and their vague ideas of an atonement went no farther than to induce them "to offer their sons and daughters in sacrifice to devils;" and as thus the nations of Canaan defiled their land with blood, so all these pagan nations slew men in sacrifice to Mars, the god of war; immolated themselves to Juggernaut; sacrificed their children to Moloch, and filled the world with woe and war. Cities laid in ashes, provinces in ruins, realms slaughtered, wives widowed and children orphaned were the result of heathenism enthroned. Earth became an acedema, a field of blood, in the wake of the red horse of pagan governments, fierce with the fury of a religion that knew no mercy, and seeking sanction only in the blood of enemies.

"Bring flowers to strew in the conqueror's path:
He hath shaken thrones in his stony wrath;
The vines he crushed in his chariot track,
And the sod is red where he won the day.
Bring flowers to strew in the conqueror's way."

This system was inaugurated in the founding of Nimrod, and includes the empires of Assyria and Egypt and Babylon and Persia and Greece and Rome. Not merely the Rome that was in the eastern and western "legs" of the great image, but that is in the "ten toes" of its present condition in the whole heathen and Mohammedan world.

The third seal opens and beholds a black horse. The rider has a pair of balances, and a voice squeals, "A measure of wheat for a penny and three measures of barley for a penny, and see thou hurt not the oil and the wine!"

This is the symbol of papal civil dominion, or government under the influence of Roman Catholicism. Its influence inaugurates the "dark ages." Its motto, "Ignorance is the mother of devotion," works its fruit in delusion and superstition. Its taking away the Bible from the laity is the hiding of the "key of knowledge," for it is the entrance of God's Word "that giveth light," and so they prefer that the people shall grope in darkness in the noon-day of human knowledge.

The man of sin and son of perdition that rides this horse carries the balances of deceit and of unholy alliance and compromise, formality, a system which is a compound of Judaism, heathenism and Christianity, using the grosser forms and denying the vital power. The voice—not of the living creatures, but in the midst of them—reveals the true spirit of its oppression and injustice, when it says, "A measure of wheat for a penny and three measures of barley for a penny." A measure was the amount requisite for a man's subsistence who boarded himself, and a penny, or Roman dinarius was the wages of a man per day. So a man could only earn a bare subsistence if he enjoyed the comforts of life; and if he would support a small family it must be on the coarsest fare. But the oil and the wine were for the priest and the prince. The hierarch in the church and the aristocrat in the state must not be hurt! Thus the Roman papal system, always and everywhere, built up a hierarchy and aristocracy at the expense of the poor, and by "grinding the faces of the poor" has given the nobility and clergy "to eat the fat and drink the sweet."

This papal form developed from the universal bishopric proclaimed in 606 A. D. This, by claiming civil as well as ecclesiastical supremacy, was the two-horned beast that came up out of the earth (Rev. 13: 11) that spake as a dragon. It was also symbolized by the "little horn" of the ten-horned beast of Daniel 7th, "before which three horns were plucked up." These were the three papal states, Ancona, Barcelona and Ravenna, given by Pepin to the Pope. (See Gibbon's Rise and Fall of the Roman Empire.) The period of this system was to be 1260 prophetic days or years, so that, adding the 1260 to 606, the year of its rise, we have 1866 when the Protestant power of Germany became triumphant over the papal power of Austria at the battle of Lodowa, the Pope only retaining power by the intervention of France for "three years and a half," the period of the death of the witnesses. Then in 1870 the Protestant power of Germany again is employed to crush the papal power in France, called the eldest son of the church, as Austria was called its right arm. This was at the battle of Sedan when the empire was broken, the emperor captured, and the French troops withdrawn from Rome. Then Victor Immanuel entered the Quirinal and was proclaimed king of all Italy, the Pope became a "prisoner" in the Vatican, and the black horse system went down to rise no more!

The ecclesiastical papal system is symbolized in Rev. 17 by a woman riding on the scarlet colored beast with seven heads and ten horns. This woman and beast are to be distinguished from the two-horned beast of Rev. 13. The latter is the papal civil system proper. The woman is the ecclesiastical as she influences and controls the ten-horned beast which is pagan civil power under papal ecclesiastical domination. They first drink her cup of spiritual fornication, then "eat her flesh and burn her with fire." Rev. 17: 16.

The fourth seal opened reveals a pale horse, whose rider is Death and "Hell follows him." This symbolizes civil systems under irreligion or atheism. It commenced with the French Revolution in 1791. It blotted out the name of God from the statutes of France, declared death an "eternal sleep," changed the Sabbath to the tenth day, and set up, as it supposed, an "Age of Reason." The views of Rousseau, Voltaire and Diderot found expression in the edicts of Robespierre. The Bastille was filled with victims of envy and fear. The guillotine decapitated the more active and powerful of the friends of truth and righteousness. The streets of Paris ran blood for weeks and years until it was found that an "age of infidel reason" was an era of slaughter and a "Reign of Terror." Lust and licentiousness were enthroned in the person of a strumpet, styled the "Goddess of Liberty." France found to her sorrow that atheism was worse than popery; that the pale horse was worse than the black horse; and she sought deliverance from those who had "no fear of God" in a Bourbon prince who acknowledged the Pope as "the vicar of Christ."

This system was to occupy "one-fourth part of the earth" and came across the Atlantic to mould the institutions of this country. Paine and Jefferson and Franklin learned political philosophy from the "encyclopedias of France," and the divorce of government from God was a leading idea in the convention that framed the U. S. Constitution. The convention sat without prayer. The name of God and the idea of nations responsible at his bar was left out of the Constitution and voted out of the oath! The divine prerogative of ordaining government (Rom. 13th: 15) was usurped by the "people." The Constitution and laws were made "supreme" without reference to the Divine law. No moral qualification was prescribed for the office-holder, and a religious test was repudiated. True religion could not be sanctioned by Congress, nor false religion repressed (Art 1st, Amend. 5th.); and not an allusion was allowed to that which would bind us to the throne of God or indicate allegiance to him who is "King of Kings and Lord of Lords." The land of the Pilgrims thus forgot the God of our Fathers, and the descendants of the Huguenots and Covenanters followed the pale horse!

We need not wonder, therefore, that our boasted land of the free and home of the brave soon became the land of the scourge, and abode of the slave. Our National atheism has attracted the "evil beasts" of other nations. The wrath of God has given us over once and again to the "sword and hunger and death," and unless we learn that "the most High God rules in the armies of heaven and among the inhabitants of the earth" we shall be utterly wasted.

Tranquility was restored by popery to France. Let us see that by Gospel Christianity we inaugurate a permanent peace, an era and reign of righteousness. If we honor Christ we shall be honored and blessed, but if we refuse to serve him we shall "perish forever."

What is principle? Yonder is a grand old ocean steamer, and when the wind blows she spreads her sails and works her steam and on she goes, and when the wind lulls, the engineer turns his throttle wider open and she goes at the rate of fifteen miles an hour whether the wind blows or not. And that is the difference between principle and feeling.—Rev. Sam Jones.

In response to an appeal of the W. C. T. U. the managers of the New York State Fair have decided that no privileges for the sale of intoxicating liquors on their grounds shall be granted. The fair will be held near Rochester in September when addresses will be delivered by prominent temperance advocates, both men and women.

WHO WILL CONSTITUTE "THE PRODUCERS PARTY?"

1. Trade Unionists. They ran down very much during the hard times, but are now stronger than ever before, and more than ever tinctured with the idea of seeking what they esteem their rights through the ballot-box. Their numbers are not easily verified. The great majority regard the wealthy with aversion; but the very strongest unions—those of locomotive engineers and firemen—have been so liberally treated by their employers that they are disposed to fraternize with the rich, as seen in their recent invitations to conspicuous men of wealth to speak at their banquets.

An immense trade union movement has taken form during the past year. It is claimed that "The American Federation of Labor" has now enrolled 560,000 men, who are opposed to being so much controlled by the Executive Board of the Knights as they have been; 190,000 of them have cut loose from the Knights, 300,000 are still Knights. The point at issue is that they think their union work more precious than their work as Knights. The Knight leaders seem to have coerced them too strenuously. That this body is ready for political action, as producers, is seen in the fact that their very able President, Samuel Gompers, was a leading worker for Henry George last fall, though not now active in that direction.

2. Knights of Labor. This body continues to grow rapidly in many sections, but has continual conflicts with trades unions. It has wider views and purposes than the unions, and tries continually, with much success, to get them to let themselves be pigeon-holed in its assemblies without losing their identity as unions. This causes much disturbance, as many unionists do not wish to identify themselves with the larger plans of the Knights, and fancy that such identification interferes with the usefulness of the unions as a means of getting better pay, shorter hours, etc. The general opinion of the Knights is, as yet, that Powderly, their Grand Master, is the best man for the place. He has had terrible responsibilities put upon him, and some of the tasks set before him having been really impossible of performance. He has made some mistakes and failures. Powerful cliques are now banded against him. If he retains the mastership after the annual meeting this autumn, he will probably be the candidate of the "Producing Classes" for the Presidency next year.

3. Grangers. Although an impression prevails that this organization has collapsed, such is far from being the case. They do not make as much noise as they did, but they retain their grand system of grange meetings, fairs, co-operative buying, and stores, in most States. Their grange meetings are doing much to modify the terrible isolation of farm life; and their system gives the farmers the chance to throw themselves very effectively into any political, moral, or social movement. Many of them, like trade unionists, affiliate as lodges with the Knights, but the proposed total absorption of them by the Knights is strenuously opposed by most thoughtful farmers.

4. United Labor Party and Union Labor Party. It is well known that Henry George started last Autumn "The United Labor Party," with his land tax as its principal plank. On February 22 there was a large gathering at Cincinnati of Knights, Grangers, Greenbackers, etc., who do not believe in George's land tax and extreme free trade. They adopted a platform. They made, as some think, the mistake of travestying the George party by calling themselves "The Union Labor Party." As one consequence, the leaders of the two parties claim, in their papers and speeches, that each political movement of labor is "ours." The end is not easily prophesied. It is so difficult to get farmers to adopt the land tax that thus far "Union" is greatly ahead of "United" in the country at large. It seems probable that "United" would have been discouraged by this time at its lack of rural success had not the great McGlynn boom and the Anti-Poverty Society and the O'Brien fiasco come in time to give it a new lease of life. One effect of this is to prevent any strong demonstration of "Union" this year in some Eastern and Middle States. Another is to give great life and vivacity to "United" in New York city and some other large towns. A pleasing feature of "United" work in New York City is the gathering of wives, sisters, and children into social meetings in connection with the political movement. "Union" is said to be making great progress in the Western States, especially Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, Kansas, and Kentucky. But the George movement in Eastern cities will, apparently, have the effect of keeping these two Dromios from merging their existence into one until next year. The prevailing signs are, in my opinion, that the Western movement, in the hands of such veterans as Jessie Harper, Samuel Crocker, Trevellick, and Norton, and perhaps De la Martyr, Weaver, Gillette, and other old Greenback labor leaders, backed by John Swinton and many others in the East, will absorb the "United" after the McGlynn enthusiasm subsides.

The total stoppage of immigration is likely to be a plank of the platform when real union takes place. The labor press of the whole country is clamoring for a check to the incoming of the ruder nations of Europe. But the most radical leaders scoff at the idea of stopping immigration to exclude socialists and anarchists. They grimly exclaim, "There is a strike in the American shop! Let foreigners stay out until we find whether the producers or the drones are to run this country."

In an article on "The New Party," in the July North American Review, Henry George shows his enthusiastic confidence in the triumph of his land tax as the all-embracing reform, and generalizes about the narrowness of all past movements of produce in the line of political action, and the futility of all such efforts. It will be a surprise to me if his "United" party attains in ten years the proportions, vigor, and results reached by the Greenback Labor party in 1878, when it polled 1,400,000 votes, elected twenty Congressmen (about five of whom betrayed their trust), and frightened their enemies into many beneficial measures. Where Mr. George gets his data for saying "The United Labor party of New York is the strongest organization on the new lines," is a puzzle. He characterizes "what is known as the Union Labor party" as composed of "self-appointed representatives of all sorts of opinions and crochets," and as "one of those attempts to manufacture a political party which are foredoomed to failure. Sooner or later its components must fall on one side or the other of the issue raised by the more definite (George) movement. On which side the majority of them will fall there can be little doubt."

I have given reasons for the opposite view. Time will decide.

5. Co-operative and State Socialists. The Co-operative Socialists, or Associationists, who flourished so greatly under Horace Greeley's favor forty years ago, are again becoming a power in the land. Millions of people have an idea that co-operation is the grand panacea. All of this view may be counted as upon the side of the producers in a political movement.

Three of the extremely socialistic organizations of this country are disposed to amalgamate for political action. They are "The Socialistic Labor Party" or "Social Democrats," "The International Workingmen's Association" or "Reds," strong in the Western States, and the "Blacks" or "Anarchists." The Chicago groups, anticipating the present action, disbanded, leaving the members free to join whatever body they may incline to. These societies are exotics in this country. They are composed mainly of foreign-born citizens, who have come here, for the most part, honestly impressed with the idea that they have panaceas for human ills.

They have made so much more noise than the other and milder Socialists of late, that most people have forgotten that the latter exist. Even Christian Socialists in America, England, and Germany, hide their lights in dismay when they observe what a racket the others are making, and find the name Socialist becoming synonymous with all that is vile and bloody.

The fact is that there are at least twenty kinds of Socialists. Every one, from the non-resistant Shaker to the bloodiest Anarchist and Nihilist, who starts out to reform social abuses—to establish real sociability or friendliness among human creatures—is entitled to the name.

All such may certainly be counted as arrayed against non-producers.—Samuel Leavitt in North American Review.

—We were in some doubt about getting through the Custom House with a garment, the material of which we had taken with us from this country, but which we had made up abroad. My brother, however, was a Freemason and we got through without paying duty!" So it is that Freemasonry helps its members, and this is one reason why so many become identified with it. The difficulty, which people of thoroughly sound morals have with the institution, is that it is pledged to aid its members in any case of need. It is not limited in this respect by anything so antiquated or inconvenient as the moral law. The above quotation, which recites a case of actual occurrence, indicates that the "grip" or "sign" is intended to be, and actually is, of avail, when the common and straightforward methods of procedure would fail. Yet some good people claim that Freemasonry is a good, beneficent, moral, and even Christian institution.—Instructor.

OUR CINCINNATI LETTER.

CINCINNATI, O., Aug. 17, 1887.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—The Stoic philosopher Epictetus, who flourished during the reign of Nero, said: "Dare to look up to God and say, Deal with me in the future as thou wilt; I am of the same mind as thou art; I am thine; I refuse nothing that pleases thee; lead me where thou wilt; clothe me in any dress thou chooseth." The National Reform Association is seeking to enlist all American citizens who can look up into the face of the King of kings and use this language.

Rev. Samuel Small preached a sermon at the Lancaster camp meeting in which I find this interesting passage: "God helped the discovery and settlement of this country and now people go about and say God has nothing to do with this country. From Maine, Massachusetts to Georgia, all along the coast, the charters of the settlements gave it as one of their objects to glorify God and forward his kingdom. As a state we are under obligations to God. Then the heresy of hell took hold of a handful of people and they made a Constitution and left God entirely out of it, and God's ben getting along pretty well without it. The honest religious people of this country should have arisen and demanded that God be recognized in its Constitution, but for the sake of a minority they must cringe like whipped spaniels and let God be left out of the Constitution. One other thing a minority has had, and that is the Bible in the public schools. We let our children study 'readin', 'ritin' and 'rithmetic' for the almighty dollar and they never see the Holy Bible."

Our lecture in the Dean U. P. church Friday evening was well attended. Rev. McClure is an active reformer and his people are like him. On Sabbath morning I preached in the Jamestown U.P. church, Rev. W. A. Robb, pastor. His congregation numbers about 75. I was delighted with his library. I find such works as "Scotch Worthies," Hetherington's "Church of Scotland," McCosh's "Divine Government," Brown's "Sufferings and Glories of Christ, Discourses and Sayings of our Lord, and Lectures on 1st Peter," Symington's "Dominion of Christ," Brown's "Second Coming of Christ," Horne's "Introduction," Drummond's "Natural Law in the Spiritual World," Mulford on "The Nation," etc. His people are well instructed. At 4 p. m. I preached in the brick school house two and a half miles out. All the seats were filled and a few sat in a buggy at the window outside. Revs. Robb and Sproull assisted. In the evening I preached in the Cedarville Hall on the Sabbath. We had an audience of 600. Revs. Morton and Baker assisted. A National Reform convention is to be held at Lake Side the 18th, 19th, 20th and 21st inst. The following is the printed programme:

Thursday, August 18th, addresses, "The Work of the National Reform Association," Rev. David McAllister, L. L. D.; "The Upas Tree," Rev. A. B. Leonard, D.D.; "Talk on Political Ethics," Rev. W. J. Coleman; "What is our Country Coming to?" Rev. Geo. Thomas Dowling, D. D.

Friday, August 19th, reform conversation and Question Drawer, Rev. David McAllister in the chair; Addresses: "The Influence of Politics on the Work of the Church," Rev. W. J. Coleman; "The Reformatory Influence of Education," Rev. E. K. Young, D.D.; "Betsey and I are Out," (divorce), Rev. Isaac Crook, D.D.; "Talk on Bible Politics," by Rev. M. A. Gault; address by Mrs. Clara Hoffman, President W. C. T. U. of Missouri.

Sabbath, August 21st, Sabbath-school; sermon, "The Dominion of Christ over the Nations," Rev. J. M. Foster; address by Mrs. Mary A. Woodbridge; paper, "Take this Child and Nurse it for me," Miss H. A. Foster, M.A.; sermon, "Sabbath Question," Rev. J. B. Helwig, D. D. J. M. FOSTER.

OUR BOSTON LETTER.

THAT CURIOUS BACK BAY BUILDING.

On the south side of Copley Square, New West End, Back Bay, vieing in architectural beauty with the massive and towering pile of brown and grey stone just opposite known as "Trinity" church, stands a rectangular-shaped edifice of two stories. None of the magnificent structures surrounding aristocratic Copley Square attracts more attention nor elicits so much curiosity as this building, which has no sign of any description denoting its purpose, unless it is suggested by the notice on a metallic plate at the main entrance that admission is twenty-five cents every day of the week except Saturday and Sunday, when it is free. The student or connoisseur of art, however, would, doubtless, immediately suspect its use from the style of its construction and the numerous bas-reliefs, in terra cotta and other material, illustrating classical events, etc. This mysterious building is one of our pet institutions, the pride of the "Hub," the Boston Art Gallery, wherein are exhibited rare and beautiful relics of Greek and Roman art, products of the industries of all nations, mummies and fossils, etc. In fact, from top to bottom the building is a veritable "curiosity shop" of the highest order. It is generally admitted, I believe, that object teaching is the most impressive. By this method the city designs to cultivate, or at least it hopes to inspire an interest in the higher arts among the masses.

In spite of free admission and the manifold attractions, the gallery is never over-crowded. There are curios here, which, placed on exhibition in an ordinary dime show, would enrich the management in a short time. Several reasons might be given for the manifest lack of interest in this museum, not of manufactured monstrosities, etc., but of the fruit of genius and ingenuity. One reason rendered is its distance and out-of-the-way location from the heart of the city and depots. Yet it is less than fifteen minutes easy walk from Park Street church, which may be considered about the center of the "Hub." Oakland Garden and South Boston Point theatres are miles away, and are thronged day and night. The reason why the art museum is empty and the dime shows full must be patent to all that care to think about it. The first is inhabited by the spirit of genius which insists on study and meditation; in the other lurks the fickle god of idle curiosity which demands and is satisfied with a simple glance or an expression of wonderment from its devotees, so transitory is the nature of its worship. But the genius of art is rapidly making proselytes from among the worshippers of curiosity. The lovers of New York Ledgers and cheap shows are the heathen of the world of art and literature, and are as much in need of missionaries as Asiatic prototypes. Opposition will be met mostly from the priests and scribes of the institutions that cater to their uncultured desires—showmen and publishers.

It cannot be doubted that the present location of the gallery affords excellent opportunity to test the art inclinations of the masses. No one will go far out of the way for anything which is not interesting. The undoubted probability that it would have more visitors were it located on one of the thoroughfares—a main artery like Washington or Tremont streets—could not be considered a test, only a consequence or result of simon-pure curiosity. The purpose of the projectors of the institution was not to test the artistic sentiments of the people, but to cultivate, educate. It is more than probable that simple curiosity, if rightly directed, would evolve, first into an appreciation, and ultimately into a love and patronage of the higher arts.

In regard to a particular location for an enterprise of this kind we are confronted by an almost insurmountable obstacle in the difference in the valuation of land in the two localities. Although Back Bay property is rapidly increasing in value, yet when the art rooms were first started it was exceedingly low-priced compared with that in the heart of the city.

Like all great movements calculated to elevate the spiritual and mental condition of the race, this of art education is slowly but surely accomplishing its mission in spite of the manifold discouragements it has to encounter. Anything which tends to lighten the hearts and enlighten the minds of humanity is deserving of appreciation and indorsement. These extracts from a beautiful poem by H. G. Judd in the Woman's Journal, August 6th, illustrates this thought:

"When God has work for men to do
His wisdom finds the instrument,
Chooses and sanctifies it too,
And, thus commissioned, it is sent."

"Thus when the Pilgrims crossed the sea,
Led forth as Israel was of old,
In quest of larger liberty,
Each added trial made them bold."

"Nay more! they laid both broad and deep
Foundations sure for better things—
They taught that knowledge in its sweep
Is mightier than the power of kings."

"It needed courage, self-control,
A patient spirit that could wait,
Those higher qualities of the soul
That render leaders truly great."

In the near future I hope to invite the Cynosure's readers to accompany me through the rooms of the Boston Art Gallery. D. P. MATHEWS.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE SABBATH ARGUMENT.

NORTH CEDAR, KAN.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—It seems my article on the Sabbath waked up the wrong customer. I wrote as I supposed in reply to an anti-Sabbath man, and woke up a Sabbatarian. Brother Morton is a foe-man worthy of the steel of any warrior; is one for whom I have very high personal regard; and for whose Sabbatarian views I have great respect, as I have for all right hand extremes. It requires both courage and sacrifice to maintain them, and often there are valuable truths mixed up with them. His compliment to my scholarship and theology was of course intended to be left-handed, but comes nearer being true than I supposed possible, and still he does know some of my facts to be true, indeed all of them he substantially admits, while he rejects my conclusion.

Now if I show and he admits that the very same Greek noun is used in every instance to indicate the Sabbath character of the first day of the week that is used to designate the seventh, and when there is allusion to both days in the same verse, as in Matt. 28:1, and I assert and he admits it is by the same word—gender, number and case being the same—then there is made out a strong reason why my conclusion should be accepted, namely, that the first day of the week is called Sabbath. He argues that the cardinal numeral may sometimes have an ordinal use, which I admit, but I assert it is when it is not necessary to convey an ordinal sense. Take for instance Mark 16:9, where the word is "Sabbatou," genitive singular of Sabbaton, which can be translated "week" without violating the rule as to number, and the probable idea being "week" or "day of the week." There we have prote, the ordinal numeral used, but in the second verse of the same chapter, where the noun is in the genitive plural and must be translated either "weeks" or "sabbaths," then the cardinal trias is employed, and with the article tes used we have the idea of a special Sabbath presented and emphasized. It is the one of Sabbaths in the seven instances in which the plural noun is used. The two instances in which Sabbatou is used for week are both in the singular, once without a numeral and once with an ordinal numeral. Then it is seven times used in the plural with a cardinal numeral either in the accusative case or with an emphatic particle.

Brother Morton knows that the allusion in these seven places can be to the second of his list of five Sabbath ideas. His attempt to make it refer to the first day of the feast of weeks, if successful, would show that the first day of the week was truly a Sabbath-day seven times in the first year of the era inaugurated by the resurrection of Christ. It would also argue the re-institution of the "feast of weeks" and its continuance during the new economy. And especially if Paul gave directions to make the first day of the feast of weeks a day for collections, that would make the feast of weeks with the addenda of a collection a New Testament ordinance, which would certainly be a new idea and entitled to a patent. The fact, however, that Christ rose the first day of the feast of weeks, which had been called a Sabbath by anticipation, and which made the Pentecostal effusion of the Holy Spirit on the Christian Sabbath, comes in as a very strong argument for the change of the day. I, therefore, thank my good brother that he has confirmed my argument that the first day of the week is seven times called Sabbath in the New Testament, and that he has so honestly admitted that Pentecost was on the Christian Sabbath.

We, therefore, agree upon all of my former article except in regard to the use of "mian," Matt. 28:1; and, reaffirming that it is properly cardinal and not ordinal and that Mark 16:9 is the only instance in which the expression the first (day) of the week grammatically occurs in the New Testament (the adjective being ordinal and the noun in the singular), I shall close for the present, hoping soon to give through the Cynosure twelve conclusive reasons for the change of the Sabbath from the seventh to the first day of the week. MOONEY AND THE SECRET DYNAMITE SOCIETIES.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 18, 1887.

Some weeks since I met a man in Alexandria, Va., and came with him to Washington. He gave his name as Mooney, and was evidently of Irish origin. I was at first much interested in his sprightly, intelligent conversation, and it was not till we had conversed nearly an hour that he became vehement and in some respects very absurd. He said he was a lineal descendant from George Washington, and well known to all the old families in Virginia. He said also that he was heir in a direct line to the British throne, and was often consulted by the Imperial Government and the British nobility, as well as by the Cabinet here at Washington. He said he intended to go to England and proclaim himself King. He had been the head of the labor unions in the United States, and the laboring people of this country and England would rally around him. He did not think there would be much fighting, but did not fear the consequences. After he had secured the throne he intended to proclaim the republic of Great Britain and Ireland.

By the time we reached Washington his manner had become so violent that I declined all further talk, though we came up on the cars together. Of course I do not know that this is the man recently arrested for setting fire to an ocean steamer, and who has been adjudged to be insane, but I confidently believe him to be the same. Yesterday's papers say that he is the head of a secret brotherhood of Fenians, whose mission is to make war on all civilized society until Ireland is "liberated," and that his insanity is feigned. This is quite possible, though it seems far more reasonable to suppose that it would take a mad man to inaugurate so mad a project.

But so long as the public sentiment of the United States and Great Britain tolerates secret societies we may reasonably expect them to be used for conspiracies against the law and peace of the nations. Every secret society is of the nature of a conspiracy; not always against the peace of society, but always against something that it is desirable to secretly oppose. What we need to impress upon the public mind is, that conspiracy is not a legitimate method for the accomplishment of any object. I apprehend that the Mormon conspiracy in Utah, and the Fenian conspiracy in Ireland, will continue to confront the American and British people until they are willing to give up methods of procedure so liable to be used for criminal purposes. The Prince of Wales as a Freemason has no right to complain or be surprised at Fenian Brotherhoods or secret dynamites.

KNIGHTS OF LABOR, POPERY AND PROHIBITION.

August 16, 1887.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I am at Maryville to-day at the home of Elder Rufus Smith, agent of the Missouri State Christian Association. It has been raining, so we have spent the time pleasantly and profitably talking over the outlook and planning for renewed war on the powers of darkness and idolatry in old Missouri.

I have just been reading that able paper, the Christian Statesman of August 4th, in which our esteemed Bro. Gault speaks of the manner in which "the Hon." John B. Finch denounced the National Christian Association as "liars, thieves, fools, and trauders," and that he even went so far as to make faces at our brave Bro. Stoddard. I said, can it be possible that such a man is at the head of the Prohibition wing of the third party? May God in his providence take such small men from the lead of so grand a cause. Bible Christians and candid voters take little stock in the non-political philosophy to which the Good Templars and Knights of Labor solemnly pledge their members. The Prohibition party in nursing such teachers is doubtless cherishing the viper that stings it on election day. It seems the Pope and Cardinals have taken the K. of L. under their fostering care. What will any moral movement gain by striking hands with papacy?

Especially, what has woman to hope from papal co-operation? Read Mrs. Gouger's digest of popery in a late issue of the daily Inter Ocean. Contrast its ripest fruit beneath the very shadows of the Vatican with one hundred and eleven years of free Christianity. Liberty in Italy is despised, she says, by Pope, monks and priests. Woman suffrage, the Bible in the schools, and the public school system in America have little friendship in papacy.

We trust all American prohibitionists will be slow to unite with unsafe elements in this great battle for reform and good government. Some seem to think it is not wise to antagonize more than one evil at a time. What policy is this that welcomes the support of questionable elements for a given end, that they may at the last turn and rend the army of reform. The men who can see only one evil allying society and government are poor guides. It is a little like a religion that will make a man quit stealing and robbing but allow him to still gamble and swindle. Schools of deception, imposition and fraud are hardly proper material for a true reform party of any kind. It is best that sincere patriots keep well rid of such alliances. M. N. BUTLER.

SACRIFICING PRINCIPLE.

WARE, MASS.

We are told by some, that in order to prosper in worldly things, we have much to sacrifice, and they would endeavor to make us believe that principle was of little value compared to worldly gain. True principle underlies every right position taken; take this away and nothing remains. One said to me last year, "I would sacrifice principle and everything else for the sake of money if I had the opportunity for worldly gain you have."

In looking over the history of our beloved church home, the United Brethren in Christ, we see to our sorrow what sad havoc the love of money, the applause of the world has wrought. Men once noted for piety, a strict regard for principles, seem lost to all sense of righteousness. Destruction and devastation seem to mark their every step, every kind of strategy, wire-working and scheming to carry out unlawful plans, law violated, the rights of others trampled under their feet; no matter how or by what means their ends are accomplished, only so the end is reached. It is expected that men of the world will pursue such a course. The love of money, worldly applause seem to be the highest motive that incites them to action; but we look to the clergymen holding the office of bishop to be unmoved by any of these things. Yet sad as it may seem, they, too, are trailing the glorious banner of right and righteousness in the dust.

This shows to every candid observer the destitution of principle in the secrecy element, with which our land is cursed. It is evident to every thinking mind that such an element as we find in the "lodge system" is deleterious to every grade of society. It leads the degraded still lower in the depths of ruin, and those once held in high esteem, brings them on the same level with the murderer, the thief, the drunkard and the licentious; all hail fellows well met. What a sight it must be to go into a lodge room and see the company all bound by these horrible oaths, going east in search of light, cable-towed, hoodwinked, blindfolded, kneeling at a heathen altar, where the precious name of Jesus is not allowed to be spoken. Yet they have the audacity to tell us that Christians can be engaged in this vile system! Away with such falsehood! Let any one read Bernard's Light on Masonry, or Ronayne's books, or others I might name, and they can see for themselves what a vile system it is, from Alpha to Omega.

My prayer is that God may overthrow the accursed system of secrecy, and when some of the lovers of the lodge have suffered what we have, and still are suffering, they will know more of the corruptions of the system. I have never faltered or feared to express my opinion; in all of our travels in the past and now in the time of conflict I rush to meet this foe face to face; to stand in the front ranks and die if need be for the truth. Yours for right and righteousness, and ready for constant battle with the powers of darkness,

MRS. L. M. HORT.

A TRUE AND A FALSE STANDARD.

DEKALB, IOWA.

All men are standard-bearers, good and bad. Each according to nature, void of saving grace and permanent organization, is prone to set up a standard of his own. Consequently God says to those possessed of his light, "Set up a standard." This the United Brethren fathers have done, by giving us our confession of faith and constitution agreeing with the Word of God, for it is not lacking in definiteness of aim against the powers of darkness. "There shall be no connection with secret combinations" is a good standard round which to rally in the fight now raging, and some of the brethren are wont to sing as in the days of rebellion,

"Rally round the flag boys, rally once again."

The fight is between God, good angels and good men on one side, and Satan and the legions of darkness on the other. Shall we now discard the courage of the fathers and change or lower our standard? To do so would be cowardly and sinful. Courage, ye whom God is calling, Davids of his choice. The standards of the different departments of God's army are not unlike ours. It is in the M. E. standard to "renounce the devil and all his works." Not as specific as ours, but covers the whole ground. Consequently their members are quitting the lodge as fast as they receive the truth in regard to the Christless standard of the lodge. "The unfruitful works of darkness" seeks to "conceal and never reveal" the hidden mysteries of their true colors, and deceives ministers and others into the modern worship of Baal behind tyled doors and curtained windows in "the secret chambers," where Christ tells us not to believe he is. Though they may tell us he is there, the words of the Saviour is, "believe it not." The standards of the organized churches is true and right and leads to Christ and heaven. The standard of the lodge is sin "black as night, terrible as hell." The first three degrees of Freemasonry, with its blasphemous worship, and murderous throat-cutting, heart-plucking, bowel-ripping signs and obligations, possess in principle and spirit the "three unclean spirits like frogs" emanating from the beast, the dragon, and the false prophet. The little secret societies, numerous as the frogs of Egypt, are the legitimate daughters of the triune harlot: Entered Apprentice Fellowcraft and Master Mason. These three degrees set up the standard of all organized sin by rejecting the name of Christ who is "the light of the world" and will destroy all false standards by the brightness of his appearing. Now it is the Christian's safest way to take up his cross of duty and rally to the churches' standard of the cross, by renouncing the false standard of the world which may at times use the name of Christ to deceive. "Have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them, for it is a shame even to speak of those things which are done of them in secret." It is a shame it has become necessary to speak of a false standard trying to supplant the standard of the cross in the church and that professed Christians should love to have it so.

NOTES FROM SOUTHERN PASTORS.

Walnut Lake, Ark.—I have been taking the Cynosure for eight months, and have found it sound and good. It has opened my eyes to the evils of the lodge system.

S. D. D.

Memphis, Tenn.—I can't let your paper go by. I think it rich in its contents, a strong temperance and a good religious advocate. I wish I had words to speak the value of the paper. I hope it may circulate until it reaches every man's door. What we want is light; I never get tired of reading it.

T. B. B.

Chacohoula, La.—I respectfully ask you to continue the paper. Its healthful, attractive and encouraging pages give me the greatest satisfaction. I shall try to encourage its circulation among other friends.

W. F.

Robinsonville, Miss.—I would be glad to receive a copy of your paper. It strikes right at Masonry. We have broken up the secret societies in our church, and allow no preachers in our pulpit who belong to an order.

J. S.

Rutland, Ga.—I like the Cynosure, but because of small salary I am sorry I cannot subscribe for it. If in kindness some good friend will send it to me I shall be more than obliged to them. It led me out of darkness, to see that secret societies were contrary to the doctrine of our Lord Jesus Christ, and as soon as my eyes were opened I abandoned them at once. I pray God it may do the same for others. God bless you in your work.

INSCRIPTION FOR MONUMENTS.

Will any reader of the Cynosure be so kind as to furnish through its columns an appropriate inscription for a monument erected in memory of those who have been anti-slavery, anti-liquor and anti-secret men. There are many who have fought and labored manfully in these three great battles for twenty, thirty or forty years, but whose names are not recorded on the pages of history; but who wish to have their principles recorded on the stones which shall mark their tombs for ages to come, that the coming generations may know that they stood for God and the right and the good of their children and the coming generations.

BIBLE LESSON.

STUDIES IN THE NEW TESTAMENT.

LESSON X.—Sept. 4.—Trust in our Heavenly Father.—Matt. 6: 24-34.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Casting all your care upon him: for he careth for you.—1 Peter 5: 7.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

COMMENTS ON THE LESSON BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The Folly of Trying to Serve God and the World.
vs. 24-26. Humanity never set out to do anything more absurdly impossible than to try to serve God and the world—to be loyal to the truth and yet at the same time in alliance with a falsehood. But ministers try this experiment, church members try it, politicians try it. They want to serve at once in two opposing armies, but they find that not only Christ's word, but the eternal laws of the universe are against them. There is no neutral ground in the strife against evil. The Christian must hate every false way, and show the world he hates it. For as Christ came into the world to bear witness to the truth, the like duty devolves on all his followers. We are slaves of mammon when we are unduly anxious for the comforts of this life. We are Christ's free men and women when we are willing to trust God for all things needful. The seal of mammon on his servants is anxiety and care. There is no real peace for the soul always clamoring after its mess of pottage; but he who, as Martin Luther so beautifully said of the bird settled on its perch for the night, can trust God to think for him is not simply at peace, but his very being is peace.

2. The Folly of Anxious Thought. vs. 27-30. The range of circumstances over which we have control is exceedingly limited, and beyond this stretches an unknown world of cause and effect governed only by Divine Providence. Every one of us comes into life under the environment of certain laws of heredity. We are largely what the generations have made us. We all see the folly of trying by any amount of anxious care to alter a purely physical characteristic. But the mystery in which being begins is not lifted as we advance. From birth to death we travel through an undiscovered country, of which the philosopher knows as little as the child. We can people the future with phantoms of terror, or with heavenly messengers of trust and hope. No anxiety can alter our destiny, but on the contrary faith in God will give us the courage and patience that conquers destiny, that brings good out of evil, and wrings sweetness from the bitterest cup.

3. The Thing First to be Sought. vs. 31-34. There can be no line of separation when the church and the world are seeking the same objects. It is natural that a man who has no hope of another life should make the most he can of this, but when a Christian has all his or her anxiety centered on questions of bodily need they give the lie to all their professions. Seek first the kingdom of God is the only rule by which a nation can truly prosper. It is the thing which should be sought first by the Christian voter. High license is not seeking the kingdom. It is seeking money for the National and State treasury, and after all defeating itself. The men who vote for it do not consider that the national wealth would be doubled and quadrupled if we could get rid of the taxes imposed by the saloon, and God would add no sorrow of breaking hearts with it. Many go into the lodge because they are anxious for the morrow. They would rather trust man than God. But what true follower would prefer to put his faith in a Christless organization made up of men of every shade of morals and belief, than in the promise that He who feeds the sparrows and clothes the lilies shall much more do the same for his trusting children.

From Peloubet's Notes.

"Ye cannot serve God and mammon." Mammon is a Syriac word, meaning riches. It is riches or wealth personified. Now riches are meant to be the slave of man. If a man serve his own servant, or, in a word, any one who has no just claim to be his master, he is a slave. But how can a man serve riches? Why, when he says to riches, "Ye are my gods." When he feels he cannot be happy without them. When he puts forth the energies of his nature to get them. When he honors those who have money, because they have money, irrespective of character; or when he honors in a rich man what he would not in a poor man. When riches make him oppressive to those over whom wealth gives him power. Then he is the slave of mammon. It is not the being rich that is wrong, but the serving of riches, instead of making them serve your neighbor and yourself.—MacDonald.

"Is not the life more than meat?" What then are we to take thought about? Why, about our work. What are we not to take thought about? Why, about our life. The one is our business, the other is God's. But you turn it the other way. You take no thought of earnestness about the doing of your duty; but you take thought of care lest God should not fulfill his part in the goings on of the world. A man's business is just to do his duty. God takes upon himself the feeding and the clothing. Will the work of the world be neglected if a man thinks of his work, his duty, God's will to be done, instead of what he is to eat, what he is to drink, and wherewithal he is to be clothed? I think that the work of the world will be only so much the better done.—MacDonald.

"Shall he not much more clothe you?" And which therefore make it certain that he will care for us. But how? Does he forbid weaving and spinning? No; but weave and spin in peace, and hope, and faith. The Saviour knew well, that in all ordinary circumstances, reagent would not be obtained without spinning, and weaving, and other kinds of toiling. But he knew far better than all other men, that work without trust in God is another and very different thing. He knew, as no one else knew, that work, woven as it were on the warp of trust in God, is not only performed without any waste of immortal energy, but is also transformed into worth and worship. It is thus that work, however humble, becomes figured and transfigured into a thing of beauty and of bliss.—Morrison.

"And all these things." The worldly things of which your heavenly Father knows you have need; each day that day's supply. As much of each of them as is needed shall be added, or thrown into the bargain, as it were; and, if it would be well, they shall be added in great abundance. Both Origen and Clemens Alexandrinus record that one of the (traditional) sayings of our Lord was this: Ask great things, and little things shall be added; ask heavenly things, and earthly things shall be added. See the same truth illustrated by God's promise to Solomon (1 Kings 3: 11-13), and the promise made as to the profit of godliness, in 1 Tim. 4: 8.—Morrison.

IN BRIEF.

President Cleveland's invitation to Pittsburg is to be engraved on a steel plate, which is to be rolled until it is only three-thousandths of an inch in thickness and can be rolled together in the form of a scroll. To roll a piece of steel so thin requires an enormous amount of work and the greatest care and skill. Should there be the slightest defect in the rolls the plate would be wavy and spoiled. On the plate will be engraved the invitation, with the names of the presidents of the different committees attached, the coats-of-arms of the United States, of the cities of Pittsburg and Allegheny, and the new court house.

The invitation sent to the President and Mrs. Cleveland to visit Kansas City and the West this fall is in book form, being 11 inches long, 16 inches wide, and 4 inches thick. The binding is of seal skin and is the first instance of this valuable skin being used for book binding. It is elegantly bound, is signed by 21,000 people and was carried by a delegation of 100 people. The invitation was presented to the President by the Mayor of Kansas City and was accepted by the President in a timely speech agreeing to go on some date to be determined in the future.

Mary McLaughlin, who has been appointed postmistress at Lake Forest, Ill., is a young Irish seamstress, who has been sewing among the families there at one dollar a day. This appointment will give her $1,500 a year, and she must have been astonished when a telegram reached her from Senator Farwell that her name had been sent to the Senate. She was not a candidate, and probably never dreamed of such a thing as being postmistress or holding any other office. This intimates a new era in office-seeking—that is, the office seeking the woman.

About one hundred Mormons from Salt Lake City are making application to the Dominion Government for homestead lands in the vicinity of Medicine Hut, Northwest Territory, with a view of forming a settlement of the faithful. The Minister of Justice opposes the introduction into the country of such a sect. This government can warn all other governments against allowing this class of vermin to establish themselves on their domain.

In Frederick Krupp, who died at Essen, Prussia, Germany lost one of the trio of men who were chiefly instrumental in raising it to its present commanding height. Bismarck conceived the plans, Von Moltke directed the military operations, but Krupp made the guns that won Sedan and battered a way for the victorious Teutons into Paris. A modest man, he declined letters of nobility, and died as he had lived, a gunmaker and the son of one. Sixty years ago his father started the works at Essen with only two workmen. The establishment made steady progress, but not much above a local reputation, until the son discovered the method of casting steel in large masses. In 1851 Krupp sent to the London Exhibition a block of steel weighing 4,500 pounds, and for years he has been able to cast steel in one mass weighing more than 400,000 pounds. But though his world-wide fame rests chiefly upon his discovery and his mighty guns, he accomplished a deal of work which, while it wins but little fame, often works more of good than famous deeds. He was an extensive manufacturer of articles used in various peaceful avocations, and from their production drew a large revenue. In his industrial and social relations, Frederick Krupp seems to have been every way admirable. He was studious, fond of his work, and, for a man of his caliber, singularly unobtrusive. With his workmen, of whom there were 15,000, his relations were happy. The bond between them was not one of mere convenience. That he was anxious for the workers' welfare is attested by the fact, among others, that at the time of his death he had a scheme on hand for the establishment of a daily newspaper at Essen in behalf of those employed by him. Reciprocity of such good will was natural; and when it is said that he was at the time of his death one of the wealthiest men in Germany, the thought naturally springs that if great wealth must accrue, it is well it should gather in the hands of such as Frederick Krupp.

OBITUARY.

HENRY L. HEMENWAY, eldest son of Dwight and Mary A. Hemenway, died at Lake View, the suburb adjoining Chicago on the north, on the 5th inst. He was born at Wayne, Ill., in 1860, but lived with his parents in this city and in Lake View after his third year. He was an affectionate and obedient son, and a studious and successful scholar.

On the removal of his parents to Winters, California, in May, 1885, he remained in Chicago at his own request, where he completed a course, previously commenced, in book keeping, phonography and type-writing. After which he took a responsible position in the office of his uncle Ezra A. Cook, at Nos. 7-13 Wabash Avenue, which he filled up to the time of his death, in a most satisfactory manner. He was one of the organizers and zealous members of the Lake View Chataqua Literary Circle, and he joined the Lake View Congregational church March 1, 1885.

An earnest Christian, he was accustomed to live each day as though it were his last. He was a great comfort to his former pastor, A. J. Bailey, and his wife, who often remarked that in these times when so many young men were indifferent or wavering, it was refreshing to see the subject of this sketch so ready to present seriously questions that were presented to him, and then to act promptly in a manly and straight-forward manner.

THE
Man Traps of the City.

BY THOS. E. GREEN.

Mothers—place this book in the hands of your sons

The Tiger and His Den.

Cups of Flame.

The Scarlet Sin.

Embodiment.

The Devil's Printing Press.

Etc., Etc., Etc., Etc.

A book that is sensational, not from excited rhetoric or florid figures of speech, but from the facts that flow like molten lava from the pen of the writer. It is a book of timely warnings, where sin and crime are shown in their mask, robbed of the glamour with which they have been surrounded by the prurient literature of the day, and painted in strong, true colors. The life of the prodigal is here shown in its true light, not as a life that, though wicked, has its delicate, but a thing of death, now and in future life to be abhorred.—WESTERN CHRISTIAN ADVO.

HENRY L. KELLOGG.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, AUGUST 25, 1887.

PROF. WOODSMALL, whose visit to the North a year ago along with Rev. Mr. Countee of Memphis the readers of the Cynosure all remember, is resting a few weeks with his family in Franklin, Johnston county, Indiana. He is personally acquainted with Rev. Messrs. Robinson, Battles and others of the St. Marion Baptist Association, Arkansas, whose late action has surprised and delighted our readers. He thinks highly of Rev. Lewis Johnston of Pine Bluff, whose letter in the Cynosure week before last gives us such a graphic account of that associational action.

THE RAILROADS are again cutting rates, both passenger and freight. The country is so vast, the network of roads so immense, and companies so numerous, that competition must and will produce strife and bring down charges, and eventually prevent monster monopolies. The gloom of the picture is in setting aside the Sabbath. The roads draw young men of enterprise, as lodestone attracts steel, and that in the period of peril to their virtue; and a few years without a Sabbath ruins them. The Fourth Commandment gives the teaching-day for the other nine; indeed, it is the atmosphere in which the other nine draw their breath. The Sabbath gone, all is gone. And, "Then shall the land enjoy her Sabbaths as long as it lieth desolate." Lev. 26:34-5.

DR. JOSEPH E. ROY was bruised, and for years laid aside from labor, by the fall of a defective upper berth in a sleeping car. The court gave him ten thousand dollars damage; perhaps half what he sunk by the blow. A weak or corrupt judge has granted a new trial because, while the lower court withdrew in general from the jury, the financial condition of Dr. Roy, the number of his children, which was a part of that condition, was not, in terms, withdrawn, and the mention of the children might have affected the minds of the jury and increased the verdict of damages. As this judge's decision rests on an almost invisible quibble, it would seem as if the bench and the bar are combining to play into each other's hands, superceding reason, law and right.

TWO NEW SECRET ORDERS are noticed by the press. One is of workmen like the Knights of Labor, but professing to be opposed to strikes. It starts in New England, and, like the others, increases with great rapidity, concealing its times and places of meeting. The other is an order of firemen. If the Interior, Independent, New York Evangelist, Herald and Presbyter, Southwestern Presbyterian (New Orleans) and the Pacific (San Francisco) with a few papers of like standing, all of which regard the secret orders with aversion, would call a council of editors and open their columns for their discussion, they would fall as Masonic lodges fell in 1826-34 when of 500 lodges in the State of New York but two, one speaking French and the other German, could find anything to do "for several years." (See Folger's Complete History of Scottish Rite, p. 412, app.) Will not the Independent take the lead in inaugurating so wise, necessary and beneficent a movement?

THE SONS OF VETERANS of the United States met at Des Moines, Iowa, August 17th, 200 delegates being present; 614 new camps formed during the year; 11,811 new applications; growth for the year, 17,249; total membership, 32,804; officered from corporal to commander-in-chief. Thus this military disease, like the Salvation Army, the Patriarchal Order (military) of Odd-fellows, military Masons, the G. A. R., Knight Templars, spreads apace.

Gen. Knox originated the secret military order (the Cincinnati) to be composed of ex-officers of the American Revolution. A fund was created, a blue-and-white-and-gold badge adopted; and to make it a perpetual secret order the "Sons of Veterans" of the American Revolution were made members. In 1783 Mr. Burk of South Carolina assailed the order in a pamphlet. The Legislature of Massachusetts condemned it, and Congress was opposed to it. Washington, who was made commander-in-chief, suppressed the "Sons of Veterans," thus making a permanent order impossible. See "Marshall's Life of Washington," p.p. 72-5, Vol. II. The tract lately issued, written by Rev. Mr. Hinman and Rev. A. J. Chittenden, should be circulated throughout the United States.

TWO BISHOPS.

Bishops Dickson and Weaver have been re-elected to office once in four years, till they are becoming fixtures in the episcopate of the United Brethren church. Both have leading articles on the first page of the Telescope, Aug. 17, characteristic of the writers. Bishop Dickson gives a clear, calm, truthful, historic sketch of the "Temperance Reform." Except, perhaps, a slight error in dates, his temperance sketch is charming. The first Total Abstinence Society, we think, was formed in Saratoga Co., N. Y., by Rev. Lebbeus Armstrong, 1809. The same year, Judge Esek Cowen, then a white-haired youth, wrote and circulated a temperance pledge, we think, total abstinence. But the first pledge attracting national notice, was, we think, as the Bishop says, in 1827.

The Washingtonians are well pictured, as having "but little character, and some of them but little brains." But they answered a purpose. The next epoch we give in his words:

"The next epoch in the history of the temperance reform was the secret society measure. Sons of Temperance, Good Templars, Daughters of Temperance, etc., etc., sprung up over the land, and it was thought that by their dark methods this dark need could be better grappled with and overcome. One evil effect of these organizations was to divide the friends of the cause, and another was to weaken the efforts of the Washingtonians, whose methods were open and for all, so that after all these means had been tried, in the language of lecturers and writers, drinking habits were 'alarmingly on the increase.'"

This is plain direct truth, but not all the truth. Secret societies always were, and always will be, led by unchristlike men. They never did unpopular reforms, but always ride reforms after they become popular. And as a secret oath or obligation taken solemnly, by right, is worship, the secret temperance orders were incipient idolatry, hid under temperance; and idolatry demoralizes every organization, institution or cause which admits it. This, Bishop Dickson does not mention; though he has, from the first, spoken square against the secret sepiro, when he has spoken of it at all, as he does above.

Bishop Weaver climbed into public notice on the reform ladder. He published tracts against Universalism and secret societies; preached with eloquence and unction, till he saw with honest Sancho Panza, that, "In our bad world, virtue is always more persecuted by the bad than supported by the good." He then ported his helm, and laid his course to the left. He has a column and half article, beside Bishop Dickson's. He puts down thirteen theological propositions which no enlightened Christian disputes; and glories in his church for believing what it is popular to believe. Then he dwarfs the differences of "method" in opposing liquor and the lodge, and says, "I suggest that for a time, at least, we turn our attention to those great and living truths upon which we so generally agree."

That is to say, drop the anti-secret discussion, till a new vague constitution is adopted, which will bind the church, as cords bound Sampson when he was shorn of his locks. There is not a fiend among all the devils who met and resisted Christ, who will not thank Bishop Weaver for advising the church to "let them alone," till some future time indefinite!

Why does not this eminent man summon up manhood to say what should be done with the lodge? Why not help the church to settle the question which God has placed before it? We have told Agent Shuey the names of young men in the Summit Street congregation, who were to join the Odd-fellows the following week. Bishop Weaver doubtless knows that thousands of United Brethren believe that Dr. Z. Warner is, or was, a Mason; and they know that he has not renounced and withdrawn his influence from that lodge, which is the mother of all the secret "abominations." When God's temple, in the days of Ezekiel, was penetrated by these "accursed things," did the prophets "suggest" that the church should "turn her attention" away from them, to the sublime truths of Creation and the Decalogue, in which they "all agreed?"

We have run over many of Bishop Weaver's articles of late, and do not remember one, which is not, like the one now noticed, if fairly construed, an attack on every man and woman who is praying and hoping for the removal of the lodge-serpent from under their communion tables. Why should not Bishops Wright, Dickson, and another if he will join them over their own names, submit such a proposition as this, to the churches: "Reverend and Beloved.—We agree, our brethren consenting, to suspend all discussion and action on 'Constitutions' and 'Commissions' if our next General Conference will order every annual and local conference to ascertain and report through the Telescope the number of adhering Masons and Odd-fellows in all our churches, and order our bench of bishops to see that measures are at once taken to reclaim them from the lodges, or remove them from the churches!"

This is God's "method" for removing false worshippers, from the time of Moses to Christ. Will not ex-Bishop Dr. L. Davis draw up some practical paper tantamount to this, have it respectfully signed, and submit it to the churches through the Conservator? In this way the Friend Quakers purified their communion from the crime of man-owning, and lost but a single member in the whole State of Maryland: though slave property had begun to rise after the invention of Whitney's cotton gin, and owners were offered $700 cash for slaves before they were emancipated. This example in the hands of God wrought steadily for emancipation till the fetters fell by Lincoln's proclamation.

THE TROUBLE WITH SECTS.

SOHISM, the offence of seeking to produce division in a Christian church without a justifiable cause."—Webster.

We insert Dr. Stratton's article on the above topic for several reasons: 1. Its ability and excellence; 2. We have given many articles on the other side, with none but our own remarks on his side; 3. Because the Cynosure agrees substantially with the doctrine of the article, though we might differ in its application to existing churches.

The Cynosure condemns "sects" which "cut off" saints, but approves division which cuts off sins; yea, even saints must be cut off if in plain sin. The Corinthian who had his father's wife, whom Paul commanded his church to expel, was evidently a true convert, but ensnared by the devil, doubtless, and a woman whom he loved. (See 2 Cor. 2: 6.) Webster gives "heretic," "partisan," "schismatic," as synonyms for "sectarian." In this bad sense is the word used by us in the article criticised by Dr. Stratton. But in the good sense "sect," or division, is commended, as when Paul commands us to "come out from" and "be separate" from idolaters (2 Cor. 6: 16, 17). Separation for just cause is not sin or schism.

The Congregationalists under Robinson (Brown was a secretary) were not sectarian. They did not unchurch the Anglican church; they recognized her baptisms and welcomed her members to their fellowship even when her bishops put them in jails and pillories, and cut off their ears; nay, burned them at the stake. And to-day any Congregational church can exclude Masons who belong to other churches from their fellowship without forfeiting their denominational standing. "The churches" (not the church) "of Galatia and of Asia" were each responsible for the purity of their own communions, and could be withdrawn from if they allowed them to become fundamentally corrupt.

But that the churches of the present day are intensely sectarian in contempt of Christ's prayer, "that they all may be one," is obvious. Some exclude all ministers but those of their own sect from their pulpits. Some re-baptize members of other churches when they receive them. A local Wesleyan conference excluded a minister for uncommonly vile conduct. He appealed to an annual Wesleyan conference; and before that conference met he was received into standing in another sect. Thus the sects often shelter each other's criminals; which even States will not do. Churches ought to recognize each other's just acts of discipline; and if there be any just discipline, it is when churches, like that of Moses, separate idolatry from the worship of God, or expel members for vices and crimes.

But to crowd a dozen little churches into a single village, whose doctrines are substantially the same, and where two or three churches are all the people need, for the sake of keeping up church names not known in the Bible, and then to bid for and coax away each other's members,—this is deplorably sinful. "Whereas one saith, I am of Paul, and another, I am of Apollos, and I of Cephus, are ye not carnal and walk as men?"

But, on the other hand, to denounce as sinning all who belong to Congregational, Methodist, Presbyterian, Baptist, and other denominations simply because of such membership, when they love each other, labor and commune together, interchange pulpits, and call each other "brethren," and who wish heartily there were no such denominational names,—to disfellowship as sectarians all who join such churches because they cannot do otherwise, that is to form a church of come-outers, a sect whose creed is there shall be no sect. As against such, Dr. Stratton is undoubtedly right. And if churches will not shelter and embrace liquor sellers, whose business does evil with no drawback of good; if they will exclude Masons who cover blasphemy with secrecy, and whose worship is the worship of devils, not of God; if, in short, they "take forth the precious from the vile," as God commands, such churches will be knit together in love, and their sectarian names will become meaningless and drop off; "The glory of the Lord will be revealed, and all flesh see it together." Isa. 40: 5.

METHODIST TESTIMONY.

From the fact of its rarity, no testimony against secretism has been more welcome than that from the Methodist Episcopal church. This has given weight to the opinions of Bishop Hamline privately noted in his journal, and the more emphatic and positive opinion of old Peter Cartwright, the Methodist pioneer of Illinois. Occasional notes in the New York Christian Advocate from the pen of the talented Dr. Buckley, who, though reported to be a Mason, is evidently a disgusted one, have been widely published, and have had great influence among Christian people who seldom hear any word of opposition to the lodge. For this reason it is a cause of rejoicing to read the following question and answer in the New York Guide to Holiness for August:

A brother in New York asks: Is it right for a minister to belong to a Masonic lodge; and is it right for the church to support them?

Ans.—We have heretofore spoken explicitly on this subject. We can find no warrant in the Bible for either one or the other. If others can, they have a keener spiritual eyesight than we possess. The injunction is, "Have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness."

Bro. L. B. Kent, of the Banner of Holiness of Bloomington, Ill., re-prints this reply and adds a word of his own:

As to those Masonic preachers, we may say, we find it difficult to find a place for them, either in the favor of God, or in his kingdom. Their case is too much and too complicated for us. But if it is true, as Bro. Hughes says, that there is no warrant in the Bible for the church supporting them, we wonder how he can remain in connection with the system which provides for their support by the thousand, and that largely by the saints who themselves, like him, abhor the evil!

These brethren, like Bishop Hamline of their denomination, and Bishop Edwards of the United Brethren, are leaders in the holiness work and they speak like men who believe that "where the Spirit of the Lord is there is liberty" (2 Cor. 3:17). The distinctive work for the bringing of the church under the power of the Spirit has been as a rule reformatory and thorough, laying the axe at the root of the tree of worldliness and sin. It has therefore testified uniformly against the lodges. Yet it must occur to all who read the above notes that there is need of something more than occasional testimony. The masses need to understand the reason for this condemnation or they will begin to regard it as groundless and proceeding from personal spite or misconception. An explanation, such as the Banner of Holiness gives to the subject of gay apparel, would establish its principle of the separation of Christ's worship from Baal's, and lead the ignorant into the truth and light of the Word of God.

THE UNITED BRETHREN CONVENTION at Dayton passed several resolutions upon the lodge and the work of the N. C. A. in opposition to it, which will be read with gratification by the lovers of the Cynosure:

Resolved, That we esteem the Christian Cynosure as a leading, bold and fearless advocate of moral reform, and especially on the question of secret societies, which are not only cursing the world with their despotisms and idolatries, but now threaten the disruption of our beloved Zion; and we hesitate not to recommend it to the patronage of the people everywhere. * * *

2. We believe with the founder and fathers of this church, whose memory is too sacred to be forgotten, that the secret lodge system not only antagonizes the interests of the church of Jesus Christ, but possesses principles and requires oaths that are clearly in opposition to the plain teaching of the inspired Gospel; therefore, Resolved, That we will seek to perpetuate the time honored principles of our denomination, and to plant ourselves most firmly in opposition to any effort from any quarter to compromise with the lodge, or to lower, in the least degree, the standard of this church which has endured for more than a century, or during her history. Indeed, we are encouraged to hold more closely, if possible, these sacred principles on moral reform when we read the signs of the times from both church and state relative to the secret lodge system. We submit, that this church can scarcely afford to undo what she has been doing, and teaching others to do, during all her history, namely, to oppose evil whether single or organized.

3. We do most earnestly protest against the manner in which the Religious Telescope, the organ of an anti secret church, treated and reported the Congress of Christians, recently convened in the city of Chicago, which was held with the view to give impression of sentiment against the lodge power, to inspire a kindly spirit and to promote greater harmony of action on the part of all denominations in this country who are opposed to the lodge system.

—Bro. I. R. B. Arnold moved from Janesville to Beloit, Wis., last week. The great meetings he has been holding overflow the accommodations even of his big tent.

—Geneva College, Beaver Falls, Pa., opens the fall term August 31st. President George announces that the institution has secured Rev. Mr. Abrams, of Canada, to take the chair of natural sciences.

—Bro. M. L. Worcester, of Kingston, Ill., sent an urgent invitation to Secretary Stoddard to visit the Cherry Valley camp-meeting this week and visit Belvidere, with the expectation of occupying one of the pulpits on Sabbath. Bro. Stoddard accepted the call and will learn what time will be most convenient for the State convention.

—Bro. Conrad, colporteur of the Illinois State Association, reports that many have agreed to help at the State convention, and many delegates may be expected from the localities he has visited. His route has been southward from Belvidere through Syracuse, Sandwich, and Tonica to Hennepin, where he was last week attending a Sabbath-school convention.

—The Berea, Ky., Evangelist has resumed publication under the charge of Elder J. F. Browne, this time we hope to continue, growing better and stronger until its work is done, and the sectarianism it opposes is overcome by that Christian love which shall make all churches one even as are Christ and the Father. All who wish to support an earnest reform paper which labors especially to heal the divisions in the church will send for the Evangelist.

—Rev. I. A. Hart, who was for several years after the organization of the National Christian Association, its corresponding secretary, and assistant editor of the Cynosure from 1868 to 1872, died at his home in Wheaton at 2 o'clock Saturday morning. He had reached the age of eighty-five years, and leaves among the circle of mourning friends an amiable and devoted wife, three sons and one daughter. He was for many years a Presbyterian pastor, but was during the latter part of his life a member of the Congregational church. In his early manhood he was induced to join the Masonic lodge, under the pretext that his usefulness as a preacher would be enhanced. He discovered his mistake and withdrew from the order, and in the first years of the revival of Anti masonry contributed many able arguments to the discussion of secretism.

—Last Sabbath the College church at Wheaton enjoyed a visit from Bro. J. C. Rogers of Dakota, who stopped a few days in Chicago on his way to Akola, province of Berar, India, where he expects to join brethren Fuller and Palmer in the faith mission work, under the auspices of the Oberlin society of which Rev. George Clark is president. Bro. Rogers spoke upon some of the characteristics of the work in which he expects to engage and was followed by a brief, but thrilling address by Mrs. Prindle, superintendent of the Anchorage Mission for lost girls in this city. In the evening Mrs. Prindle addressed a large union meeting on the Social Purity work. She has been for ten years engaged in this good work in this city and in Buffalo, and is in close correspondence with Brother Gladwin, editor of the Purity Trumpet, Bombay, India, who is one of the most active workers for Christ against the lodge in India.

THE STATE CONVENTIONS.

WISCONSIN.

Bro. F. C. Ainsworth writes from Monroe, Wis., vouching to take the laboring-oar of local work if it is thought best to hold the convention in that city.

Rev. Isaiah Faris announces himself ready to follow, if President Wood and his associates in the State executive committee will lead off. Bros. Faris and Galloway can each be safely counted on for a speech. Will the executive committee make a note of these items and set the wheels in motion without delay.

ILLINOIS.

It is not positively settled as to the time of the State meeting at Belvidere, as the committee are arranging so as to secure Bro. Arnold and his tent, but it will probably be the first in the series, and held sometime in September. Look out for specific notice and arrange your plans to be present.

NEW YORK.

Rev. B. T. Roberts writes in reference to a State meeting in New York, "I favor such a convention. I will do my part through the paper to make it a success. I think our churches in the State will cooperate." Rev. N. Wardner and the Wesleyan brethren have not been heard from on the subject, but a favorable report is anticipated. W. B. Stoddard is in the State for a few days consulting with friends and gathering facts, and will give results soon. The state of feeling in the country was never so favorable to a large and enthusiastic gathering, if friends will take the initiative and push the work.

J. P. STODDARD.

THE MISSOURI STATE MEETING.

WHERE SHALL WE HOLD IT?

Brother Reformers of Missouri.—Bro. M. N. Butler and myself think our State convention should open within two days from the time the Iowa State meeting closes at College Springs, so that Bro. J. S. T. Milligan and others from Kansas, as well as from other States, may attend both meetings in one trip. As to the place, it should be central, and in some county in our State where they are to vote on local option soon after our State meeting closes. We are a class of sharpshooters who know just how to kill two dangerous birds with one stone—the stone named in Daniel 2: 34. While we have the multitude and are exposing the evils of the secret powers, it will take but a very short time to open the eyes of all classes as to the nature and influence of the rum power.

I hope some county in the State will beat ours. If so they must work. Many a long year we have been toiling at the front. On the 2d and 9th of this month our city and county voted that the saloon must go! Our city gave a majority of 177; our county a majority of 1873. To God be all the glory. Now, brethren in Missouri, you who have the county and the place for the meeting, write at once (each of you) who may think your place a good point for the State meeting. Write to Bro. J. P. Stoddard at the Cynosure office, and give direct the main reasons why you think your town or county is the best point for said meeting. I would just say, it should be on or near a railway, house or hall, with entertainment free, with the prospects of a good crowd.

R. SMITH, State Agent.

CAMP WORK IN NEW YORK.

SILVER LAKE, N. Y., Aug. 19th, '87.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—The saying, "He who will observe providences shall not want for providences to observe," has often proved itself true. The child of God who is consecrated to follow wherever his Captain may guide will often be led in a way that he knows not, but always in the right way. My coming to this place was as unexpected as it was sudden. Arriving in Columbus, Ohio, I found an excursion going to Niagara Falls. Knowing of the assembly at this place, having previously received a pressing invitation from the N. Y. State president, F. W. Capwell, to assist in circulating our literature at this gathering, I decided to avail myself of the opportunity and come. I feel confident since coming that the hand of the Lord was in it and that he had a work for me to do here.

Around me on every side I see the white tents and hear the happy voices of a grand army of men and women who have come to camp for a little and prepare themselves for the terrible battle that is coming on between the home and the saloon. There are said to be some two hundred tents and cottages connected with these grounds and many more in adjacent camps. The interest centering here has gradually increased from the first. As I see the enthusiasm of this godly people which seems to go from heart to heart as they are united in one grand purpose, I feel that our God is indeed marching on.

I have visited many of the tents, distributed literature, and conversed with those interested. This morning I found myself talking with Rev. Dr. Boole, popularly known as the Brooklyn "eyelone;" he is to be "let loose" this P. M., I am told. The doctor was somewhat conservative in his remarks. He decided rather to learn my objections to the orders than to give his own views, but stated during the conversation that he did not belong even to the Good Templars lodge.

State President Capwell has had a number of Miss Willard's letter to Mrs. President Blanchard and the reply printed for circulation to-morrow. (Both appeared in the Cynosure.)

I start back to Ohio to-night, and shall, D. V., spend Sabbath either at Conneaut or Kingsville working for a time in the northeastern part of the State. Friends in Ohio, let us again put on the whole armor, re-consecrate ourselves to the service of our Captain and do what he may require of us.

W. B. STODDARD.

THE HOME.

DIVINE COMPASSION.

Long since, a dream of heaven I had,
And still the vision haunts me oft;
I see the saints in white robes clad,
The martyrs with their palms aloft;
But hearing still in middle song
The ceaseless dissonance of wrong,
And shrinking, with hid faces, from the strain,
Of sad, beseeching eyes, full of remorse and pain.

The glad song falters to a wail,
The harping sinks to low lament;
Before the still uplifted veil
I see the crowned foreheads bent,
Making more sweet the heavenly air
With breathings of unselfish prayer;
And a Voice saith: "O Pity which is pain,
O Love that weeps, fill up my sufferings which remain!"

"Shall souls redeemed by me refuse
To share my sorrow in their turn?
Or, sin-forgiven, my gift abuse,
Or peace with selfish unconcern?
Has saintly ease no pitying care?
Has faith no work and love no prayer?
While sin remains and souls in darkness dwell,
Can heaven be heaven itself and look unmoved on hell?"

Then through the Gates of Pain, I dream,
A wind of heaven blows coolly in;
Fainter the awful discords seem;
The smoke of torment grows more thin,
Tears quench the burning soul, and thence Spring sweet, pale flowers of penitence;
And through the dreary realm of men's despair,
Star-crowned, an angel walks, and lo! God's hopes there!

Is it a dream? Is heaven so high,
That pity cannot breathe its air?
Its happy eyes forever dry?
Its holy lips without a prayer?
My God! my God! if I thither led
Be thy free grace unmerited,
No crown or palm be mine, but let me keep
A heart that still can feel, and eyes that still can weep.

—John Greenleaf Whittier.

A QUESTION FOR CHRISTIAN PARENTS.

BY MRS. H. GRATTAN GUINNESS.

Friends! are any of you withholding your best treasures from God? Are you deliberately keeping back a gift which, if laid on his altar, might do more to advance his work on earth than all the contributions you ever gave, or can give? Are you robbing God by refusing to render him in one most essential form the tribute that is his due? Christian fathers, Christian mothers, what are you doing with your Christian children? Have you given your sons to God, and to his work in the world? Have you devoted your daughters to Jesus and to his service? Ah, your hearts quail! Anything, you say, anything but that! We will double our contributions, treble them, if we can, but to make our own children missionaries, surely we are not called to that! Dear friends, I have only one answer: "God so loved the world, that he gave his Son." Oh, mark it! His Son, nothing less! No one less! His Son! Yes; he gave that only-begotten and well-beloved One that dwelt in his bosom from all eternity! And he gave him, not to be a missionary—ah, no!—but to be a murdered victim, to be sin for us, to be a curse. He gave him to shame and spitting, to blows and to blood, to crucifixion and to death. And that Son gave himself to all this, and delighted to do so for our sakes. And we—oh, shall we grudge him our sons and our daughters? Where is our gratitude, where our love? Do we know what devotedness means? How can we talk of the "higher Christian life," and be bringing up our converted children to live lives of ease and idleness, or to labor merely for their daily bread, to seek food and raiment, to live as if there were no heathen world perishing for lack of the bread from heaven?

I solemnly believe that one great cause of the low tone of the Christian life, over which the Church mourns so often, is the lack of missionary zeal, the non-cultivation of the missionary spirit in Christian families, and that the first symptom of a really "higher Christian life" will be a revival of this spirit. It has been so in the past. The revival of spiritual religion in our land in the last century was the birthday of missionary enterprise. Its growth has kept pace with the extension of such enterprise, and its increase, if such is to come, (and God grant it may), must be accompanied by a great increase of missionary efforts. In the nature of things this must be so. In the physical world we have first life, then food, thereby growth, and with growth exercise. But given life, food, growth, and no exercise, disease and decay must ensue. If the Christian Church would thrive, she must have exercise, and her Christ-appointed exercise is the evangelization of the world. The Church ought to be one great missionary society, and each of her children, directly or indirectly, a missionary.

But what is the fact? A few individuals take a real interest in this great work. They influence others to help; but the mass of believers remain comparatively inert. Have we not thousands and tens of thousands of Christian families, no one of which ever contributed one single laborer to the heathen field? Have we not parents who have reared six, eight, or it may be ten sons and daughters, and seen them by grace converted to God, and who yet never trained, or attempted to train, one of them for a missionary to the heathen? Is it not a standing reproach to our Christianity that so few, so very few, gentlemen and ladies of independent means, ever consecrate either themselves or their families to the service of Christ among the heathen?

O friends, lay the facts of the case to heart, I do entreat you! On the one hand, the world lying in darkness, and heathendom especially in gross darkness, contrary to the express will of Christ; on the other hand, Christian parents training up their families to anything, to everything, save and except the one work commanded by Christ, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature." What a mournful spectacle for the angels to weep over! And what is the result? Not only that the heathen perish, but, O Christian parents! you and your children, those very children whom ye would fain spare suffering, suffer most materially from this very thing.

Father, what makes your heart heavy this day? "Ah," you sigh, "our precious boy, whom we thought to be converted years ago, has gone right into the world; we see no sign of grace in him now. We pray, and weep, and hope against hope, but we seem to have no influence over him." Ah, father, whose fault is that? What did you do with your boy when full of his first love? You sent him to a public school, perhaps; you sought great things for him in this life; you exposed him to temptation for the sake of mammon, it may be; you led him to seek first this world and its interests, instead of the kingdom of God and his righteousness; you never attempted to use your mighty parental influence, to lead the ardent youth to consecrate his life to preaching Christ to the perishing heathen. You never gave him a Christian object worthy and likely to fill his heart, and mould his life, and engage his affections, and ennoble his aspirations, and extend his views out into eternity. Your son might have been a Brainerd or a Livingstone, had you acted otherwise; but he is—well, you know what he is!

And you, mother, what saddens your eye, and sinks your heart? Your daughters, have they turned out as you could desire? "Alas! no," you sigh; one of them is worldly, though perhaps saved; another is a confirmed invalid; another who is a decided Christian, has gone over to the High Church, or perhaps even entered a Romish convent. You are disappointed in them, and as a Christian you ought to be. Ah, mother, whose fault is it? Those girls were Christians when young; they had talents, affections, health, leisure, ardour, spirits, zeal, knowledge of the truth, and a good education. What missionaries they would have made!

Had their compassion been drawn out, the self-sacrifice, natural to every true disciple, called into play; had they been prepared for and early introduced to the mission-field, what blessed helpers in the Gospel they might have been! How many an Indian Zenana they might have made happy and holy! How many a Japanese lady they might have taught to read the Word of Life! How many a miserable Chinese mother might they have led into peace and joy in believing! What glorious results they might have secured for eternity! How every remembrance of each one might cause you to thank your God for the privilege of having been permitted to bear and rear such instruments for his glory! But you could not spare them; you could not expose them to hardships and suffering. It would never do to send your delicately-reared girls among the degraded and ignorant heathen! and so they were doomed to the very uninteresting life of a Christian woman, with little or nothing to do!

You would have been glad they should have served the Lord at home, you say? Yes; but they did not find occasional "amateur" work of this kind enough to engage heart and mind. Others were doing it abundantly. No important responsibility was laid on them to call out their energies, develop their abilities and exercise their spiritual graces. They had not the stimulus of the urgent needs of others; they began, perhaps, to serve the Lord with one hand daintily; but when difficulties arose, or novelty wore off, they gave it up, and no one was much the worse. That sort of work does not avail to save the young and energetic from worldliness, selfishness, or disgust with life. It is not a vocation; it is not a life. It is all very well for those who have distinct and important secular duties devolving on them so serve the Lord by the way as it were, and fill up their odd moments of leisure by doing what they can. But your girls did not marry, they had not the natural and absorbing avocations of wife and mother; they were spared the sufferings, and cares, and self-denial, and responsibility involved in bringing up children; they had no claims of business; their time was their own: they wanted a life-work, hard, high, holy life-work. Oh, had you laid before them the claims of the heathen, advised and assisted them to become missionaries, how differently your daughters might have turned out!

The young mind must have interests; the young heart must have objects on which to spend its ardour and its affections. Human nature must have difficulties with which to cope, hardships to endure, battles to fight, obstacles to overcome. What are cricket, and croquet, and chess, and all games of skill, but an artificial creation of these? Life, if natural and well-spent, is full of these—life without them is rapid and vain.—The Missionary Review.

CHAPTER VI.

[Joe Simms's room. Enter Green.]

G. G.—"Halloo, Simms! Are you busy? I have got something to show you. Here is the answer to our note—came in a letter to Hal. It is very short and very proper—written evidently under the maternal eye. But it is an answer, nevertheless, and that is all I desired. Gay, is it not? But what an escape! Suppose I had gotten myself into a correspondence with that miserable note, what should I have done? I can 'maintain good works for necessary uses,' for a little while, but to write a sermon every week would have been fatal."

J. S.—"Where did you get that quotation?"

G. G.—"From the old man's prayers, I reckon,—or may be from Sunday-school. It seems to have been made for me, so you see I am fulfilling the Scripture while I please myself. Two birds with one stone, you see."

J. S.—"I did not know as you had been brought up in a Christian family. I thought I was the only one in our Club that was going against his conscience and his history; against his mother's prayers and teachings, and his own sense of right. So you, too, have been strictly brought up!"

G. G.—"Yes, indeed! 'After the most straightest sect of our religion, I was brought up' a Presbyterian; and I suppose about twenty years hence I shall be a deacon; it runs in our family. But just now, my friend, I am doing a little sowing on my own account,—oats, you know—wild oats, may be, but whose business is it? When I get old Glenn's money I will found a hospital or something to make up."

J. S.—"Sowing, eh! Well, Green, do you ever think what kind of a harvest you will gather from your sowing?"

G. G.—"What is the use of thinking, when it is not pleasant business? I go in for a good time and am willing to take my chances. Besides, why did our Creator make us with such natures, if he did not design we should enjoy what they crave?"

J. S.—"What did he give us reason for, if not to control these natures? And now, Green, I think you and I will have to take different paths. You have done me good, for you have opened my eyes to see where I am drifting. From this moment I take a new path, and no 'shilly-shallying.' You have trusted me, and I have not betrayed you; but I can do no more. I wish you would go with me; otherwise our paths diverge."

(From that night the intimacy gave way; and although they were always friendly, their aims and pleasures were entirely of a different nature; and their ways: one up, and the other down.)

CHAPTER VII.

[July, A. D., 184—, Glenn Mansion, Glennville.]

A notable wedding ceremony has taken place at St. Mark's church. There is a grand reception; house and grounds are brilliantly illuminated for the occasion. The bridal party: George Green and Susie Glenn, attended by Harry Glenn and his blooming bride Mollie Noble, married at W—— on Commencement day; also by a grave young lawyer whom we recognize as Joe Simms, accompanied by a lady whom we do not know. During the reception the place was thronged with the "elite" of town and country, and every thing passed off admirably. The bridal party take their departure at midnight, expecting to visit various places of interest together, when each would settle down to the experiences of their new lives.

After five years of managing and hypocrisy George Green had accomplished his purpose, and this was the first meeting of his class since the year that he graduated; and during the interval each had chosen his calling, and fitted himself for the same, according to his opportunities and disposition.

At Buffalo they separated, each going their own way to put in practice the theories which they had adopted, and the knowledge which they had acquired. George Green (after a weary journey to his bride, who had begun to see him a little as he was), arrived at his father's house, and Susie was introduced to her future home and surroundings. A kind, gentlemanly woman called her daughter, and a soft voice called her sister; while the proud father could scarce restrain his gladness that his son had made such a "good match." But weary and disappointed, the young bride asked to be shown to her room. Her husband had worn out his disguise. At parting her father had placed in her hand a sum sufficient for personal expenses to have lasted a year. George had borrowed it, on the ground that some alumni subscription had absorbed what he had brought from home. Poor Susie Glenn! She now sees her lover a little as her mother saw him from the first; and when she found herself alone she burst into an agony of weeping. And so began the weary years.

Harry Glenn returned to Glennville, where his mother welcomed her new daughter so cordially that from the first they were placed upon the most agreeable footing; but while the father and mother cordially invited them to live at home with them, Harry preferred to set up a modest establishment of his own, saying that the quiet of his mother's life must not be disturbed by the night-bell of an ambitious young doctor; and besides, he said he wished to make his own way as his father had made his. And so the matter was settled.

Joseph Simms settled in a western city where he opened his office, and gradually, by faithful attention to his business, secured a most lucrative practice; and by his integrity and diligence in every good work, attained to eminent social distinction.

HOW HE LEARNED TO GIVE.

The late William Dodge, of New York, was one of the most liberal benefactors of the present generation, and his Christian benevolence amounted to hundreds of thousands of dollars. The Rev. T. Edwards tells how he learned to give in his youth in the following:

"Henry Obookiah had come from the Sandwich Islands to this country, and was placed at Cornwall in school there to be educated for the ministry, that he might go back as a minister of the Gospel to his native land—a plan which was frustrated by his death in 1818, though the interest his career had awakened led to the establishment of the Sandwich Island mission.

"Young Dodge, then quite a lad, was at the same school in Cornwall, and having been prayerfully trained by a faithful Christian mother was deeply interested in the story of Obookiah and his plans for doing good, and anxious to do something to aid them. Having, like most schoolboys of those days, but limited means, he scarcely knew how to carry out his wishes and intentions, but finally proposed to one or two of his associates that they should take their little pocket money and buy potatoes and plant them, and in the fall sell the crop, and give the proceeds for the benefit of Obookiah or the mission.

"They did this. 'And,' said Mr. Dodge, as in later years he told the story, 'from that day it seemed as if everything I touched prospered.' Beginning at this early day, he all his lifetime recognized his stewardship to God, and endeavored to be faithful to it. And all his lifetime he was, singularly prospered; and though his benefactions were numerous and most liberal, the bestowments of providence were larger still, and his life gave evidence that he was one of the number to whom at the last great day it shall be said, 'Well done, thou good and faithful servant; thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things; enter thou into the joy of thy Lord.'"—Ec.

If it takes a boy twenty-five minutes to cut three sticks of wood to get supper by, how long will it take him next morning to walk three miles to meet a circus coming to town?

TEMPERANCE.

All the American missions in Burmah have incorporated total abstinence in their work.

Thirteen cities and 275 towns and villages of Massachusetts are under prohibition this year.

A peculiar liquor law is in force in Rockdale county, Georgia. Only one person in the county is allowed to sell liquor. He is appointed by the grand jury to sell for medicinal purposes, and cannot keep more than ten gallons of spirits at one time.

Returns to the Texas press, up to Saturday night, on the prohibition vote, report an anti-majority in 124 out of 156 counties of 58,505. Up to that time twenty-nine counties showed prohibition majorities ranging from 1 vote in Greer to 1,101 in Fannin county.

Through the investigations of the Boston Board of Health some of the tonics, bitters, and temperance drinks which are offered in the drug stores as "purely vegetable extracts, stimulating but not intoxicating," are found to contain from 20 to 40 per cent of alcohol.

At the State election in Kentucky the Prohibitionists elected five straight out Prohibition party men to the Legislature. The great whisky favorite, Phil. W. Thompson, was defeated by a Prohibitionist. The vote was a great gain. Local option carried generally, and Judge Fox, Prohibition candidate for Governor, received about 15,000 votes.

A common, low saloon, with its vile decoctions and obscene pictures and burnt-out old toppers, is a far less dangerous object lesson than the genteel and fashionable wine-house. Let us have none of it under any pretext whatever. Human we ought to be relieved if possible. "Pure wine," as it is called, leads to everything impure—gin, rum, brandy, whisky, drunkenness, and death.—Christian Advocate.

Mayor Fosdick, of Fitchburg, Mass., after a trial of one year of no license in that city, is able to furnish the following statistics: Arrests for drunkenness decreased 45 per cent; occupants of jail lessened 33 per cent; expenses for department of the poor reduced from $16,000 to $13,000; applications for aid reduced from 401 to 295; arrests for violations of the liquor law, 2, under license; under no license, 27.

Here's richness! When the big anti-Prohibition meeting was held the other day in Fort Worth, Texas, in order to guard against disgraceful scenes the sale of liquor on the grounds was prohibited. And yet the orators blowed about personal liberty as though they had not just dealt it this fatal stab. When even liquor dealers and their friends have serious work in hand, they find they must resort to prohibition.—N. Y. Voice.

The Boston Board of Health, according to the Traveler of that city, on the complaint of sundry residents of the vicinity, has notified the proprietors of a well-known boot and shoe manufactory at the corner of Tremont and Castle streets that he must stop burning "leather scraps," the odor of which his neighbors do not enjoy. The "personal liberty" of the shoe manufacturer in the matter of burning even upon his own premises his "leather scraps," ends where the fresh air rights of his neighbors begin. Thus ought it to be, from kindred considerations with the whisky saloon nuisances.

LIQUOR STATISTICS.

The chief of the Bureau of Statistics, in his recent quarterly report, furnishes the following among other facts respecting the use of alcoholic liquors in the country:—

In round numbers the consumption of distilled spirits, domestic and imported, in this country, is shown to have increased from 43,000,000 gallons in 1840 to 72,000,000 in 1886; of wine, from 4,800,000 gallons to 22,000,000; and of malt liquors, from 23,000,000 to 642,000,000. The consumption per capita during the same period decreased as regards distilled spirits from about 2½ gallons to about 1½ gallons; while it increased, as regards wines, from .29 to .38 gallons, and of malt liquors, from less than 1½ to more than 11 gallons.

An elaborate statement is given, made by F. N. Barrett, editor of the New York Grocer, by request of the chief of the Bureau, which sets forth, among other things, that the present average expenditure in this country per annum for malt and spirituous liquors and beer at retail is $700,000,000. The drinking population is estimated to be (in 1886) 14,925,417, making the average expenditure per capita $45.90.

Mr. Barrett says the wholesale cost of the liquor for which the retailers receive $700,000,000 is not more than $300,000,000. He makes a brief calculation of the cost of liquors as compared with that of food, clothing, and shelter,—reaching the conclusion that the American people expend from $12 to $17 for the "necessaries" named, to every dollar paid out for liquor.

James A. Webb, of New York, furnishes a statement to the effect that only 10 per cent of distilled spirits consumed by this country is used for medicine and manufacturing purposes, 90 per cent being used as a beverage.

PROHIBITION IN ENGLAND.

There are six vacant seats in Parliament to be filled during the next few days. Two—Spalding and Coventry—are being fiercely contested, and the others are Hornsey, St. Ives, Basingstoke, and North Paddington. In no one of these constituencies, it would seem, will the drink question be given any prominence. Yes, in one, although it happens that the contest after all may only resolve upon the Irish question, for a requisition has been signed by a number of electors at Coventry inviting Mr. Axel Gustafson to stand in the prohibition interest. It is highly improbable that Mr. Gustafson ever contemplated himself seeking a place in Parliament. But all who know him and are aware of his absolutely unselfish devotion to the cause of prohibition—into which he has thrown all he is and all he has—may be assured that if necessary he will not hesitate to strike a blow at the polling booth. The thing to be noted, however, is that the nucleus of a Prohibition party already exists, by some mysterious law of the natural cohesion of moral forces, in the country even before its inception has gained adequate publicity. Men, it is now seen, are willing and ready to throw over the political parties who divide the spoils of office. And, significantly enough—though very naturally and logically—it is to Axel Gustafson that the new party immediately turns. Who knows what may happen before another general election?—London Temperance World.

THE LIQUOR TRADE IN AFRICA.

A painfully interesting report is made of an investigation conducted under the direction of ten missionary societies, into the extent of the liquor trade in Africa. These figures are given as the result of the inquiry into the business of a year. There was exported of spirits by Great Britain, 1884, 602,328 gallons; Germany, 1884, 7,136,263 gallons; United States, 1884, 921,412 gallons; Portugal, 1882, 91,524 gallons. Total, 8,751,527 gallons, valued at nearly $4,500,000. If these figures represented the consumption of alcoholic drinks, it would be a sad omen for that continent. The "Dark Continent" would be enveloped in denser darkness. "But the craving created for the drinking of spirits," says the London Freeman, "leads to demand, which again creates an increased supply of spirits produced in Africa. As in China the opium trade has led to the cultivation of the poppy, so, on the 'Dark Continent,' the traffic in strong drink necessarily leads to the native manufacture of intoxicants. The result is that drunkenness is spreading, and, added to cannibalism and polygamy, and the other vices of heathenism, the last state of the savage is, consequently, worse than the first. A striking illustration of this is seen in the appeal of the Mohammedan Emir Malike of Nupe to Bishop Crowther. He says of barassa, rum or gin, 'It has ruined our country; it has ruined our people very much; it has made our people become mad. I have a law that no one dares to buy or sell it; and any one who is found selling it, his house is to be eaten up (plundered); any one found drunk will be killed.' This is a stringent liquor law. It is pitiful to find this native chief saying, 'We all beg that he (the Bishop) should beg the great priests (the Committee of the C. M. S.) that they should beg the English Queen to prevent bringing barassa into this land.'"—Watchman.

The Voice says that in a meeting of students at Troy Polytechnic Institute to arrange for a coming anniversary, considerable surprise was created by a motion made by the son of Major-General O. O. Howard, that those who should drink liquor must pay for what they drink and not have it taken out of the general tax. This was contrary to all precedent, but was carried by a vote of four to one. The same course was adopted at the recent reunion of Cornell alumni in New York City, and one who was present remarked that the amount of liquor was, as a result, most conspicuously less than at previous reunions. The Ohio Society, lately formed in the same city, also determined that at its inaugural banquet, whatever liquor was drunk should be paid for by those drinking. The tide is rising in social as well as political circles.

LETTER FROM BAVARIA.

EXCITEMENT AT CITY FIRES.

Since the last time I wrote there has been a great event in Munich, and nearly as much excitement as the Bavarians are capable of enduring. We have had a fire! The first of which I have known since I came here. It was on the finest street in the city, Ludwig Strasse, and in a boarding school for young ladies and children. Now I know how they manage fires over here. It is such an interesting process that I must try to describe it. In the first place there is, as far as I can learn, no such thing as a fire escape in the whole city. My German teacher says they talked of having one on the new theater, but she thinks they did not think it "worth while." I believe I wrote once in the winter how everything here is divided into classes. Now I find that the division goes further than I had supposed. The fires are signalled as "first" and "second" class; that is, the signal is given that the fire is "small" or "large." If it is "small" they bring out the second-class engines, the second-class ladders (one man, perhaps two), and jog at a funeral pace through the longest streets to be found. I suppose if the fire is "very large" they may go quite quickly; but I cannot say surely, for no one I know has ever seen them get out of their usual rate of speed.

The way the signal is given is as awkward as the rest. At certain places are sign-boards with the inscription, "Fire-signal Station." If the person discovering the fire is so fortunate as to know where a station is he goes there, looks up the man having charge, who may be most anywhere else—very likely in a café near by; this second person notifies someone else, who blows, or has blown, a horn in the belfry of St. Peter's church, after which, if it is night-time, the bells are rung.

You can imagine it will be some time after a fire is discovered before the fire company will be there. This time it was three-quarters of an hour after people on the street saw the smoke before any help came. Meanwhile several persons sprang out of the third-story windows and four children with a servant girl sat in a fourth-story window entirely surrounded by fire. When the engines at last did come, as a "small fire" had been signalled, they had only a ladder long enough to reach a first-story window, though every child in Munich knows Ludwig Strasse has nothing else than high buildings in its whole length. Of course there was no help but to go back for the other ladders and engines, the "first-class" ones. Before they came the children and the girls would have burned to death but for a young man who saved them by risking his own life. That is a Munich fire company! Several Germans tell me that the Munich "Feuer-wurks" are celebrated. They will not believe it if we tell them our fire companies are better. In fact, they will not believe anything true about America. Whatever ridiculous story they hear that is untrue, they will believe without question, as a general thing.

A Chicago gentleman who was here had occasion to mention that an acquaintance of his used alcohol with which to clean his hands, after some chemical experiment, I suppose. The ladies interrupted to ask why the gentleman used alcohol instead of water. Our Chicago neighbor put on a long face and said solemnly, "Oh, you know Chicago is a very dirty city, and this man did not live so near the lake as I did." And these people actually appeared to believe that in Chicago water is so scarce that it is necessary to use alcohol in its stead. There is a compliment for Chicago! Very likely that is the way Bavarians get so many absurd ideas about us. Some one says a thing in joke and they take it in earnest. About other things they are not stupid. It is only because they are taught all their lives Germany, Germany, Germany, and nothing else.

We three Americans went to a kind of fair which is held here in May, called the "Dult." It is a real rag-fair. There is little new to be bought, but the greatest collection imaginable of old clothes, old crockery, old furniture, and old books. The artists go there to find old draperies for their studios and costumes. I bought part of a white satin dress and a Spanish jacket to use for models some time. The old woman who sold them was kind enough to tell me I could wear them to a ball next winter.

—Messiah Mesropian, a Turkish student, recently graduated from the Crozer Theological Seminary at Chester, Pa., has recently been ordained to preach in his own land. He is a Baptist. He came to this country without any money, but has been aided by Baptists from all parts of Pennsylvania. Not only his education, but his journey home and his outfit for his work in the ministry there, has been provided for by his Baptist brethren here.

LETTER FROM MISSIONARIES IN GREECE.

ANDROS, Greece, Via Syra, July 16, 1887.

DEAR BROTHER K.—We did not write to you for a long time in regard to the religious interests of this place. It is almost six months since we sold several copies of the Bible (Old and New Testament combined) and the people begin to read and to discuss things that they never read or heard of before. There is a teacher who teaches Ancient Greek, who came here this year. In time past, he heard in Athens the word of God from Rev. M. Kalapothakes and Rev. D. Z. Sakellarios. Before he came here, he was teaching in Gavrio about five miles away. It is a year and a half since he bought a Bible from us. About a year ago he came with another teacher to discuss about the Sabbath and the wrong things that are in the Bible; but in all things I answered them and so they got ashamed. He seems quite different now and confessed last Sabbath that he believes as we do.

Four months ago he took the liberty from the priest to preach in the church; but he was severe in some things and they stopped him before he was through. There has been some complaint from the parents that he, in the school, speaks against the Greek pictures in the church and against the fasts as they observe them. For a long time we have talked about his coming here to study the Bible together, but only last Sunday he came. He said that if he had any other way to get a living, he would come out now from the Greek church and attack it, but his family consists of seven persons and he has no property or means to support his family.

Also there is a family with whom we have been friends ever since we came to Andros; but this last year they are living very near us and send their children to the schools here, and thus we see a great deal of each other; they have become very dear friends and we have begun to talk with them a great deal in regard to religious matters. The wife of the man reads. A long time ago she bought a Bible of us and she reads a great deal from it. We have great hopes of their conversion for they have so much faith in us that they come to ask our advice in everything they do. They see the difference between a Christian and the thieves and liars. The woman does not want her children to play with the children of the town; but she begged of us to let her children come and play with our children. They feel very sorry that we leave now for a visit to America; but we see that this is the best time to leave this place. Before this time it would not have done and after two or three years it would not do. The people are afraid as yet, and sometimes they come to us and sometimes they do not. We want to put our children in the Greek schools, and if we put them in for a time and then take them out, we will wrong them.

The brother of the man about whom we have been speaking is a monk. He was for twelve years the head man of the monastery; but he lost his health and now he has retired and is under medical treatment. He has lately been with his brother near us and I have had to visit him often and to advise him in regard to his diet and health. Thus he came to our house and we spent the whole evening in the discussion of religious matters, for he wanted to know all the things that we believe. We had a very hard talk on the third and fourth chapters of 1 Tim. The third chapter about the bishop and deacon, that they ought to be married and why the Greek church does not allow them to be married. There he mixed the things very badly. In the fourth chapter he argued about the fasts and how different they are from the Greek fasts. We hope and pray that God will open the eyes of this nation, and yet infidelity has got such a hold that it is a terrible task. We ask you to pray for this nation and for us. Yours with Christian love,

A. D. ZARAPHONITHES.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—Dr. George F. Pentecost is now preaching at Hope church, Springfield, Mass. In the fall he will again begin his evangelistic labors.

—The General Synod of American Lutherans has condemned the "International Sabbath-School Lessons" because they do not recognize the church festivals of that denomination.

—Mr. George W. Cable, the writer on Southern topics, who has been so successful a teacher of Bible studies at Northampton, is now to conduct Dr. Meredith's Saturday afternoon class in Tremont Temple, Boston.

—Sixty-five students, including three ladies, are attending the Summer Hebrew School at the Episcopal Divinity School, Fiftieth and Woodland avenue, West Philadelphia. The total attendance is larger than ever before. In addition to the Hebrew, there is a class of seven in Assyrian and a class in Aramaic.

—Dr. Justin D. Fulton's success in his anti-Catholic mission has been so great during his trip through California that a number of Baptists talk of opening the Metropolitan Temple at Los Angeles, and extending a call to him to preach there permanently.

—Bishop Howe of South Carolina states that the attitude of so many of the white laymen of the diocese with reference to the negro and the Church is creating the most serious breach in the ecclesiastical history of that State.

—Since 1852 seventy-five Sandwich Islanders have gone as foreign missionaries.

—At St. James Episcopal church, Chicago, Ill., an entirely silent service was recently conducted. It was the baptism of the child of two deaf mutes, and the sermon was preached in the sign language by a clergyman who was a deaf mute.

—A German paper states that "at Vienna last year no less than three hundred and sixty-three Jews became Christians," and another paper tells us that "at no period since the first century have conversions from Judaism to Christianity been so frequent as they are at the present."

—Rev. E. Carlson, pastor of the large Swedish Lutheran church of Andover, Ill., and president of the Augustana Synod, has removed to Rock Island and become president of the Board of Directors and General Manager of Augustana College and Theological Seminary.

—Rev. F. M. Foster, of Bellefontaine, Ohio, will accept a call from the Third Reformed Presbyterian church, of New York city, whose former pastor, Rev. Davis Gregg, is now preaching in the Congregational pulpit left vacant by Dr. Withrow when he came to Chicago about a year since.

—Rev. W. W. McMillan, of Olathe, Kansas, lately assisted in the formation of a new Covenant church of twenty-six members at Quinta, Kansas.

—There are altogether in China 800 missionaries, including missionaries' wives, and 25,000 Christians. Small comparative results, yet.

—The Turkish Government officials have now put the seal of the Sultan on thirty-two editions of the Arabic Scriptures, and parts of Scriptures, thus giving the sanction of the Imperial Caliph of Islam for the free circulation of the Word of God.

—The Bible stand at the Crystal Palace was opened on July 9th, 1862. From that date to December 31st, 1886, twenty million, nine hundred and fifty-nine thousand, two hundred and fifty-three separate Gospels, including a large number of Bibles and Testaments, Scripture cards and leaflets have been circulated in thirty-six languages.

—The money given by the women of the Presbyterian Church in the United States during the past sixteen years is $2,150,000—representing the entire support of more than two hundred women missionaries, two hundred native Bible readers, and more than one hundred and fifty schools.

—The American Board has received information concerning the arrest of its missionary in Ponape, Micronesia, Mr. Doane. It appears that Mr. Doane has been under arrest three months. He was kept sometime on board a Spanish man-of-war and then taken to Manila. The Government in Washington is in correspondence with the U. S. Consul at Manila in regard to the case. It is thought Mr. Doane's arrest was on account of interference with the liquor trade. Mr. Doane has been a missionary in Ponape since 1854.

LITERATURE.

The current number of the Cosmopolitan is happily arranged and handsomely illustrated to meet the conception of a popular magazine. The portrait of Charles Sumner copied from a crayon portrait by W. W. Story and attractive sketch of the great Senator by Arnold B. Johnson, a former secretary, add much to the number. The recollections cover such features of Sumner's life as incidents of his great physical strength, of which he himself hardly seemed to be aware. His knowledge of languages, habits of study, admirable taste in selecting and arranging numerous articles of historic and artistic value, and great kindness of heart,—all are happily described and illustrated. George H. Fitch writes of the "Millionaires of the Pacific Coast." Portraits of the railway and bonanza kings and some of their million-dollar residences on the summit of the first hill on California Street, San Francisco, are well drawn. Gail Hamilton writes on the "Domestic Money Question." "Pilgrims and Shrines in Canada," by J. McDonald Oxley, a Prohibitionist of Ottawa, is also happily illustrated.

The current number of the Prairie Farmer is a strawberry number, and is full of good things and everybody's experience in the cultivation of this popular fruit.

The American Bee Journal, Medina, Ohio, not only is a valuable assistant to bee-keepers, but to house-keepers also. The examination of any number will convince any reader of its practical worth.

The Swiss Cross has a very attractive August number, making scientific study popular among students and young people. President Winchell of Ann Arbor writes of Geology as a study for girls, and finely illustrated articles are "The New Palace at Seoul," Korea, "Composite portraits of Washington," "An Arizona Natural Bridge," "The People of Central Africa."

In Words and Weapons Dr. Pentecost tells of a recent trip to a Chautauqua Assembly at Crete, Nebraska, and has very suggestive and interesting notes of the journey. He especially commends the large families of children which he observed in the West and sees in them hope for America against foreign anarchists and saloonists. Dr. Pierson writes of William Wilberforce.

LODGE NOTES.

Masonry was introduced into Sweden from England in 1736, and was from the first under government protection. After the coronation of the Duke of Sundermannland as Charles XIII. in 1780, he was elected grand master, and retained the office until 1811, when he was succeeded by the crown prince, Charles John. The "Order of Charles XIII." was instituted in 1811, as an Order of Knighthood, and has become the highest degree of Masonry in Sweden, and as the King is the master of that order, he is consequently the Grand Master of Masons in the kingdom.

A strike among the Milwaukee brewers is said to be impending. The coopers claim the brewing firms have been purchasing kegs made by non-union men, and the employees will show their allegiance to union principles by striking.

The sixth annual encampment of the National Association of Sons of Veterans met last week at Des Moines, Iowa, with twenty-five States represented and about 800 delegates present. The order now reports a membership of 32,804. The meeting passed a resolution asking Congress to pass the dependent-pension bill prepared by the Grand Army of the Republic.

During the year ending March 31, 1887, various Grand Army departments of the country have expended $253,960 in relieving distress among 26,606 ex-soldiers or their dependents.

The Great Council of the United States, Improved Order of Red Men, will convene at Wilmington, Delaware, on the 13th Sun of the Corn Moon. Ordinary pale faces understand this to be September 13.

The schooner Maumee Valley was unable to leave the Chicago harbor the other day. She was ready to go, but during the afternoon her non-union crew was driven away from the vessel by a crowd of union sailors, and one of the men was beaten until he couldn't stand. This was the second assault by union sailors within two days.

There are now over 77,000 members of the Royal Arcanum and 1,050 Councils. One assessment yields nearly $150,000.

A STATE BAZAAR.

One of the novel and most interesting features of the Inter-State Exposition at Chicago this year will be the "Exhibit" and "Bazaar" held under the auspices of the Woman Suffrage Association of the State. All persons interested in the great work of securing to the women of the State their constitutional rights are earnestly requested to contribute to this work. Any useful, artistic or fancy articles may be forwarded to Mrs. Rosa Miller Avery, No. 39 Bryan Place, Chicago. The exhibition of woman's work will be under the supervision of a Central Committee, whose head-quarters are at the office of Catherine V. Waite, 96 Ashland Block, corner Clark and Randolph Sts., Chicago, Ill.

THE RESORTS OF COLORADO.

Colorado has become famous for its marvelous gold and silver production, for its picturesque scenery, and its delightful climate. Its mining towns and camps, its massive mountains, with their beautiful green-verdured valleys, lofty snow-capped peaks and awe-inspiring canyons, together with its hot and cold mineral springs and baths, and its healthful climate are attracting, in greater numbers each year, tourists, invalids, pleasure and business seekers from all parts of the world.

The journey from Chicago, Peoria, or St. Louis and other Chicago, Burlington and Quincy R. R. stations to Denver (the great distributing point for Colorado), if made over the Burlington Route, C. B. & Q. R. R., will be as pleasant and gratifying as it is possible for a railroad trip to be. At all principal ticket offices will be found on sale, during the tourist season, round-trip tickets via this popular route at low rates to Denver, Colorado Springs and Pueblo, Colorado. When ready to start call on your nearest ticket agent, or address Paul Morton, General Passenger and Ticket Agent C. B. & Q. R. R., Chicago, Ill.

OF

BY J. AUGUSTUS COLE, OF SHANGHAI,
WEST AFRICA.

Bishop Flickinger of the U. B. church says that, "This volume will well repay a careful reading not only for its discussion and exposition of these societies, but because it gives much valuable information respecting other institutions of that great continent."

J. Augustus Cole, the author of this pamphlet is a native of Western Africa, and is of pure negro blood. He has given much time and care to the investigation of the secret societies and heathen customs of Western Africa. He joined several of the secret orders for the purpose of obtaining full and correct information regarding their nature and operation. His culture and superior powers of observation render what he has written most complete and reliable.

ANTI-LODGE LYRICS.

Sing the Reform

Into the Hearts of the People

One of the most popular books against lodgery is the latest compilation of

George W. Clark,

The Minstrel of Reform.

A forty-page book of soul-stirring, conscience-awakening songs, appropriate for lectures, conventions and the home circle. What can add more to the interest of a meeting than a song well sung? What means will more quickly overthrow the power of the secret lodges than to sing the truth into the popular conscience?

Get this little work and use it for God and home and country. Forty pages.

The Danger—The Laborer's Grievance—The Laborer's foe—The Laborer's Fallacy—The Laborer's Hope—Mind and Muscle—Co-Laborers.

TIMELY TALKS ON AN IMPORTANT SUBJECT.

The Papers Say of this Book:

"It is well to remind the world of the greatness of human brotherhood, but how to make the 'more general application of it?' 'Aye, there's the rub!' Our author contributes his mite in that direction, and his voice and reasoning will reach some ears and perhaps touch some understandings and move some selfish hearts that are buttoned up very closely and held around by over much respectability and comfortable propriety."—Chicago Tribune.

"The writer does his work in a way remarkable alike for its directness, its common sense, its impartiality, its lucidity and its force. He has no theories to support; he deals with facts as he finds them; he fortifies his assertions by arrays of demonstrative statistics. The work is among the best of the kind if it is not the best that we have seen. While it is scarcely possible for it to be put in the hands of all our wage-workers, we wish it could be read by every one of them."—Chicago Interior.

The Facts Stated

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Gaudin's gun jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freeseau, to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subjected his wife to the loss of her husband, but attached his affidavit to it.
In closing his letter he writes: I know look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a consciousness of having been governed through the "Anti-Masonic excitement" by a sincere desire, first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influence of "secret societies."
The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. (Chicago National Journal Association.) Single copy, 5 cents.

FARM NOTES.

SHALL OUR AGRICULTURAL FAIRS EDUCATE THE PEOPLE UP OR DOWN.

This is a grave question for our farmers to consider. Agricultural fairs are the outgrowth of the desire among them to secure the very best results possible from their labors, not only for themselves in the way of economizing time and strength, and for profit, but for the general improvement of the country at large, and the advancement of its interests. They expect to gain a knowledge of improvements in machinery at the State and county fairs. Here is the place to display their triumphs of the year in their own fields, and witness the results of their neighbor's successes in their fields. It is the tilling ground where a healthy emulation exists among those who are the bone and sinew of the land, as well as its actual rulers, constituting nearly four-fifths of its voting population. So long as these fairs carry out their original plan, they are of immense benefit to the country. They are a meeting place for men who are full of care and toil during the year. The interchange of ideas, and the friendly intercourse indulged in, are an inspiration to minds that would otherwise grow rusty, and give a new impetus to efforts for further successes. The influence of these gatherings can hardly be overestimated. To men, women and children, the fair, and what was seen and heard there, furnishes food for thought, and a topic of conversation for months. How necessary, then, that the standard of influences at these places should be of the highest order, and that all the action of the management should be for the advancement of the best interests of those whom the fair was intended to profit. What care should be taken that everything tending to the health, comfort and happiness of the people should be provided in abundance; and all things that injure health, impair comfort and destroy happiness should be rigorously excluded. What generous encouragement in the way of prize money should be given for everything that will add to the useful knowledge the people have come here to gain. What stringent laws for the protection of the people at these annual holiday gatherings should be enacted by the State, and enforced by the management against everything that will mar the pleasure and the usefulness of the occasion.

How perfect should all the environments be, that all the people might go home with minds refreshed with new ideas and useful knowledge, and hearts filled with pleasant remembrances of the social delights of the day.

This is what an agricultural fair should always be able to give to the masses who congregate there, as originally planned. This is what they do in some localities. But unfortunately in many cases this plan is not carried out, and the State and county fair has degenerated into a place where disorder too often reigns; where but little attention is paid to the best interests of the people; where they are surrounded by influences that are only demoralizing; where large purses are given to encourage horse racing and its attendant gambling, with all the evils that follow it, and paltry sums are doled out for the finest products of the field and garden, and barn yard.

Small provision is made for the health and comfort of visitors in the way of supply of pure drinking water, but their health and happiness are threatened by allowing the sale of intoxicating liquors for the assuaging of thirst. All sorts of gambling devices are often allowed by which unwary ones are fleeced of their hard earnings, and youths who are needed as honest workers in the land, acquire a distaste for the steady life of the farmer, and learn to be dishonest in the acquisition of money. Where is the profit, either to man or country, in such gatherings as these? What comfort is there to a man or woman going where their sturdy labor is cheapened before that which only gives a momentary, unhealthy excitement, and engenders strife and discord and dishonesty as horse racing does? What does it add to the enjoyment of a father or mother who goes to the fair, and goes home with a son who has learned such lessons during the day as will cause him to drift away from the farm into dissipation and vice? It is appalling to consider how many drunkards are made by the beer stands that are upon fair grounds, or surrounding them.

Where is the hope of a healthy, hearty rural population to correct the viciousness and disease of the cities, when the youth of the rural districts are being thus debauched? These evils attendant upon fairs destroy all the good they might otherwise accomplish. They are a positive injury to the community instead of being a blessing, and are not worthy of the patronage of the best elements of society. It is a disgrace to the management of a fair, when an extra police force must be detailed to control the drunken and disorderly elements of the day. All the arrangements should be such that a policeman would be an unnecessary appendage. The managers of fairs have admitted these evils for the sake of the revenue, under a mistaken idea that there would be financial loss in the legitimate way of carrying it on.

There are fairs where neither horse-racing nor any other species of gambling is carried on; where no intoxicant is allowed on or near the grounds; where the most generous premiums are given for the product of nature, and the best machinery for the improving and raising of these products; where the youth of the country are incited to literary study by prizes for the best literary efforts in essay and oration; and these fairs have always proved good financial successes, and as a means of educating the people up to a higher standard of living, intellectually and morally, their value can hardly be estimated.

There is a general complaint of a dearth of young men who choose to be farmers. How far may not the present style of State and county fair be responsible for this? Instead of magnifying the calling, and presenting all the beauties and advantages of an agricultural life by setting a value upon its products above all other things at the fair, an unhealthy spirit of excitement and dissipation is encouraged that makes the simple life of the country seem tame and commonplace. The youth of the land are not being educated up into the idea that a farm life may be the most enjoyable, independent, cultured and dignified of all lives, by such signs and influences as are often presented to them in connection with it at our fairs. The fair at its best is an absolute necessity to the farmer; but as it is often carried on, is only a means of cheapening his labors, belittling the power and dignity of agricultural pursuits and injuring the health, comfort, and happiness of those engaged in it. In the name of those whose lives have been a blessing to humanity through their agricultural labors, and for the sake of those who should stand ready to take their places with clear heads and strong arms to do their work, we appeal to the farmers of the land, as the only power capable of controlling these matters, to see to it, that these demoralizing influences are driven away from our fairs, and that only pure and elevating influences surround those who come together seeking mutual pleasure and profit at these great annual meetings.—Josephine R. Nichols in the Union Signal.

The Christian's Secret

A Happy Life.

28th THOUSAND.

Baptist Commendation.

"We are delighted with this book. It reaches to the very core of Christian experience, and is eminently practical in its teaching. It meets in its doubts and difficulties of conscientious seekers after the bread and water of life, but whose efforts result only in alternate failure and victory. The author, without claiming to be a theologian, sends out the results of a happy and rich experience to help others into a happy Christian life."—Baptist Weekly.

Presbyterian Endorsement.

"The book is so truly and reverentially devoted in its spirit that it disarms criticism. It contains so much that is sound and practical, so much that, if heeded, will make our lives better, happier and more useful, that the intelligent reader who really wishes to lead a life 'hid with Christ in God' can scarcely fail to derive profit from its perusal."—Interior.

"A book which we trust may have a wide circulation."—National Baptist, (Philadelphia).

"So intensely interesting did I find it that it was hard to pause until the next sentence was read. This work places the author high among the writers of fiction."—W. W. Barry, D. D. in Christian Instructor, (Philadelphia).

"Unless we are greatly mistaken, the work will do more to awaken the American church and people to the evils of Freemasonry than any other book recently published."—Anglo-American.

"The book will create a sensation in Masonic circles, and evoke criticism of a more relentless character. The courage of the author in attacking such a rock-rooted bulwark as Freemasonry is something to admire, fantastic though it be."—Nevada Weeker.

"Light is needed on this subject and needed badly, and we welcome this contribution to the literature of anti-secrectism, and cordially commend it to the favorable attention of our readers."—United Presbyterian, (Pittsburgh).

"A charming work, fit to be classed with 'Uncle Tom's Cabin'; it is indeed less a work of fiction. The volume is so valuable and so well received as it is agreeable, truthful and useful. Our young folks will not leave the book, if they begin it, till they see how it turns out."—Cynosure, (Chicago, Ill.).

HOME AND HEALTH.

MUSH AND MILK.

Oh, the flavor, sweet and rare,
Of the simple farmer fare,
Mush and milk, the wholesome diet
Of the life so pure and quiet!

Clear the realm of table show;
Get thee hence, Delmonico!
Out, ye modern vizards, flat,
A la this and a la that!

Give me back the table bright,
With its bowls so clean and white,
Iron spoons, in hands so manifold,
Milk so luscious, by the painful!

Oh, the fields of golden maize!
Oh, the halcyon rustic days!
Nibblers pale, in rustling silk,
What know ye of mush and milk?

Once again, in foreign lands,
O'er my bowl I clasp my hands,
Giving thanks that, as of yore,
Mush and milk I taste once more.

Oh, the rosy cheeks it gave!
Oh, the arms so strong and brave!
Mush and milk has raised the latest
Of the nations and the greatest.

Countrymen, if ye are wise,
From the town turn off your eyes,
Vile with knavery, shame and brawl,
And the stench of alcohol.

Off to the hearty life of old;
Off to the fields of green and gold;
Seek again the simple ways;
Mow the meadows, hie the maize.

—C. C. Tracy.

HOW TO MAINTAIN GOOD DIGESTION.

Observance of four things is required to keep the organs of digestion in good condition: first, the kind of food eaten; second, the amount eaten; third, the manner in which it is taken; and fourth, the state of the system at the time of eating.

The quantity and quality of the food taken should vary with age, occupation, temperament, temperature, and habit. When persons contemplate making extraordinary effort, either mental or physical, less food than usual should be eaten. After full growth is reached, if the same amount of food be taken as during the growing age, without increase in regular labor, the digestive organs will become diseased.

Little drink should be allowed at meals, to weaken the digestive fluids. These are the saliva, gastric juice, and bile. Bile is not for a healthy stomach; if it is ejected in vomiting, it shows that the action of the stomach is inverted. Knowledge of this would save many from swallowing emetics and cathartics to rid the stomach of bile.

Copious draughts of water should be taken between meals, to furnish the stomach material for the necessary digestive fluids. Water-drinking an hour before meals should constitute a habit from infancy to old age. Its quantity must be regulated by the condition of each person. Lean people usually drink very little and are large eaters; while fat persons are apt to eat little and drink much. If the order be changed, it will, in most cases, make the lean grow fat, and the fat people will have the comfort of seeing their own shadows grow less.

If one meal follow another too quickly, before the stomach has time to rest, the gastric cells will not be well filled, and digestion will not be well done. Of all the organs in the body, none requires such absolute rest as the stomach. The feebleness of the person, the more carefully should this be observed.

Food should never be taken immediately after severe exertion of mind or body. At such times there is too much blood in some parts of the body, and too little in others. Rest restores this equilibrium. From thirty to sixty minutes is required at such times to restore to the stomach the power for complete digestion.

The Spanish fashion of lounging after eating is far better than the habit of our Anglo-Saxon race of rushing to and from meals as if life depended upon the small amount of time used in eating. — Democrat's Monthly.

ON FREEMASONRY.

Freemasonry Illustrated. A complete exposition of the seven degrees of the Blue Lodge and Chapter. Profusely illustrated. A historical sketch of the institution and a critical analysis of the character of each degree, by Pres. J. Blanchard, of Wheaton College. Monitorial questions and nearly four hundred notes from standard Masonic authorities confirm the truthfulness of this exposition and show the character of Masonic teaching and doctrine. The accuracy of this exposition is attested by J. O. Doeberg, Past Master United No. 191, Holland, Mich., and J. H. Blanchard, the latest, most accurate and complete exposition of Blue Lodge and Chapter Masonry. Over one hundred illustrations—several of them full page—give a pictorial representation of the lodge-room, chapter and principal ceremonies of the degrees, with the dress of candidates, signs, grips, etc. Complete work of 640 pages, in cloth, $1.00.

Ex-President John Quincy Adams' Lectures on the Nature of Masonic Oaths, Obligations and Penalties. Thirty most interesting, able and convincing letters on the above general subject, written by this renowned statesman to different public men of the United States during the years 1831 to 1833. With Mr. Adams' address to the people of Massachusetts upon political aspects of lodge-ry; an Appendix giving obligations of Masonry, and an Introduction. This is one of the most telling anti-secrecy works extant, aside from the Expositions. Price, cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $9.00. Paper, 32 cents; per dozen, $3.00.

Freemasonry Exposed. By Capt. William Morgan. The genuine and authentic republication, with engravings showing the lodge-room, dress of candidates, signs, due guards, grips, etc. This revelation was so accurate that Freemasons murdered the author for writing it. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Finney on Masonry. The character, ideal and practical workings of Freemasonry. By Pres. Charles G. Finney, of Oberlin College. President Finney was a "bright Mason," but left the lodge when he became a Christian. This book has opened the eyes of multitudes. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper cover, 38 cents; per dozen, $3.80.

Masonic Oaths Null and Void; or, Freemasonry Self-Convicted. This is a book for the times. It is a refutation of the arguments of those who claim that the oaths of Freemasonry are binding upon those who take them. An original and conclusive refutation in a forcible manner in which they are put, being drawn from Scripture, makes them convincing. The minister or lecturer will find in this work a rich fund of arguments. 57 pp., postpaid, 40 cents.

College Secret Societies. Their census, character, and the efforts for their suppression. By H. L. Kellogg. Containing the opinions of many prominent college presidents, and others, and a full account of the muzzler, Mortimer Leggett. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Five Rituals Bound Together. "Obedience to Pythias Illustrated," "Good Templarism Illustrated," "Exposition of the Grange" and "Ritual of the Grand Army of the Republic." These four bound together in cloth for $1.00; per dozen, $10.00.

Sermon on Masonry. By Rev. James Willard, of Dakota. Delivered at the North-western Iowa Conference, M. E. Church—a second Master Mason. Published at the special request of nine clergymen of different denominations, and others. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Thirteen Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason. By Rev. Robert Armstrong. The author states his reasons clearly and carefully, and any one of the thirteen reasons, if properly considered, will keep a Christian out of the lodge. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

The Mystic Tie, or Freemasonry a League with the Devil. This is an account of the church trial of Peter Cook and wife, of Elkhart, Indiana, for refusing to support a reverend Freemason; and their very able defense presented by Mrs. Lucia C. Cook, in which she clearly shows that Freemasonry is antagonistic to the Christian religion. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Ritual of the Grand Army of the Republic. A full and complete exposition of the character of the ritual and the Machinists and Blacksmiths' Union. (The two bound together.) 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Are Masonic Oaths Binding on an Infidel. By Rev. A. L. Post. Proofs of the truthfulness of these oaths and the consequent duty of all who have taken them to openly repudiate them. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Knight Templarism Illustrated. A full illustrated ritual of the six degrees of the Tan Council and the Knights Templar, containing the degrees of Royal Master, Secret Master, Super-Excellent Master, Knight of the Red Cross, Knight Templar and Knight of Malta. A book of 341 pages. In cloth, $1.00; $1.50 per dozen. Paper covers, 50 cents; $4.00 per dozen.

Mah-Hab-Hone. comprises the Hand Book, Mason's Carpet and Freemasonry at a Glance. Bound in one volume. This makes one of the complete books of information on the workings and symbolism of Freemasonry extant. Well bound in cloth, 889 pp., $1.00.

United Sons of Industry Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of the secret fraternity of the above name, giving the signs, grips, passwords, etc. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

National Christian Association.

321 W. Madison St., Chicago, Ill.

Morgan's Exposition, Abduction and Murder of "Freemasonry Exposed," by Capt. Wm. Morgan. "History of the Abduction and Murder of 'Valance' the Confession of the Murder of Capt. W. Morgan." Bernard's Reminiscences of Morgan Times, and Oaths and Penalties of 33 Degrees 200 pages, 40 cents.

In the Collar, or the Coming Confidant. By J. T. Faneuil. A historical sketch by a United Presbyterian minister, vividly portraying the workings of Secretism in the various relations of everyday life, and showing how individual domestic life, and showing how individual domestic life are trampled and bladed by the baneful workings of the lodge. Being presented in the form of a story, this volume will interest both old and young, and the moral of the story will not have to be searched for. $1.50 each; $15.00 per dozen.

Light on Freemasonry. By Elder D. Bernard. To which is appended "A Revelation of the Mysteries of Odd-fellowship (old work)," by a Member of the Craft. The whole containing over five hundred pages, lately revised and republished. In cloth, $1.50 each; per dozen, $15.00. NEWS OF THE WEEK.

COUNTRY.

President Cleveland will leave Washington about Oct. 1, and go direct to St. Louis. He will then come direct to Chicago, where he will arrive Oct. 5. From Chicago he will visit cities in the Northwest and on the Missouri river, continuing his trip to Atlanta, Ga.

Four British sealers were seized by the American cruisers in the Behring Sea. They were well-loaded with skins, which, with the craft, were turned over to the United States Marshal at Sitka.

Mrs. J. A. McIntosh, of Salem, Ind., only child of the late capitalist W. C. DePauw, by his first wife, began suit at New Albany, Ind., Tuesday to set aside her father's will. She was left a couple of farms, worth $2,000; while her half sisters and brothers received each property to the value of $10,000. Mrs. McIntosh married against her father's wish, but he seemed to be reconciled. It is probable that a compromise will be made.

Natural gas has been found in a great number of places in the vicinity of Albert Lea, Minn., and it is reported that a company has been formed and that grounds have been leased with a view of conveying the gas by pipes to St. Paul, Minneapolis, and other cities.

A raft of logs from Au Train, Lake Superior, reached Bay City, Mich., in tow of two tugs. It contained 8,000,000 feet and is the largest raft of pine logs ever towed in the world, and is valued at $100,000.

In New York Wednesday a young man threw away the stump of a cigarette, which lodged in the skirts of Miss Ella Snedaker, and she would have burned to death but for the prompt action of bystanders.

The United Labor party in convention at Syracuse, N. Y., Friday, nominated Henry George for Secretary of State. The split in the socialistic party appears to be final, and the anti-George people are getting up a new party.

It was made public at San Francisco, Cal., Friday, that Mackay and Flood lost $8,000,000 by the collapsed wheat deal.

A State convention of the Nebraska Prohibition party was held Thursday at Lincoln. The platform adopted declares that constitutional and statutory prohibition is the vital question of the day and denounces high license. J. F. Abbott was nominated for Supreme Judge and the Revs. J. D. Newell and S. H. Hilton for Regents of the State University.

Prof. Spencer F. Baird, of the United States Fish Commission, and manager of the Smithsonian Institute since the death of Prof. Henry, died at Woods Hall, Mass., Friday afternoon.

Alvan Clark, who had a wide reputation as a practical astronomer and the most celebrated manufacturer of telescopes, a resident of Cambridge, Mass., for fifty-two years, died in that city Friday at the age of 83.

Prof. C. S. Fowler, the noted phrenologist and lecturer, died at his residence near Sharon, Conn., Thursday morning, after an illness of only thirty hours. The cause of death was spinal trouble, superinduced by a heavy cold.

Rev. Dr. Daniel Curry, who has been for many years one of the most prominent members of the M. E. church, died at his home in New York, Friday. In 1855 he was elected President of the Indiana Asbury University, now the DuPauw University. From 1864 to 1876 he was editor of the Christian Advocate and was for some time editor of the Methodist, of the National Repository, from its first publication in 1877 till about 1890, and at the time of his death he was editor of the Methodist Magazine.

The inquest on the bodies of the victims of the Chataworth disaster was continued several days. Witnesses testified that they had seen ties burning near the bridge. Section hands said they had been burning rubbish along the line, and in the vicinity of the culvert. No effort was made to extinguish the flames when the men were ready to go home. The jury returned a verdict charging section-dogs Coughlin with gross carelessness and recommending that he be held to the grand jury. The railroad company was also mildly censured. The number of victims of the disaster, including the injured who have died, is 79.

On the St. Louis and Cincinnati limited express train on the Baltimore and Ohio Road, the air brakes were out of order and the train got beyond the control of the engineer and brakemen as it was entering Washington Wednesday morning, and, jumping the track, crashed through a brick building. The engineer was killed and several passengers fatally injured.

Alexander Robinson, a colored man arrested at Youngstown, Ohio, charged with criminally assaulting an 11-year-old white girl, died Friday, it is claimed of fright. The populace, enraged at the story told by the victim, demanded his immediate execution. A few hours after the unfortunate negro breathed his last the girl confessed he was not her assailant; the crime had been committed by a white peddler named Bishop, who threatened to kill her if she did not fasten the guilt on Robinson.

A cyclone from the north struck Republican City, Nebraska, and every brick building in town is a wreck. The brick schoolhouse being built was blown down, burying seven workmen. Two were killed outright, and five others were injured, two of them fatally. H. H. Wetherell's house was blown away and his wife and two children buried in the debris, all being more or less injured. Several other buildings were carried away or wrecked and several persons badly hurt. The damage will reach $50,000. Hailstones an inch in diameter fell during the storm.

The Inman Line steamer City of Montreal was burned at sea Aug. 11, when five days out from New York. The fire originated among some cotton and spread so rapidly that the passengers and crew were compelled to take to the boats. A pinnacle containing thirteen persons is missing, and its occupants are believed to have been drowned. The steamer York City picked the others up in a short time and landed them safely at Queens-town.

The steamer Atlas collided with the schooner Lizzie Wilson, of Barneget, N. J., Thursday. The sailing vessel went down immediately, and the wife and daughter of the captain and two seamen were drowned.

Two passenger engines in the yards of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, at Philadelphia ran away Thursday night, and two men received fatal injuries. The locomotives were almost totally destroyed.

At Enfield, Ill., where the Eighty-seventh Illinois regiment and the soldiers of White and Hamilton counties are holding their reunion, two shocking accidents occurred Friday. During the sham battle, two cannons used by besiegers and besieged were prematurely discharged and many persons were injured.

An elevator, in which were eighteen women, fell from the third floor of G. Sidener & Co.'s building, in New York, Thursday, causing the death of Mrs. Jane Lynch and injuring many others quite seriously.

On the through express which left Chicago at 3:15 Wednesday afternoon on the Pittsburg, Ft. Wayne and Chicago road, the rear sleeper was wrecked at Bayard, Ohio, early Thursday morning by the spreading of the rails. One man was killed, several were injured.

FOREIGN.

The price of wheat in the Vienna market fell to a lower point on Saturday than known in twenty-three years. The wheat crop of France is good. It is estimated that the yield will amount to 110,000,000 hectolitres, against 105,000,000 in 1886. Russian harvest reports are satisfactory. The crop is especially good in Bessarabia and Podolia, doubtful in Volhynia, Minsk, and Mochelev, owing to excessive rain: fair in the provinces bordering on the Sea of Azov and the River Don, and exceptionally fine in Charkoff and Poltava.

Advices from Honolulu are to the effect that the new ministry is in complete control. Nominations have been made for Representatives and Nobles. F. H. Hayselaen, son-in-law of ex-Premier Gibson, has been arrested for forgery.

Prince Ferdinand has at length mounted the Bulgarian throne, taken the customary oath and issued his proclamation to his subjects, which reads: "We, Ferdinand I, by the grace of God and the will of the people Prince of Bulgaria, announce to our well beloved people that we assume the government of the country. We will rule in accordance with the Constitution, with intent to promote its glory, greatness, and development. We shall always be ready to sacrifice our life for its happiness."

Lord Salisbury, in the House of Lords, and Mr. Balfour, in the Commons, announced Friday afternoon that the government had proclaimed the Irish National League as a dangerous society. Mr. Chamberlain and Mr. T. W. Russell have withdrawn from the Unionist party in consequence of the action of the government.

A total eclipse of the sun occurred at Berlin, Friday. Thousands of people came from different sections of the empire to witness the phenomenon, but were much disappointed, clouds preventing any observations.

Dispatches from Constantinople announced that the Czar has proposed to the Sultan a joint occupation of Eastern Roumelia and Bulgaria. Turkey is in no hurry to assent to the proposition. Prince Ferdinand was received with much enthusiasm at Philippolis, but none of the foreign Consuls have yet visited the Prince, and Germany has instructed her Consul not to consider himself attached to the Bulgarian Government. Consequently, the German flag has been lowered from over the consulate. It is reported that the Powers have expressed disapproval at Prince Ferdinand's irregular action in taking possession of the Bulgarian throne. The Bulgarian Government has ordered 200,000 repeating rifles from an Austrian firm.

Captain Pratt of the Indian Training School at Carlisle, Pennsylvania, has made a novel proposition which will be a striking feature of the Constitutional Centennial at Philadelphia. He has asked permission of the Indian Bureau to go to the plains and bring to Carlisle some of the wildest Indians he can find, and to march them in the procession at Philadelphia, side by side with the pupils of the school. The object is to illustrate in the most striking way the progress made in Indian civilization in the century. The Captain has leave of the Bureau, and will furnish a spectacle to make the land rejoice at the power of Christian education to transform savages to saints.

It is quite well understood that but for the hundreds of thousands sent to Parnell from his American sympathizers the Irish League could hardly have fought its way to its present position in British politics. But few realize what immense sums have gone back to Ireland from friends and relatives. Robert Griffin, statistician of the British Board of Trade, reports his estimate of them. He calculates from the figures of certain banking-houses that the remittances from America to Ireland in thirty-seven years have amounted to over $150,000,000, and that for six years these remittances have been $7,425,000 annually. Ireland has only about 5,000,000 population, but these large gifts seem to have no effect upon them.

This is the millennium of monopoly. The Standard Oil Trust has a capital of over $100,000,000, the Cotton Oil Trust of $30,000,000, the Cattle Trust of $25,000,000, the Rubber Trust has a capital of $35,000,000, and the new whisky pool named "Distillers and Cattle Feeders' Trust" has just been organized with a fat capital stock of $40,000,000. This is the first monopoly we have heard of with any satisfaction. Its headquarters will be in Peoria and its directors will have power to fix prices of liquor and run or close up distilleries. A number will cease to turn out their flood of poison and death immediately. This movement, like the Kentucky agreement some weeks since to make no more whisky until the stock on hand is reduced, is prophetic. It means that the business is not paying as before the days of prohibition, and the distillers are getting ready to shut up altogether.

The Canadian government has another quarrel in Manitoba which, though bloodless, may be of more serious consequences to the British provinces than the Riel rebellion two years ago. When the Red River region had attracted so many settlers that a provincial government must be granted, it was a most perplexing problem how to keep it from being Americanized. The vast wilderness north of the great lakes separated it from Ontario, and access was had only through the railways on this side. Sir John McDonald and the Tory party, resolved to risk much for the imperial integrity of the British dominions, built the Canadian Pacific road through that northern wilderness at immense public expense, and they are pledged to secure for it a monopoly of traffic. The Manitobans have at length rebelled against this coercive policy and wish to connect with a line built to the border by the Northern Pacific. Since they are united in their purpose they laugh at the agents of Sir John, scout the injunctions of his courts, and keep rolling the dirt upon the grade of the new road. A few days since there were threats of serious trouble, for McDonald threatened to send a detachment of British troops to settle the matter. The folly of such a war is too manifest, however, and he is not likely to attempt it. There is one road already connecting Manitoba with Minnesota, but as it is controlled by the Canadian Pacific, it gives no relief to the wheat-growers of the north. Our Canadian border lines are getting nearly obliterated as the similarity of interests on both sides increases.

Mr. Powderly, on learning that he was considered a pillar in Dr. Kirby's new party, made a very emphatic repudiation of its fellowship in these words: "When the American national committee meet next month in Philadelphia they will not represent me. I am not in any way connected with the organization. While I am an American I am not interested in reviving purely American ideas. I am not anxious to see the tomahawk and scalping-knife flourish again in this country. I have no desire to rekindle the camp-fires of the purely American, nor do I wish to see the re-establishment of the ducking-pond or the burning of witches. I am content to devote my time to the revival of an interest in the declaration of American independence and the re-establishment of the rule of the American people, independent of party or monopoly. I am of the opinion that I can work out these ends as a member of the Knights of Labor." Now the grand commander of the Knights is entirely gratuitous in this matter. He should be wiser than to attempt to balance his ignorance of early New England over against the old, forgotten idea that the savages are the real Americans. And he should be honorable enough to understand that any set of adventurers can just as truly claim the mission of establishing American principles by their secret lodge methods, as he by his. The whole secret lodge system, Knights, Sons, Deputies, Minute Men or what-not are cut from the same warp of despotism with its woof of secret ceremonies of false religion.

A Wooster, O., letter to the New York Voice gives some interesting news of the position of the successor of Dr. D. A. Wallace: "A sensation was created here last Sabbath morning by a declaration made by Rev. Dr. John A. Wilson, the United Presbyterian pastor. In the course of his sermon, he said: 'I am amazed when I consider the attitude of the two great political parties of Ohio toward the liquor traffic. Within the past few days one of these great parties, while recognizing the evils which flow from the traffic, deliberately proposes to license men to carry on the business, while the other party, with greater infamy, if possible, points with "just pride" to the Dow law—a law that licenses the saloon day and night, and "Sundays" included. It is time for us to raise a standard against this criminal policy, and as Christian men to no longer countenance the truckling of the politicians to the slums of the cities. For my part, I here and now wash my hands of all further complicity with such parties.' When Dr. Wilson came here from St. Louis two years ago he was an ardent Republican, and favored the non-partisan way of securing prohibition. He is a clear thinker and a fine orator and will be a tower of strength to the Prohibition party."

The Presbyterian churches in New Jersey have made arrangements to hold special missionary meetings in all parts of the State, ending Nov. 19, for the purpose of arousing greater interest in foreign missions.

A TERRIBLE WRECK IN INDIA.

BY AN AMERICAN MISSIONARY.

Shall I tell you some story of the horrors of the Mutiny, shall I take you to the Black Hole of Calcutta, to the Massacre Ghauts or the Memorial Well at Cawnpore, or the shattered old Residency at Lucknow? Or had you rather hear a thrilling tale of a tiger fight in the jungles? or do you prefer an account of some of the terrible murders of the Bheels and Thugs? No. I am going to tell you of some monsters which have been ravaging India with a destruction more terrible than that of any of the mighty and cruel conquerors, murderers or wild beasts.

Let me assure you that you are not now reading a tale of romance, nor yet of ancient history. The sad story which I am about to relate actually occurred, and most of the wrecked parties are personally known to the writer.

There lived a happy family, the parents and children bound together by the precious ties of love and home. The husband and father was a plain, industrious man. He was devoted to the wife and children whom God had given him. The mother had bright prospects in the love of her husband and children. The little girls and boys seemed to have a happy destiny before them. The parents were not what we would call earnest Christians, but they were religious in a general sense, attending church and teaching their children the ways of piety. The man had been somewhat addicted to strong drink, but he had signed the pledge and given up his drinking companions. Home was now happy as ever; all life seemed bright before them.

As the life destroyer could not break in upon this happy family through the ordinary enticements of the grog-shop, there must be some special plot formed to accomplish their ruin, and terribly did it succeed. The husband had been away from home at some distance for his employment, and when he returned his wife noticed something peculiar in his conduct. It seemed as though he had something which he would not let her know. As she asked about his friendships, ways of spending his time, etc., she saw that he was telling her but a part. Having reason to believe that he had joined some secret society, she asked him directly if he had done so. He flatly denied it.

He had occasion to leave home again. During his absence a large letter came, sealed and registered. As usual his wife received it. There had never been any want of confidence, and neither had ever had any secrets to keep from the other. She had always opened his letters, and he had never thought of objecting to it. She opened this letter,—there was his diploma as a member of the Freemason fraternity. She understood it all at a glance. Something had now come between husband and wife. It looked to be only the thin end of the wedge. We shall see. When he returned she again asked him about his joining the lodge. He still denied it. She then showed him the lodge certificate. He was exceedingly vexed, and blamed her severely for having opened the letter. She reminded him that she had always opened his letters, and there had never been the least objection. The entering wedge was beginning to do its work in that home.

The lodges of this fraternity in India are notorious dram-shops. If there is a Masonic lodge which is without an extensive alcoholic "refreshment room" we have never heard of it. Judging from authentic reports we may well presume that the chief attraction of these secret societies is the titillation which is found at the festive board. There may be total abstainers who keep up a long connection with that order, but we do not know of them. On the contrary, we have known of members who, giving up their drinking habits and becoming truly pious, were compelled to resign their lodge associations.

Under these circumstances what is to become of the young abstainer who enters into that charmed circle? Could this man refuse that almost universal mark of worldly friendship—the treating glass? Would he go into a band of elder and wiser members of the order and begin by opposing their ideas of conviviality? No. The blindfold over his eyes represented the blindness of his mind in entering such an association. The cable-tow tied about him marked him as a slave of these worldly customs. He was henceforth to be led captive by them at their will. The lodge first shared and then monopolized the love of family in his heart. Home once meant wife and children. Once his feast was to sit down at their family table with his dear ones about him. But these ideas were too narrow. He got "larger views." His home circle became that worldwide fraternity who were linked together in vows which pretend to be much more solemn than those of the marriage altar. His festive board was henceforth to be the banquet of the lodge, with its wild revelry and strong drink.

We need not trace him through the years of alienation from home, bitter feelings, unkind words, sad neglect and painful heart-achings and breakings which followed. Alas! the world knows these things so generally, and yet knows them to so little purpose! We would gladly pause here and drop the curtain over the rest of the sad scene. But we can not. Before God and man truth must come out. God tells some terrible things in his Word as a warning to the generations to come, and it is solely because that such warnings are absolutely necessary that we proceed with the cruel details before us.

It is plainly shown in the Bible and in the universal history of man that strong drink stimulates the basest passions of human nature. There are appetences which require careful discipline and great self-denial. As the Creator himself has shown us, even a crucifixion and mortification are necessary in order ensure the safety of the soul and the peace of society. It is not at all strange that men beat their wives and turn them out of their own happy homes; and starve and abuse even their own offspring under the maddening power of the demon drink. Led along by this monster evil, that man who had once been a kind father committed a most infamous assault upon one of his own children before she was ten years of age. The wretched mother, in the frenzy of shame and despair, threw the case into court. But what occurs when one of that fraternity is taken as a prisoner before a judge who is his sworn brother? The magistrate allowed the case to slip along for some months until the excitement about it could somewhat abate, and then quietly let off the culprit as having been irresponsible when the act was committed!

The wife refused to live with the vile man. But we all know how the world looks upon the woman who refuses to stay with the man who has once been a husband, no matter what he may have become afterwards. Under the most specious promises and strong pressure she was induced after some time to stay with him again. He led a painfully vile life. His haunts in the bazars were well known. Thus matters went on a few more years. He was a wreck in business. Though a man of good business ability, his course of debauchery had again and again thrown him out of work. The wife was compelled to leave him again, and the family was scattered. But that poor girl was left in the clutches of the unnatural father. Again this vile monster repeated the unnameable infamy for which his wife had previously put him in court.

Immediately after this he was engaged in a broil with a man at whose house he had been for a long time a too frequent and familiar visitor. Efforts had been made to protect the wife and children from this demon-possessed man. Who do you think interfered this time? The representatives of a perverse form of Christianity, a man whose religious position brought him into frequent contact with influential men of the world. These influential worldlings must protect their "weak brother." Clergymen were their cats-paw, and the efforts of the poor wife to obtain her rights were outwitted. The hero of this story carried his quarrel with his once too accommodating neighbor to blows, then, using deadly weapons and inflicting severe injuries, he was apprehended by the police. While under trial for this assault the record of the infamous conduct was also recalled and the man was at last sent to prison, the wife divorced and the children scattered about as the objects of charity.

Only a part has been told, but here is certainly enough to serve as a warning against these secret works of darkness. God has "placed the solitary in families." The home circle is a divine institution. What God has joined together no mighty secret league has any right to put asunder. The spiritual counterpart of the family is the church of God. Let men and women join its hallowed circle, giving their hearts to Jesus. Being born of the Spirit they become members of the "whole family in heaven and earth" which circles around the throne of God. The blessed business of Christian work and fellowship among the saints of earth will occupy all the time and talent that men and women can afford to give aside from their duties in their homes and business. If you serve the true God in heaven let this be your trinity of work on earth: religion, home, business.

The whole system of secret societies is adapted to draw the people away from their legitimate circles of religious, domestic and business duties. The world is full of examples of this sad truth. We beg you take the warning given in the true story above narrated, and let such misleading associations be forever avoided.

Bombay, India.

AN AMERICAN PARTY.

BY REV. H. H. HINMAN.

There has been a circular letter issued from the headquarters of the American Party National Committee rooms, 1017 Chestnut street, Philadelphia, asking American citizens to sign a call for a National Convention to meet in that city on Sept. 16, 1887, based on the following principles:

1. To emphasize and perpetuate the sentiment—America for Americans.
2. The restriction of immigration.
3. A thorough revision of the naturalization laws.
4. Reserving American lands for American citizens only.
5. The protection of Americans, in all rights, on land or sea, in all parts of the world.
6. To restrict and guard the right of elective franchise.
7. To abolish polygamy in the United States immediately and entirely.
8. To enact and enforce such laws as will tend to eradicate intemperance.
9. To develop the resources of the country by a wise system of internal improvements.
10. To protect and promote the American system of free common schools.
11. To adjust the relations between labor and capital, on a permanent basis of equity and justice.—National View.

As an adherent of the American party, I desire to make some remarks on the above circular:

1. There is no reason to think this movement has any considerable following. It is important only as indicating the tendency to disintegration and reconstruction in the old political parties. As these parties have survived their usefulness and are kept together mainly to contend for the spoils, such a tendency is to be rejoiced in and promoted.
2. There is in this declaration of principles much that is to be commended and deserving of consideration by all makers of political platforms, and some things not commendable.

I desire to make a few observations: As a platform it is seriously defective because of what it omits, and morally wrong in some things that it affirms. It is defective because it fails to recognize the Divine authority of human governments and their responsibility to Divine law. It does not even recognize the doctrine of human equality as the basis for civil government, but lays down principles subversive of that doctrine.

The first and second propositions are of doubtful propriety and worse morality. They are all the worse as political propositions because they contain an element of truth, together with an appeal to human selfishness and a practical denial of the foundation principles of our government. The truth is, that distinctively American principles, such as the doctrine of human equality, the separation of church and state, and the right to protect society from the evils of the liquor traffic, from the subversion of Christianity and the Christian Sabbath, and from the secret conspiracies that are the outgrowth of atheism and despotism, ought to be steadily maintained. No class of foreign immigrants have a right to subvert our established institutions. Beyond this we have no right to go. America does not belong exclusively to Americans, but as a possible place of residence to all mankind. We are all "foreigners" except the Indians, and if they had no right to exclude Europeans that came here peaceably, neither have we. A government that holds "these truths to be self-evident that all men are created equal, and endowed with the inalienable right to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness" can never consistently exclude any self-supporting and law-abiding immigrants. To insist that we may and should exclude them is a most un-American principle. So long as we claim the right to visit and reside in all parts of the habitable globe we must recognize the same right in others. It is something to be an American citizen. It is more to be a man, and our rights as citizens grow out of our rights as men, and do not lift us above the level of the great human family.

The third proposition is doubtless a wise one. The right to participate in our government is not, like that of residence and protection, a natural right. Its exercise should be restricted to those who have the capacity to properly exercise it. Not many of our foreign immigrants are illiterate, but some are avowed atheists and anarchists. There would be no injustice in giving such a back seat in framing the destinies of States and the nations.

The fourth proposition is also wise. Land monopoly is an evil and a wrong, and those who purchase from the American domain ought to be willing to assume and discharge the duties of citizenship.

The fifth proposition not only demands the assent of every true American, but its maintenance is one of the most pressing demands of the times. True, we do not have now to send our ships to the Mediterranean to rescue our citizens from Algerine pirates, but our government looks calmly on and sees Christian ministers and college professors driven from the cars in which they have purchased a right to ride, and beaten and bruised for insisting on that right. When the legislature of a State can enact that parents who shall educate their own children in their own school shall be fined a thousand dollars and sent one year to the chain-gang, it is surely time that the government should protect its citizens. So long as race distinctions are made the basis of legislation, there will be room for such a plank in every political platform.

The sixth proposition is also wise. The elective franchise ought to be restricted to those who can exercise it intelligently. It ought not to be denied because of sex, and all persons who are lawfully entitled to its exercise should be protected in so doing. This opens a wide field for legislative and executive action.

The seventh proposition ought of course to be carried out; but it will involve the suppression of the secret lodge system, which is the main element of strength in Mormon polygamy. Polygamy is not worse than the idolatrous rites that are secretly practiced in the District of Columbia. A law that will reach the former would break up the latter.

The eighth plank is too vague. It ought to demand State and national prohibition. The ninth is all right, but demands no change. The tenth is deserving of serious consideration. The system of free schools is in many parts of the South a practical failure. Nowhere in the nation is a public school system so greatly needed. What is demanded is national aid and national supervision. We ought to have a national bureau of education.

The last proposition reminds one of the conclusion reached by a convention of rats, viz., that henceforth all cats should wear bells. Co-operation and arbitration can be promoted by legislation, but no law except that of Christian kindness will ever reconcile conflicting interests. I apprehend that this together with the clause about immigration was put in for buncombe and for nothing else.

And finally, we respectfully suggest to the aforesaid committee that they take out the rotten planks in their platform and put in their place those of the real American party. Especially do we urge them to insert the fifth, eighth, tenth and thirteenth planks. So long as this government charters institutions which it can neither control nor inspect there will be little security for justice in any other measures it may adopt.

THE MYSTERY OF THE WORD.

BY E. E. FLAGG.

I once heard a bright, original New England woman remark, "I don't want to understand all there is in the Bible; I want something left to learn when I get to heaven."

It struck me as a new idea which at the same time ought not to be new. Perhaps, for instance, it would be better to keep our difficulties with the imprecatory Psalms to ourselves till we meet David, no longer a sinning, fallible, but half sanctified man, and hear his own explanation of the matter; which would probably be that inspiration did not mean perfection, that he was in this mortal life not only a man of like passions with ourselves, but of rather stronger passions than the average; and the fact that he did not write like St. John, instead of being a stumbling-block for reasonable minds, ought to be the reverse, for the real discrepancy, the true "moral difficulty" would have been if he had written like St. John.

And so of life. What earth would be without that counter dream world of cloud and mist and vapor, human existence would be if the ways of Providence involved no deep things past searching out, of which we can only say, "It is a great mystery," and leave it where we found it. Faith may remove mountains, but it bears no key to let us into God's secret counsels. It can paint a rainbow on every cloud, but did you ever stop to think that the greatest mystery of all is the mystery of light; that the riddle of the sunset clouds is a deeper one than the riddle of the Sphinx? And so there will always be something left to learn" even after we get to heaven, for when we reach the perfect Light mystery will still be at the heart of it.

There is to me nothing more striking in the Bible than that it should speak in one breath of the mystery of godliness and the mystery of iniquity; that the kingdom of darkness and the kingdom of light should both be described by one word. But it is so in Nature. There is a mystery of the serpent's way upon a rock and the flight of a bird through the air; there is a mystery of the healing herb and the deadly nightshade, of the health-giving breezes that waft the scent of honeysuckle and clover and new mown hay into your open window and the pestilence, formless, dragon-winged, rising out of the earth's desolate places to slay and destroy. We cannot safely ignore one mystery and give ourselves to the pursuit of the other. The physician must learn the laws of disease as well as health and know a poison from an antidote. It is not preaching the mystery of godliness to let the mystery of iniquity alone even though some wise and good men may think so. On earth at least our learning must always be of this dual form. It is not safe to refuse even a disagreeable knowledge.

"The surest means to convince one's self of a life after death," says Fichte, "is so to live in the present that one must wish it," and the only way to be sure of "something left to learn" when we get to heaven is to learn all we can while we are here. "Unto him that hath shall be given,"—solemn words that may be a passing bell or a pean of victory,—"unto him that hath shall be given, but unto him that hath not from him shall be taken away even that which he seemeth to have."

WHAT IS FANATICISM?

The genuine fanatic is not a hypocrite. He is sincere and earnest. His fundamental mistake is in being consecrated to his own will, and thinking it is consecrated to God. "Am I not," he says, "always led by the Spirit of God? And can the Spirit of God lead one wrong?" He assumes that his will and the will of God are always the same. Whoever, therefore, opposes him, he takes it for granted, is fighting against God! "Of course he cannot be a Christian!"

This is the spirit that presided at the Inquisition, and kindled in all ages the fires of persecution. It is impatient of contradiction, cruel and relentless.

The Spirit of God begets kindness and humility. It never, in its zeal for the truth, pursues any individual to his injury. It leaves the recompensing of evil to God, to whom vengeance belongs. It never consigns a man to perdition till God sends him there.

Fanaticism, when restrained by law from violent persecution, seeks its compensation in severe judgments and fierce denunciations. It puts the worst construction upon actions, and calls offenses, real or imaginary, by their hardest names. He who has the Spirit of the Lord, imitates Michael the Archangel, who, when contending with the devil he disputed about the body of Moses, durst not bring against him a railing accusation, but said, "The Lord rebuke."

The fanatic cannot bear contradiction, or take advice. He can give, but cannot take reproof. He who has the Spirit of God is as teachable as a child. Moses talked with God face to face. But when a friend suggested a better course than that he was pursuing, Moses listened to the suggestion, and adopted the plan proposed for the administration of justice. He was taught of God, and so was not above being taught of man.

The fanatic is unyielding in his course: but they who are filled with the Spirit submit themselves one to another in the fear of God.

Fanaticism is not always attended by extravagance of conduct. It may be very quiet outwardly, while malignant passions burn within. No degree of extravagance, while unaccompanied with malevolent passions, can constitute a person a fanatic. Fanaticism is not wildness and extravagance merely, but its essence consists in substituting for that love that beareth all things unkind feeling and a furious zeal.

The great enemy and sure preventative of fanaticism is humble love.

In humility there is safety. The storm that uproots the stately oak leaves the humble shrub undisturbed. The most wonderful manifestations of God to your soul will not hurt you, unless Satan succeeds in getting you lifted up with spiritual pride. But if he does—if you get lifted up, in your own opinion, so that you think you cannot go wrong because God leads you, and the work of God can not go right unless it has your support, or at least your indorsement—then you are in danger of becoming a fanatic. Do not think that God will curse a church because you are not put forward, or withdraw his presence from a meeting because your voice is not lifted up in it. We are not of much consequence after all. God can get along very well without any of us.

Guard against an unteachable spirit. You do not know it all, and never will. Those who are behind you in some things can yet teach you in others. Let your place of rest be down at the feet of Jesus.—B. T. Roberts.

THE ENCROACHMENTS OF ROMANISM.

[Dr. McGlynn in the North American Review.]

Strange as is the mildness of the complaint of the new Know-Nothingism, compared with the old, in the protest against foreign immigration, and strangely unexpected as is the quarter from which the protest comes, stranger far is the mildness of toleration, or the indifference, and in innumerable cases the actual approval by Americans, especially by those of them that are represented in the public press, of the attitude of the churches, and especially of the Roman Catholic church, towards our government, our laws, our American principles, traditions and institutions. Now that the number of foreign-born inhabitants, and still more the number of Catholics, is in a much larger proportion to the total population, we hear nothing like the former frantic cries of alarm from the native-born and the Protestant. And yet things have been happening within the last few years all over the country, and especially in our State and city of New York, a mere tithe of which would, but a generation ago, have stirred the country to a white heat of anger.

But a few years ago, many bishops, assembled in the provincial council of Cincinnati, issued a pastoral letter, the product of the pen of the Scotch bishop Gilmour, of Cleveland, which was largely a deliberate thesis against our Declaration of Independence, in the attempt to show that men are not born "free and equal," and when some remonstrance was called forth, in not a few instances from Catholics, the Franco-American bishop, Chatarel, of Indianapolis, hastened to justify the manifesto, which he had himself signed, in a letter to a New York paper, in which he corroborated the teaching of the pastoral letter by quotations from a letter of the Pope, whom he slavishly described as "our present holy father, Pope Leo XIII., now gloriously reigning." The new generation of bishops is by no means so averse as were their predecessors to having their ears tickled by the grateful appellations of "lord" and "lordship," and nothing is now more common than to speak of and to address an archbishop by the ducal sobriquet of "his grace" and "your grace." The bishops, in great majority, are now eager to obtrude their professional rank on the public by the use of a distinctive garb, wearing about their necks the imperial purple, with which, as well as with wealth and power, the first Christian emperors began the corruption of the church. And they force the priests to wear, in public as well as in private, a professional badge known as the Roman collar, of which an old American priest, some years ago, hearing of the desire of his bishop that the priests should always wear it, said, with bitterness, "I suppose the next thing will be that we must have the bishop's name written upon the collar."

Thirty-five years ago it was extremely rare to hear from bishops and priests the denunciations, now so common, of the public schools, which, in spite of the hackneyed character of the phrase, have well been called, and may for all time to come well be called, the palladium of our liberties, and the safeguard of American institutions. The late James A. McMaster, editor of the Freeman's Journal, well-known for his rabid hatred of the public schools, stated in his paper that at the time of the First Plenary Council of Baltimore, only one venerated prelate and himself took the correct view of the school question. From this we can gather that the other bishops did not then see in the public school system the horrors that their successors almost unanimously discover. This is also shown by the language of the earlier councils of Baltimore, in which, speaking of the public schools, they have nothing to say of the "godlessness," the "wantonly," and the "immoralities" of these schools, of which things we have in late years heard so much from bishops and priests, and their journalistic organs. One of these earlier utterances, incorporated in paragraphs 428 and 429 of the Second Plenary Council of Baltimore, shows that so far was it then from being the desire of the bishops (while complaining of certain inequalities to which Catholics were subjected in the schools) to restrain Catholic children from going to the public schools, that they made it the duty of pastors to take an interest in the schools, and to secure in them the rights of conscience of Catholic children. The words of the Council are:

"Since often in books in use in the schools there are things which are hostile to our faith, and which place our doctrines in a false light, and distort history, the welfare of religion, the right education of youth and the honor of our country demand a remedy for so great an evil. As it is certain that in most of the States public education is so conducted that it is made to serve the interests of the sects, so that the minds of Catholic children are gradually imbued with their principles, we admonish pastors that they should spare no pains in looking to the Christian and Catholic education of children, and should watch diligently to prevent their using the Protestant Bibles and reciting and singing the prayers of the sects. Therefore, they should be vigilant in guarding against the introduction of such books and exercises into the public schools. They should everywhere resist these sectarian efforts with constancy and moderation, and endeavor to obtain the necessary remedy from the authorities."

Contrast the moderation of this language, and this inculcation of moderation upon the priests, with the violent denunciations and gross calumnies of later days. There is now an avowed determination, as shown in the last Council of Baltimore, to establish all over the country a great system of parochial schools in opposition to the public schools, and it is made the most urgent duty of priests everywhere, under threat of expulsion, to found such schools. The hope is not concealed that, when the so-called "Catholic vote" shall become larger, the politicians may be induced to appropriate, through State legislatures or local governments, all the funds necessary for the support of these schools. This has already been accomplished in Poughkeepsie, New Haven, and elsewhere, and for a brief period during the offensive and defensive alliance between a certain set of priests and the Tammany ring of the days of Tweed, Connolly, and Sweeney, an appropriation procured by legislative trick and fraud, under the management of Peter B. Sweeney, awarded several hundred thousand dollars to the parochial schools of New York city. What would the old-time Know-Nothing have thought of this? It should be noted that these parochial schools, which it is the design to multiply, are exempt from taxation, and that thus the public in some sense puts a premium upon a system of schools hostile to its own, and so encourages the laying of an enormous additional burden upon the poor Catholic people who have already paid, directly or indirectly, their full share of the taxes for the support of the public schools, which it is now the growing tendency to forbid them to use, under penalty of privation of the sacraments of the church. Another thing which was almost unheard of a generation ago, and the suggestion of which, in anything like its present extent, would then have caused the gravest civil disturbances, is the appropriation of valuable public lands and millions of dollars of public money, to the support of all manner of sectarian institutions under the control of churches, and especially of the Roman Catholic church. It may be sufficient, by way of illustration, to refer to the Catholic Protectory, in Westchester, to the House of the Sisters of Mercy in Eighty-first street, and to the Foundling Asylum of the Sisters of Charity in Sixty-eighth street, immense institutions supported by the city treasury of New York, at an expense of from half a million to a million of dollars a year, and the two latter built upon blocks of ground given by the city through the favor of the Tammany ring, and worth hundreds of thousands each. There is a host of smaller institutions of the same character, and supported chiefly by the public treasury, to nearly all of which children are committed as to public institutions by the civil magistrates. Would it not be enough to make the elder Know-Nothing bigots turn in their graves could they hear that vast sums and great public properties are thus turned over to irresponsible private and sectarian institutions, especially if they could learn that the priests, and monks, and nuns, whose institutions are thus benefited by the public, are but the more emboldened to denounce our schools and other public institutions, in language at times brutal if not obscene, while indulging in unwarranted phari-saic glorification of their own institutions and of themselves. The extraordinary zeal manifested for the getting up of these sectarian schools and institutions is, first of all, prompted by jealousy and rivalry of our public schools and institutions, and by the desire to keep children and other beneficiaries from the latter, and, secondly, by the desire to make employment for and give comfortable homes to the rapidly increasing hosts of monks and nuns, who make so-called education and so-called charity their regular business, for which a very common experience shows that they have but little qualification beyond their professional stamp and garb.

It is not risking much to say that if there were no public schools there would be very few parochial schools, and the Catholic children, for all the churchmen would do for them, would grow up in brutish ignorance of letters; and a commonplace of churchmen here would be the doctrine taught by the Jesuits in Italy, in their periodical magazine, the Givitta Cattolica, that the people do not need to learn to read, that all that they do need is bread and the catechism, the latter of which they could manage to know something of, even without knowing how to read. A confirmation of this is to be found in the very general illiteracy in countries where churches and churchmen have been exceedingly abundant and have exercised temporal control. It is a remarkable fact, that in Italy, France, and other so-called Catholic countries, in spite of the hostility to the government schools, the clergy do not establish parochial schools. The ecclesiastical authorities of Italy, while willing enough to impose on our Catholic people of America so heavy a burden, do not dare to try to impose a similar burden upon their people nearer home. But what, most of all, might seem well adapted to revive and intensify the old hateful and bigoted spirit of Know-Nothingism, and justify its fears and predictions, is the actual and direct interference in politics of bishops, vicars-general, and priests in their ecclesiastical capacity and because of their ecclesiastical influence, to promote the pecuniary and other temporal objects of the ecclesiastical machine.

Recent instances of this, not a few, could be mentioned. It must suffice here merely to refer to the letters and messages of the late Vicar-General Quinn, of New York, sent to clergymen to secure their influence as churchmen to defeat constitutional amendments which, even after their adoption, have been practically over-ridden and over-ruled in the interest of Catholic institutions, and to secure the election to the Legislature of such men as Mr. J. W. Husted, because he was willing to favor "generous appropriations;" the instance referred to in this article of the clerical alliance with the Tweed ring; the letter of Monsignor Preston to Joseph O'Donoghue in the late Mayoralty canvass; the denunciation of one of the candidates and his party from Catholic altars; the secret prohibition to a priest, who went not as a priest, but as a citizen, to keep his engagement to speak at a political meeting, the chief demerit of which speech was clearly in the fact that the movement it was intended to help was likely to bring disaster upon the Tammany ally of the ecclesiastical machine; the abuse of the confessional in forbidding men under penalty of refusal of absolution to attend the meetings of one political party; and last and worst of all, the effort, of an archbishop in the late election, to defeat at the polls by the abuse of his ecclesiastical position the call for a constitutional convention, which, as the result proved, was demanded by an overwhelming majority of all those who voted on the question—an effort in full keeping with the action of the same archbishop, when bishop of Newark, in sending to the Catholic pastors of New Jersey a secret confidential letter, telling them to "instruct" their people how they "must" vote upon certain proposed constitutional amendments, giving minute details as to the striking out of certain clauses, and suggesting that for greater surety it might be better that the Catholic voters should strike out all the clauses. The heinousness of this action will be better understood when it is mentioned that the object of the proposed amendments was to protect the public treasury, and to prevent the people of counties and towns from being oppressed and robbed by railroad and other corporations.

From this cursory review of the situation, then and now, it would seem that the fear of the things, the alleged evils and dangers of which were dreaded, predicted, and denounced with so much vehemence by the elder Know-Nothings, would find to-day a hundredfold greater justification. And yet we witness the extraordinary spectacle of the indifference of the old political parties to the danger, and their actual co-operation in bringing about this state of things through legislative action. A similar indifference, where there is not positive acquiescence or co-operation, is to be noticed in the great majority of the journals of the country. The reason of this is not hard to find. It is actually the fulfillment of the prevision of those who saw in the growth of a vast army of foreign-born voters likely to be swayed as one man by other than American objects and considerations, and in the growth of an ecclesiastical power, secret and despotic in its methods, and owing, it was alleged, blind obedience to a foreign potentate, a real danger to the unity and distinctive characteristics of our nationality, and to the liberties and institutions of our country. The old political parties, and the newspaper press, which is mostly devoted to one or the other of them, are now so much impressed with the importance of the Catholic vote, and the adopted citizen's vote, that they will not run the risk of alienating either, by shocking even the most unreasonable and un-American prejudices. But those most active as political leaders and partisans, and those whose opinions get the most airing in the press, are not the most nor the best of the people of either party. We hear whisperings and mutterings here and there that portend the speedy crystallization and emphatic enunciation of an American public opinion which, while free from the vulgar theological hatred and low-minded jealousy against foreign-born citizens that characterized the elder Know-Nothingism, will have something more effectual to propose as a remedy for the grave evils we have pointed out than the ridiculously inadequate and selfish new Know-Nothingism of restricting immigration, as proposed by Prof. Boyesen and Mr. Powderly.

WASHINGTON LETTERS.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—The sudden death of Prof. Baird, Secretary of the Smithsonian Institute, makes an important gap in the scientific world and is a great loss to that institution. He died yesterday at Wood's Holl, Mass., quite unexpectedly. He has held the position of secretary since the death of Prof. Henry, whose statue stands in front of the main building.

Recent investigations in this city go to show that by far the greater part of the wine and beer consumed here are highly adulterated, and with substances that are decidedly poisonous. If no additional reasons were to be found, these would be sufficient to demand the entire prohibition of the traffic. There is much talk about removing the garbage to preserve the public health. There is no garbage half so poisonous or pernicious as that regularly dispensed at the saloons and hotels under the authority and protection of the District government. Just now a call is out for the reorganization of the Prohibition Club of this District.

The conviction of Dr. Crawford, Assistant Surgeon of the Navy, for unlawful cohabitation with a girl of fourteen years, is the first instance of the enforcement of the Edmunds Law in this District. The law was made for Mormons in Utah, but it is equally useful as a corrective of morals in this city. The penalty of one year in the penitentiary is none too severe, and it is hoped will serve as a warning to others. Iniquity in high places has ever been the bane of this city, especially to its social purity. The law that was made for Mormons ought surely to be enforced in the city that enacted it.

H. H. HINMAN.

Secretary Lamar has just made an important land order revoking the indemnity lands granted by Congress to the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company and throwing open to settlement untold millions of acres; in this case alone, twenty-five or thirty million acres are restored to the public domain, not to mention a number of other land grant railroads similarly affected. With the exception of the few who are personally or professionally interested, this decision is received with general approval, as the popular opinion that the railroads have received too many concessions and privileges from the Government is well founded. The meeting of the International Medical Congress, to be held here next month, is looked forward to with much interest and extensive preparations have already been made for the reception and entertainment of the delegates, the number of whom are variously estimated from three to five thousand. Already the names of several hundred distinguished foreign physicians have been registered for attendance, and there can be no doubt that the United States will be largely represented. That important beneficial results to science and the healing art will follow this convocation of savants there can be no question.

Public interest in that historic building, Ford's theatre, where the lamented Lincoln was assassinated, has been revived by the removal from there of the Medical Library and the Army Medical Museum to the splendid new structure erected for the purpose near the National Museum building. It required several men and drays a number of days to remove these vast collections. The library contains 85,000 volumes and 113,000 pamphlets and its growth is continual and progressive.

OUR CINCINNATI LETTER.

CINCINNATI, O., Aug. 23, '87.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—Last Thursday afternoon I heard Rev. A. B. Leonard, D. D., on the "Upas Tree." He described the roots and branches of the liquor traffic. He had two objections to the Dow law: 1. The Sabbath opening clause. If the Legislature should give municipal authorities the privilege of allowing their people to steal on Sabbath provided they paid a tax, the Christian citizens would rise in indignation. We will not allow the Eighth Commandment to be set aside. But when a similar assault is made on the Fourth Commandment we are perfectly complacent. 2. It involves complicity with the liquor business. A politician said: "You tax dogs. Some dogs kill sheep. Therefore you are a party to sheep-killing." The doctor unraveled the sophistry thus: There are three classes of dogs, good dogs, valueless dogs and vicious dogs. The third class represents the saloon, which is evil and only evil continually. Now, should the Legislature say, "Let owners of vicious dogs pay $100 tax and they can turn their dogs loose upon the flocks for 365 days with perfect impunity," then you would have a parallel. He spoke for two hours. His speech was a power for good. He had 600 people listening.

I spoke in the evening to the same number on "The Relation of the State to Public Morality." On Saturday I spoke at a Prohibition basket meeting in Selma. Fully 600 people listened for more than an hour on the basis of our temperance reform. The prohibition wave in Ohio is rising. Bro. Hughes predicts a vote of 60,000 this fall. That will make victory secure. On Sabbath morning I preached in the Clifton United Presbyterian church, Rev. Bailey, pastor. I do think this brother has the happiest situation in the whole country. I was happily surprised in meeting Mrs. Bradfute, a co-worker in the Cedarville public schools and the best teacher in the State.

At 3 p. m. I preached in the Friends' church in Selma. Uncle Henry Kyle drove me over and it required pushing his horses to make it. I preached again at this place at 7:30 p. m. I was entertained at the home of Mr. Albert McDorman, my former pupil in Cedarville. Going back over these scenes of my childhood brings many fond recollections to view. Saturday night I slept where the first seven years of my life were spent. I am constantly meeting friends and relatives among whom my first twenty years were passed. They are true as steel. God's command has been made good.

The paragraphs in my article of August 18th, 2d page and 2d column, relating to Egypt and Greenland, are quoted verbatim from Nelson, a fact overlooked by the type setter. J. M. FOSTER.

OUR BOSTON LETTER.

REV. DR. MINER, THE THIRD PARTY CHAMPION, AND THE TEMPERANCE REPUBLICAN ATHLETES.

Dr. A. A. Miner is not an entire stranger to the Cynosure. By distillers and saloon-keepers he is not less known, hated and feared than by the temperance Republicans of this State. A Universalist, yet he has immortalized his memory by the declaration that "if there is no hell there ought to be one for rum-sellers." He is one of the most persevering and influential Prohibitionists in this commonwealth. As pastor of one of the wealthiest churches in this city, and being recognized as one of the deepest thinkers, his influence extends far beyond the limits of his own denomination. When the doctor speaks he has something to say worth hearing, especially on temperance matters whether it is relished by all that hear or not.

Never did pugilist strike his opponents more squarely and fairly between the eyes than the doctor recently struck the Anti-Saloon Republican leaders, the honorables Dawes, Hoar and Long. Those Republican athletes were uncompromisingly handled without gloves. After this bout the doctor must be acknowledged a champion in the ring of political criticism.

Dr. Miner physically is looked upon as spare, and his appearance does not belie him; he spares nobody when he thinks a principle is at stake. Neither does he belie his name. With pick and shovel he digs into the Republican mine and throws out its pseudo ore, showing the descriptive pamphlets of that party to be "deceptive and misleading."

In reply to a manifesto recently given to the Republicans of this State Dr. Miner wrote an open letter which has been published in the daily papers of this city, a copy of which I append in full:

To Hon. Henry L. Dawes, Hon. George F. Hoar, Hon. John D. Long and seventeen others, lay and clerical: GENTLEMEN:—Your recent manifesto to "Temperance Republicans of Massachusetts" reflects upon the action of the Prohibition party in a manner that calls for remark. Your document is well written and plausible, but deceptive and misleading in its positions. Had it no clerical names attached it would be a less palpable affront to the Christian conscience of the Commonwealth. Such is the wont of politicians.

It is noticeable that you do not assume to speak in the name of the Republican party, but only of a fraction of that party, the "Anti-Saloon Republicans," and their number you leave very uncertain. You imply, it is true, that the 129 who voted for the "submission of the amendment resolve" are all opposed to the saloon. Nothing can be more deceptive. It is well known that many of them favored the resolve simply on the ground that the people have a right to pass upon the question; and many others, it is believed, favored it, hoping that by some chance, through rejection by the people or otherwise, the Republican party might be rid of this deus in vultu. Your party convention did not favor the "amendment" itself, but simply favored submitting the question to the people, leaving you entirely at liberty to oppose the measure when it should come before the people, as your brethren have done in Michigan, Texas and other places.

One would conclude from the tone of your appeal that the Democratic party of Boston is responsible for the liquor selling of Boston. The truth is, the authority on this subject, as you well know, gentlemen, is not in any degree in the hands of the city government of Boston, but wholly in the hands of the Republican party of the State. The governor appoints the police commissioners, the commissioners grant the licenses and control the police force, executing the law or leaving it unexecuted, as they choose. Not a single saloon in Boston carries on the licensed liquor business without the direct sanction, backing and protection of the immediate head of your party in the State. If, then, you wish the number of licenses diminished, why is it not done?

One thing, gentlemen, you make clear—your hatred of the Democratic party. Of this I have nothing to say. But if the Democratic party is the great rum power in the State, as you allege, it is plain that the Republican party is its agent, since it grants all the licenses. This is a "cold fact."

Besides, what claim has the Republican party for the support of Prohibitionists? When did that party ever espouse prohibition in Massachusetts? When did it repent of having destroyed the best prohibitory law ever placed upon the statute book, and under which your party came into power? When did Senator Dawes or Senator Hoar declare himself a Prohibitionist? In what year of Governor Long's administration did he recommend the enactment of a prohibitory law? If your party is really anxious for prohibition, why did you not pass a prohibitory law at the late session of the Legislature? You gave almost a two-thirds vote for the submission resolve, and claim that as a real honor to your party as a prohibitory party; if this vote was genuine, and if your claim is not an empty and hollow claim, why did you not enact a prohibitory law which would require only a majority vote? The truth is, gentlemen, we have "summed you and wintered you," and you cannot be depended on to do any effective work in suppressing saloons. In two instances in the last campaign Prohibitionists, when assured of the reliable and prohibitory character of two of your candidates, voted for them, and were betrayed in both cases. And no candid man, with his eyes open to all the facts, can read your paper and fail to perceive that it is not prohibition, but the Republican party, you are laboring to secure. Nor can you do otherwise and live. You must keep in line with the Republican party of the nation. The national party is not and cannot be made a Prohibition party. All hopes built upon it have been and will continue to be disappointing. Its death, followed speedily by the death of the Democratic party, is the only hope for an honest prohibitory law, thoroughly executed.

The Democratic party South, after all your charges against it, is a better temperance party than the Republican party North. It better executes the laws it has. Neither will join the other, North or South. From both good men must and will come out, suppress their long-cherished hatreds and join hands to save the nation from the present corruption of our politics on the one hand, and the indescribable curse of liquor on the other.

A. A. MINER.

After reading that sledge hammer epistle, confidence in humanity increases. We should not forget, however, that it is Christianized humanity. As we read those bold and truthful utterances we are encouraged to believe that men who have the spirit of Wendell Phillips are not all dead. Let all Prohibitionists hold up the hands of this man so devoted to a most noble cause. D. P. MATHEWS.

—A force of $2,000 colporteurs distribute sermons among the non-church-going people of Berlin, Germany. More than one hundred thousand sermons are thus distributed each week.

—More than one-half of the Congregational ministers in the United States engaged in pastoral work are home missionaries—1,571 in all, and the proportion is constantly increasing.

—The churches of Philadelphia have formed an Evangelical Union. A conference will be held in October, and plans for a regular city campaign next fall and winter are already in active preparation.

CORRESPONDENCE.

NO REINFORCEMENTS FOR FINCH.

MT. WASHINGTON, CHELSEA, Mass., }
Aug. 20, 1887.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—A copy of the latest shining of thine unveiled face, of the 18th inst. (2 Cor. 3:18), reflecting as in a mirror the glory of the Lord of truth and light, is just received, and, as always, with much joy. I was interested to read on page 8: "Mr. Stewart wrote us to send a delegation by all means; that we could co-operate with them on the principle that none should be nominated by the convention but those who did not belong to secret orders, or who would withdraw from all such orders when nominated."

A little further on you tell us that Pres. C. A. Blanchard, as representative of the American party, opposed to the unconstitutional titles of nobility and privileged orders, which oath-bound secret organizations busy themselves with creating and sustaining, received a cordial greeting from the Prohibition Home Protection Convention of 1884, till he said, "We hold that men who are under special secret obligations to one portion of the community are unfitted to rule over the whole." Then John B. Finch exclaimed from back near the gallery, "I object! I object!"

Wm. McK. Gatchell, Secretary of the National Prohibition Bureau, quoted in the last issue of the Voice published the 18th inst., calls John B. Finch the "official head of the Prohibition party." As chairman of the national executive committee of the prohibitory party, Finch may be said to be its official head. But it is not at all necessary that anti-secretists should consent for a moment to regard him as their representative head in temperance work. The Voice, on page 4 of its issue of the 18th, prints an urgent editorial under the caption, "Wanted Reinforcements." The article closes by declaring, "The Prohibition party must have reinforcements. Will it appeal for them in such a fight for such a cause in vain?"

Any party that attempts to engineer the temperance work of our country under the guidance of sworn secretists, certainly should appeal in vain to anti-secretists for their support of such engineering.

The Voice begins its appeal with the sentence, "The bravest general and the bravest army that ever fought a battle find themselves at times in a position where it is necessary to signal, 'We must have reinforcements or we must succumb.'" This may be the situation of the prohibitory party with John B. Finch as its "official head." But Christ's true witnesses will not succumb to foes without or traitors within on any temporizing plea, for they know full well that He who shall come will come, and that quickly, and that His reward is with Him, but it is ours to see to it that when He comes He find faith on the earth.

It was my joy again last Lord's day to preach Christ to many hundreds on Boston Common and in Chelsea Square. The previous Lord's day the Master enabled me to speak for him on Franklin Park and in Depot Square, Jamaica Plain, Boston, to large and attentive audiences, with but little interruption from the police. The government has not yet permitted my cases to come to jury trial, though placing me under $150 fines and costs for preaching three times, and requiring $800 bail from six bondsmen for my appearance at the June and July terms of the Superior Court to prosecute my appeal. The government continued the cases without trial from the June and July terms, and did not place them on the docket at all for this month. Praise the Lord for his Word which is not yet bound! As ever your brother in Christ,

WM. F. DAVIS.

THE REAL CAUSE.

JOHNSBURG, N. Y.

I have been somewhat interested in the opinions advanced why the masses neglect religious services in our churches. We must face the facts in the case. While we must admit the statement true yet the real cause must be given.

When the people attended divine services more generally than now we marked the fact that members of the church would take their children with them and very early indoctrinate them; consequently they became regular attendants. Now the Sabbath-school has largely taken the place and the children are hardly expected to remain in preaching services. The differences now have grown too wide to unite them. Many who teach in the Sabbath-school do not stay for services. The lessons are hurriedly said, and the Sabbath-school has ceased to be what it was once.

Let pastors and church members insist on bringing the children as formerly and we will soon have the masses back again. God help us! I have been mortified in seeing giddy young men and girls teach in the Sabbath-schools, dressed in style, and as destitute of piety as worldlings generally are; and what can we expect but just such a harvest as we now see?

When I was a boy I attended Presbyterian Sabbath-school, and then, without lesson leaves or picture papers, we had the New Testament, and we were taught that going to church was a duty and that the Sabbath was holy. God has never given anything to take the place of preaching the Word, and when the Sabbath-school takes the place, as it seems to do, we must not look for the masses. I verily believe that if the church would agree to abandon Sabbath-schools, and each parent as formerly insist on the children going to church, we would see sounder theology and a cleaner religion. I am not opposed to Sabbath-schools, but to the manner in which they are generally conducted. AMBIDEXTER.

ST. JOHN IN PENNSYLVANIA.

MOUNTAIN PARK, Pa.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—May I, through your columns, make a brief report of the Mountain Park excursion of August 9th. The excursion itself was a pleasant one. The day was a magnificent one, and everything, nearly, in harmony with the day. The very air inspired us, and the occasion enthused us. We have attended several political meetings, but excepting those connected with the N. C. A. movement, never were at such a political gathering as this. In a multitude of many thousands we saw no signs of intoxicants, heard not a profane word, and saw no rudeness of any kind. Report said saloonists had promised—rather threatened—to send up a legion of devils—beer kegs. They did not manifest themselves as bad things are wont to do. Corrupt things must give vent to bad odors. The dominant political parties could not have such a meeting from the very nature of the case. The quality of the mass is in the quality of the units composing it. This meeting drew together the best moral and religious element in the land. Looking out on the faces of the multitude you see a select army, the Gideons and Daniels of the country and cities round about, martyr stuff, gathered in by God's great spiritual magnet, moral truth. The flashes of soul-stirring truths were like flashes of lightning on the midnight sky, or, perhaps, more like the dawn of morning as to lasting effect.

The speakers were Mr. Fanning, Mrs. Hoffman and J. P. St. John. About 11 A. M. the exercises opened with prayer, when Fanning took the stand and poured forth a stream of truth backed by well-selected facts and spiced by an exhaustless fund of wit and humor. After recess and refreshments at 1:30 P. M. Mrs. Hoffman of the W. C. T. U. used more than an hour to the satisfaction of the large audience. Her points were well chosen and ably sustained. Her arraignment of the church in its cowardly and idolatrous policy was severe, but truthful and just. Her ability is apparent. Then came ex-Governor St. John, laboring under much pressure, evidently, from hard work and a severe cold, he nevertheless came freighted with truth pointed with telling facts and anecdotes. Without disparagement to other excellent things, we could but feel that the "best of the wine came at the last of the feast." Some have a faculty to be obscure, but St. John is the opposite of this. If you find any difficulty in following him, it arises from the depth and rapidity of his thoughts, which are like a deep and swift stream. An attentive listener cannot fail to be impressed and enlightened on any subject he touches. I sincerely wish he could reach the ears of all the clergymen. He could teach them how to preach. God has magnetized him by his truth in soul and body, and he is a native-born reformer. He has thrown the electric fire into the souls of thousands of people by his visit to Mountain Park. May God give him wisdom and prudence to keep him from wearing himself out too soon. We greatly fear he cannot endure the strain of brain and nerve demanded by his present efforts. We cannot afford to lose him. I am convinced God will use him effectively to the pulling down of the strong holds of darkness and prejudice. Let all reformers pray for him. He is free from the lodge, and all temperance people can work with him and work in their own way.

NOTES FROM OLD ORCHARD.

OLD ORCHARD, Maine.

The second convention conducted by Rev. A. B. Simpson of New York began July 31 and continued ten days. August 1 found me on my way there, and on reaching the grounds I heard a lady speaking in such thrilling tones and with such marked wisdom that I was at once impressed she had been taught of God; and so it proved, for it was no other than Miss Carrie Judd of Buffalo, New York. She edits a monthly journal, Triumphs of Faith, and the book, "The Prayer of Faith," is the account of her remarkable healing. Two hours in the morning a large class meeting in the Tabernacle learned much from Rev. H. W. George of ancient geography and history to fit them for usefulness in the future. Questions and criticisms were freely answered and none but those utterly careless could listen and not learn. Later Rev. Mr. Simpson often would give the spiritual significance of the first Old Testament books as portraying the Christian life in its different stages. From his earnest study and deep experience he was able in a masterly manner to "bring forth things new and old" to instruct, encourage and guide believers into the truth as it is in Jesus. At 2 P. M. there was testimony meeting, where any might tell of God's dealings with them, and often it was of both, to the edifying of the saints of God. Then followed preaching or Bible reading on different phases of the divine life in the soul and also on Christian work at home, foreign missions, divine healing and the coming of our Lord.

On August 5th there was an anointing service for those desiring to take Jesus as their healer. It was a solemn yet joyful sight to see nearly three hundred persons thus commit themselves to God in a new and sacred relation, for no one can honestly and intelligently attend to this duty without being drawn nearer to God than ever and realizing his blessing in large measure, and doubtless many hearts were encouraged to live hereafter "by the faith of the Son of God."

Many honest Christians fear fanaticism, but Mr. Simpson's manner and teaching are the farthest removed from anything of the kind, as he seems to be a man of rich and varied spiritual experience, of excellent judgment and sound sense, the whole man, body, soul and spirit, imbued and saturated with the spirit of the Master who humbly and earnestly "went about doing good." The workers and the great congregations seemed to be of one mind and the promise of the Spirit's presence was fulfilled abundantly. Two inquiries for the Question Box related to Freemasonry, but the answers manifested the power of the Secret Empire, though one speaker referred to secret societies with disapproval; yet we hope the time will soon come when the testimony in these meetings will be more clear-cut and definite than it now is. May the Holy Ghost shine on the "hidden works of darkness," and enlighten hearts now "holden with cords," till the separation which God demands takes place; "then shall ye be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord." 2 Cor. 6:17, 18. Let us thank God and take courage.

PRESIDENT FINNEY'S THANKS FOR RAIN.

EDITORS CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—I have been much interested in Rev. C. C. Foote's account of moral heroes as published in your paper. As they have passed, and are passing away, may God raise up a host of moral heroes capable of coping with the evils of these times. Special allusion having been made to President Finney in a late Cynosure, I wish to state a few of my recollections of his gifted ministrations. Surely, he was a workman who had no need to be ashamed. I first heard Mr. Finney preach in 1844, twice on each Sabbath, and he usually lectured on Thursday also. I now regard the privilege of listening to his instructions as one of the greatest blessings of my life.

One occurrence I distinctly recollect. It was in the summer of 1852, I think. The weather had been very hot and dry for a long time, when one Sabbath morning as we were assembled for worship, the heat being very intense, with what humility Mr. F. acknowledged the sins of the people, their great need, their utter helplessness, even the cattle venting in the street for want of water! After commencing his discourse, the clouds seemed to gather, and soon we had a most plentiful shower. As the large windows were being closed Mr. Finney, looking on this side, then on that, remarked, "I think we had better thank God for the rain, and closing the Bible, opened the hymn-book and read the hymn commencing—

When all thy mercies O my God,
My rising soul surveys,
Transported with the view I'm lost
In wonder, love and praise.

After singing, the services closed with a benediction; the effect, far more impressive than a protracted sermon at that time, could have been.

BIBLE LESSON.

STUDIES IN THE NEW TESTAMENT.

LESSON XI.—Sept. 11.—Golden Precepts.—Matt. 7 1-13.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Therefore all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them.—Matt. 7: 12.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

COMMENTS ON THE LESSON BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. Harsh Judgment Condemned. vs. 1-5. We are all prone to pass severe and hasty judgments on the faults of others, and the more there is to condemn in ourselves, the more free we are to condemn our fellow-beings. But our Saviour does not mean that we should become apologists for iniquity. They who pity most deeply the degraded slaves of drink, and are working hardest for their rescue, are the most unsparing in their denunciations of the saloon. And the men and women who are fighting against the lodge, do it because they hate Masonry, not because they hate Masons. In reality they show their love for the misguided devotees of the secret orders by faithfully warning them of their guilt and danger. What is here alluded to is personal judgment—the arrogating to ourselves what is God's especial prerogative. It needs infallible wisdom to judge our fellow-being as well as infinite knowledge, and when we know so little about his inward trials and temptations, and are so inconsistent in our own lives, the sin of usurping a place that belongs only to God, may well be to the fault we condemn as a beam to a mote.

2. Judiciousness in Teaching Divine Truth. v. 6. While the field is the world and we are commanded to preach the Gospel to every creature, we are to use what has been called "sanctified common sense," and not waste our labors fruitlessly on those who make of sacred things only a mock and a jest. We cannot create what does not exist. If a man is absolutely without spiritual perceptions how shall we teach him spiritual truth? He will prefer a falsehood. No matter what divine pearls we may cast before him he will be true to his swinish nature and trample them under his feet.

3. The Privileges of God's Children. vs. 7-12. A system of ethics so severely pure and lofty might seem too much so for human attainment, were we not told where all wisdom and strength can be had for the asking. Our Heavenly Father is not a Father in name only. He is the divine Reality of Fatherhood, of whose love even that of the tenderest earthly parent is but the image and shadow. His royal treasure houses are always open to his children. Reformers are often pitted because they seem to be waging such an unequal warfare. They are constantly taunted with the fewness of their numbers, and the temptation is often great to make unworthy concessions and compromises, in order to obtain a larger following. Far better for the Prohibitionists to pray a little harder and fight a little longer than to seek to affiliate with the Knights of Labor. To gain in numbers by the sacrifice of principle is to practically avow belief in the infidel saying that "Providence goes with the strongest battalions." Therefore, because we are the children of such a Father, free to claim at all times his kingly bounty, we must apply the royal law of love in all our intercourse with others. Our own purer ideals, higher aims and clearer light must govern our every word and deed. From such principles must grow the only perfect human society—the socialism of Christianity.

From Peloubet's Notes.

Vers. 1, 2. There is a tendency, even among fairly good people, to judge others, to impute wrong motives to them, to say that they give to be seen of men, or hold certain opinions because they are not independent, or take certain courses because they dare not do otherwise.

We may expect, in the end, to receive from society the measure we give to it,—love for love, hate for hate, help for help.

Those who are most ready to condemn others, thereby proclaim that they are probably worse than those they condemn.

Harsh judgment of others is a worse sin than the sins judged in others.

Vers. 3-5. The wicked are apt to rejoice when they can find a fault in those who profess better things.

The true Christian desires more to be rid of his own sins than to condemn the sins of others.

Only those who have gained the victory over their own sins can help others to overcome theirs.

When we have repented and forsaken our sins, we desire more to help others than to condemn them.

Vers. 6. The best things of God cannot be understood by those who are ungoverned and sensual, as books cannot be understood by the ignorant, or the highest music or art by the untrained. We must first lead them to a higher nature, before we declare to them the highest spiritual truths.

Vers. 7-9. Those who are in earnest seek in every way to obtain the desired good.

Every true prayer is answered.

Ver. 11. We learn about our Father in heaven from our earthly relations.

The gifts necessary for existence are given without seeking; as light, air, the Word of God. But the best gifts in the best degree, come only by seeking; as the Holy Spirit, growth in grace, usefulness, understanding of the Word.

The true Christian tries to put in practice in his daily life the Saviour's Golden Rule.

—The Congregational, Presbyterian and Reformed churches in Japan are now united under what is known as the Synod of the United Church of Christ.

—Mr. Gladstone says that Wales is "the most Protestant country in the world;" and the Methodist Times of London says: "We believe there is not a Welsh-speaking Roman Catholic congregation in existence."

—A chain with all its links sound, except one, is not to be trusted. A pest-house with all its rooms disinfected, except one, is not a safe place to stay in. He who sinks within one inch of the rope which is thrown to him, perishes as surely as though he were in mid-ocean. To be only almost saved is to be wholly lost.

OBITUARY.

PROF. HENRY UPTON, one of the most prominent citizens of his county and State, died July 29, at his home near Pierce, Nebraska, and the respect of his neighbors was manifested by the attendance of over 500 at his funeral. The body was taken to Battle Creek, Mich., for burial. The funeral discourse, from which the following sketch is taken, was by a former pastor at Battle Creek, Rev. M. Noer of Wyandotte, Kansas.

He was born in Batavia, New York, in 1835, and was educated at Lima Seminary and Oberlin College, entering Yale College in 1856, but remaining only a short time. His failing health compelled him to forego the pleasure of completing his course. Yet, while in the institution, because of his great natural fondness for mathematics, he so mastered that branch that he was far in advance of the usual college course, and for this reason, soon after leaving the institution, was elected professor of mathematics in an Illinois College, a position which, however, he declined. He was also at this time engaged in writing a mathematical work, much of which now remains in manuscript. For the benefit of his health he went West in 1858 and passed several years near Marseilles, LaSalle county, Illinois, in farming and teaching. It was while here that he became acquainted with Miss Susan C. Osgood, whom, afterwards, August 9th, 1864, he married, and who proved to be to him a noble wife and devoted helper.

In August, 1862, he enlisted as a private in company D. of the 104th regiment, Illinois volunteers. At the battle of Chancellorsville, Va., May 3d, 1863, he was severely wounded, and taken prisoner. Being exchanged and furloughed, after a partial healing of the wound, he returned to the army; but being unable to endure the hardships of the service he was soon after honorably discharged, bearing the rank of First Lieutenant. His wound never healed permanently, was subject to several severe surgical operations, and was the cause of much suffering up to the time of his death.

After his discharge and marriage he returned to his old home in Batavia, N. Y., where he continued several years. He came West again and engaged in teaching in Andalusia and Rock Island, Ill. He became principal of the school at Milan, Ill., in 1871, and held that position until July, 1876, when for greater advantages he removed to Decatur, Michigan, and filled the principalship of the public schools there, until the summer of 1883. He was eminently successful as a teacher, inspiring his pupils with much of his own enthusiasm and energy, and exciting a strong and healthful influence upon their characters.

The confinement of the school room taking his strength and nervous system too much, and thinking that out-door labor would be more beneficial to him, he came with his family in July, 1883, to Pierce county, Neb., having in the year previous, while engaged in a lecturing tour, in this part of the State under the directions of the Woman Suffrage Association, been led to invest in lands just upon Pierce, the county seat. Here he engaged in his farming operations with energy and marked success, and enjoyed apparently excellent health for three and a half years. But about six months ago began the disease which, continually reducing his strength, and producing at times severe physical distress, finally ended his existence here, on the night of Friday, July 29th, 1887. His last hours were free from suffering, and he passed away as gently as "the wave dies along the shore." His wife and six children survive him, greatly mourning; the former, a husband whom she always admired and could trust, and the latter, a father whom they always loved and honored.

Mr. Upton was a true citizen. Not a citizen like some, who consider all involved in that position to consist simply in paying necessary taxes, and voting on election days, without regard to the men presented for office, or to the issue of the contest. He believed "that righteousness exalteth a nation." Hence, he felt it his duty to do all he could, as an individual, to lead the state to juster and nobler grounds, to promote its highest, truest welfare; and he strove to meet this duty by private conversation and public speech, by vote and money given, by prayer and sacrifices made when required. For this reason he threw himself, body and soul, into the temperance, woman suffrage, and anti-secrecy movements, as great and important reforms, as factors that would ameliorate and elevate the people, that would bring the state to that righteousness which would be productive of its well-being. Every one who came into contact with, or heard Mr. Upton, knows very well how clear and decided he was on these questions.

He was a noble, decided Christian. The religious impressions that led to his conversion were produced by the preaching of President Finney, while as a student at Oberlin he sat under that man's logical discourses. Though not immediately connecting himself with the church, because of his great dread of anything that looked like hypocrisy, yet in time he took the step and publicly identified himself with Christ's people. Since then he has been in connection with the church and has sought always to live to its honor and enlargement. He was not a Christian in name or on paper; but was a true, decided, practical, working, growing Christian; his religion was in his mind, in his heart, and in his conscience, and he endeavored to make its excellencies appear more and more in his life.

MRS. SARAH A. SMITH, wife of Rufus B. Smith, died at Round Grove, Whiteside county, Illinois, of consumption, on her sixtieth birthday, July 25, 1887. Mrs. Smith had been a patient sufferer from lung difficulties over seventeen years. She was converted to God about forty years ago, and loved God, his people, and his work, and especially his Word, which she was so fond of searching, and often was overcome with emotion as the light of God's truth shone upon her heart. The vanities of the world had no charms for her. She loved to deny herself and take up her cross and follow her Saviour.

She was deeply interested in the great reforms of the day as represented by the Cynosure, of which she had been an interested reader for many years. She was a devoted and earnest Christian, consistent in her life and triumphant in her death. She talked of her burial, and selected the text as calmly as she would talk about her business, and then said, "I am ready," and quietly passed away, without a struggle or a groan.

Rev. M. V. Clute preached an excellent discourse from the words of her selection: "I have fought a good fight, I have kept the faith." Truly, how much better to fight a good fight all along the journey of life and keep the faith, so we may be found ready when death shall call for us.

The American Party.

FIRST NOMINATION for President at Oberlin, Ohio, May 23, 1872.

PLATFORM ADOPTED at Chicago, June 28, 1872.

NAME ADOPTED at Syracuse, N. Y., June 3, 1874.

PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDATES:

1872—Charles Francis Adams and Joseph L. Barlow.

1876—James B. Walker and Donald Kirkpatrick.

1880—J. V. Phelps and Samuel C. Pomeroy.

1884—J. Blanchard and J. A. Conant nominated; the former withdrawing, Samuel C. Pomeroy was nominated. Both nominees withdrawing, the support of the party was generally given to John F. St. John and William Daniel, candidates of the Prohibition party.

AMERICAN PLATFORM.

ADOPTED AT CHICAGO, JUNE 20, 1884

Viewing with deep concern the corrupt and unsettled condition of American politics, and witnessing with alarm the fearful prevalence of crime and lawlessness by which our citizens are being arrayed in hostile bands, working secretly to compass political ends, a method directly and powerfully tending to increase corruption, to destroy mutual confidence, and hinder the progress of the Republic, and having no hope of adequate remedy for these evils from existing parties, and believing the foundation of a party based upon the fundamental principles of the Declaration of American Independence, both inevitable and indispensable:

We, therefore, a portion of the American people, believing with our fathers that we have our rights and liberties, not from men or parties, but from God; believing in the Christian marriage, and not in Mormonism; and believing in the religious democracy of the New Testament, and not in the despotism of the lodge; believing, also, with our Scotch and English ancestors, that civil government, though ordained of God, is "founded in nature, not in grace," and, therefore, that all have equal civil rights; while we abhor the idea of enforcing religion or controlling conscience by human laws and penalties as calculated to make hypocrites, not Christians, and saving of the days of priestism, the fagot and the stake, we at the same time as firmly believe that atheism and priestcraft are twins and both alike foes to human liberty and welfare. We further firmly believe that a government without God has none but lynch power, and is destitute of all legitimate authority to maintain civil order, to swear a witness, to try a criminal, to hang a murderer, to imprison a thief, and while we consider a government without God as a men usurpation, we regard all religions and worship invented by men, and so having no higher than human origin, as mere swindling impostures and cheats. We believe that peace and national arbitration as a means of perpetuating it; yet we as profoundly believe that the bravery and blood of our soldiers have bought us the peace which we enjoy, and we hold the memories of the dead and will be just to the claims of the living; and we take up and prolong the strain raised by the women of this country: "For God, and home, and native land," and trust that this beautiful and patriotic motto will soon be not only echoed by their places, but sustained by their votes.

We, therefore, solemnly adopt and present the following, as containing a brief synopsis of the principles of our government, by which we intend to be governed in casting our votes. We hold:

1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.
2. That the Bible should be the basis of all our laws, and literature in all our educational institutions.
3. That God requires, and man needs a Sabbath.
4. We demand the prohibition of the importation, manufacture, and sale of intoxicating drinks.
5. We hold that the charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.
6. We are opposed to putting prison labor or depreciated contract labor from foreign countries in competition with free labor to benefit manufacturers, corporations and speculators.
7. We are in favor of a revision and enforcement of the laws concerning patents and inventions; for the prevention and punishment of frauds either upon inventors or the general public.
8. We hold to and will vote for woman suffrage.
9. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by Articles 13, 14 and 15 of our amended National Constitution should be preserved inviolate, and the same equality should be extended to Indians and Chinamen.
10. That international differences should be settled by arbitration.
11. That law and other monopolies should be discouraged.
12. That the general government should furnish the people with an ample and sound education.
13. That it should be the settled policy of the government to reduce tariffs and taxes as rapidly as the necessities of revenue and vested business interests will allow.
14. That polygamy should be immediately suppressed by law, and that the Republican party is censurable for the long neglect of its duty in respect to this evil.
15. And, finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of electoral college, and a direct vote for President and Vice President of the United States.

HENRY L. KELLOGG.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 1, 1887.

It has several times during the last year been suggested that means should be taken to get, if possible, accurate statistics of the secret orders of this country. If we could secure even an approximation to this, the result would be appalling, and go far to enlist the religious press of the country in a discussion of the subject. Will not some wise statistician come to our aid? We are all so busy and borne down with work. Can not something be done by a division of labor? Will not the State Associations take up the subject and furnish something for the National Meeting in New Orleans next winter?

"Spiritual Philosophy" is becoming a generic title of devil-worship. It includes not only direct spirit worship, but everything which mesmerizes mind, from Mormonism to popery. The disciples of Garrison and Henry C. Wright, after slavery fell, went over by hundreds to the worship of familiar spirits, mesmerism, healings by spiritual magic, of one kind and another, until even insurance companies must have secrecy and nightly ceremonies to gain customers and give them a relish; and the press is open to every moon-struck madness which under the title of "Advanced Thought," addles, stupefies and corrupts mind.

THE WORST ENEMIES of reform in all ages have been those who, sincerely in the wrong, advocate it on unsound principles. The exodus of Moses, the reform under Luther, Cromwell's Commonwealth, and the infant free government of New England were protests against the terrible despotisms of priestism and monarchy. Aaron assailed Moses; Munzer, Stubner and Storck assailed Luther; Colonel Harrison and the Fifth Monarchists withstood Cromwell; and fanatics in New England assailed ministers in their churches and judges in their courts in the name of God. Yet these all, with a jumble of good principles and bad sense, hated worst those who most nearly agreed with them! Rev. Wm. T. Allan was one of the ablest and sweetest-spirited of the early Abolitionists. But Satan mingled "dead flies" in his good ointment. Under his pastorate in the First Congregational church of Peoria, women took their knitting to his meetings to show their approval of his protests against Sabbath-keeping pro-slavery churches. Mr. Allan himself became a Spiritualist, gave and published lectures against the atonement of Christ, left the ministry, and attended a funeral near Geneseo where an old farmer assured the mourners he had just seen the spirit of their dead mother. This farmer had lately thrown his infant to his hogs in a quarrel with his wife!

THE FUNERAL OF REV. I. A. HART, a former associate editor of the Cynosure, was last week attended in the Congregational church at Wheaton. Hon. B. C. Cook, who was his nephew by marriage, was present, and the body was borne to the grave by ministers of Elgin Association. The sermon was preached by Rev. Mr. Hibbard, a former pastor of the church, who gave an extended and interesting account of Mr. Hart's early ministerial labors, his labors as a co-editor of the Cynosure, and his earnest and conscientious opposition to the lodge. Mr. Hibbard, himself a Mason, had been urged by Mr. Hart to renounce and oppose Masonry, which Mr. Hibbard declined to do, though agreeing with Mr. Hart in condemning it. Mr. Hart had taken six degrees, but quit the lodge, as did Mr. Finney, in 1826, the year of Morgan's murder. After he had been openly committed against Freemasonry more than fifty years a sense of personal danger from its cut-throat oaths still affected him; and he has often assured us that he never walked the streets of a city by night, but the thought occurred to him that he might meet the penalties of those oaths. He has gone where assassins cannot come.

PROF. HENRY UPTON.—The reform has lost in Nebraska one of its ablest and most devoted patrons in the death of Prof. Henry Upton. His abilities, his experience, his early education, his fearlessness for Christ, his devotion to the truth would have made him a noble leader in a noble State, when his health had become restored as he hoped it would be. Some time since he wrote to this office: "I believe the time will come when I can do more for the great cause in which you are engaged than merely subscribing for the paper. In this locality the ministers are at the root of the evil. Weed them out and the misguided devotees of the secret lodge would see its selfishness and leave it." Seldom is it possible for the speaker on a funeral occasion to remark so frankly and truly as in the obituary on the 7th page of this number, on the record of the departed. It was grand testimony which Rev. Mr. Noerr could give, when, referring to Mr. Upton's labors for Christ against the liquor curse and other evils, he said: "The secret lodge system he believed an enemy of the family, and earnestly opposed it as false and injurious, yet always in a spirit of kindness, on account of the many warm friends who believed otherwise. On every occasion therefore that was proper, and in every way that he lawfully and courteously could, he sought to further these reform movements, and thereby aid in overcoming the evil, removing the wrong, and giving a just right to those who should enjoy it, and thus far make the State better and truer." May there be an host to rise up in Nebraska to take the place of this soldier of Christ whose well-fought battle is over.

THE AMERICAN PARTY.

Rev. H. H. Hinman gives a very sensible article elsewhere on the call for a National Convention to meet in Philadelphia Sept. 16th next. It purports to issue from 1017 Chestnut street, the headquarters of a new American party. This is the third attempt of the kind to appropriate the name "American" for a new party, ignoring the existence of our party formed at Oberlin, O., fifteen years ago: one started in California a year ago; another in Kansas, and now another in Philadelphia. Mr. Hinman's able analysis of the new platform makes another from us unnecessary.

The parties assuming the name "American" are not ignorant of our existence. Some of them have written to ex-Senator Pomeroy, both from Philadelphia and Kansas, earnestly requesting his presence at Philadelphia in September, and also at Springfield, Ill., in October following. The California movement is primarily anti-Chinese; the others are a medley of reform and anti-reform elements, including secret societies and other un-American doctrines mingled with some sound principles of reform. We are unwilling to think the movers are in combination with the lodges to kill the party opposed to them by filling the country with parties called "American," so that the public will not know which of several is meant.

Our course is to keep on the even tenor of our way as the original prohibition anti-lodge party, to attend all prohibition meetings, as invited by Hon. Gideon T. Stewart in 1884, and insist on the terms proposed by him, that no secretist shall be nominated for office by conventions in which we share; and by next winter a mass meeting can be called which may plan a vigorous application to the voters of the United States in the campaign of 1888. We have been expecting Dr. Stratton to call together the committee of which he is chairman to give advice what to do and how to do it. We hope by our next issue to give our readers something from that committee.

This formation of so many germinal parties shows that the sea of popular opinion is in motion. Let us, in a seaman's phrase, "jam the ship in the wind."

AN IRREPRESSIBLE CONFLICT.

Bishop Weaver presided in the White River United Brethren Conference met at Selma, Indiana, Aug. 10th, and representing sixty ministers and 7,000 church members. Rev. Mr. McKee compares Rev. Halleck Floyd to Andrew Johnson, which shows his malignity toward active opposition to Masonry.

In reviewing the ministry it appeared there was one Mason, one Odd-fellow, and several members of other secret societies in the churches, but all testified that anti-secret sentiment was growing. Bishop Weaver, instead of advising the ministers how to rid the church of secret societies, which as a man and especially as a bishop he was bound to do, confined himself to quibbling neutrality and hectoring opposition to the reform brethren. These are some of his utterances: "Well, brethren, formulate a resolution to fit the case as you understand it." This it was his business and duty to do. "Why did you not turn these brethren out before the last General Conference?" Why did not he see that they were turned out, as was his duty?

McNew had not circulated the church literature but had turned out a G. A. R. man. "All right," said Bro. Wilmore. Said the Bishop, "Do you think it 'all right' to disregard the Discipline?" This is like the rebels, who were great for the Constitution, while their guns were in battery to destroy the Union! With them the Constitution was to defend slavery and suppress abolition; with the Bishop the Discipline means protect Masonry.

Again the Bishop said: "You have had secrecy in this Conference for twenty years." Most or all these years he had been bishop. Has he moved a finger to put secrecy out of the churches? But now that some honest men wish to do so he twits them with not having done it before. And the ministers are confused and confounded by such conduct in their bishop, and in a body of sixty ministers measures were passed by six votes, the rest not voting. Bishop Weaver, who has the power, and is elected and consecrated to see the Discipline enforced against the lodge, sat throughout hectoring, objecting and confusing the brethren who wish to be rid of the lodge leprosy. If he had suggested a day of fasting for the casting out of Satan and a committee to visit and pray with the brethren ensnared by the lodges, every Christian among them would have left the lodge for the church.

This bishop's account must be fearful at the bar of Christ, whose name the lodge omits in quoting the Bible. Christ uttered his most terrible anathemas against such false church leaders. "Woe to you" are his words, "ye are as graves which appear not and they that pass over them are not aware of them." He prayed for his murderers to be forgiven, but worldling priests, who made void the law and kept their traditions, he sentenced to the most fearful punishment.

THE KNOW-NOTHING REVIVAL.

Dr. McGlynn, in the North American Review article on "The New Know-Nothingism and the Old," from which we make a considerable extract in this number, makes some vigorous charges against the Romish communion, which has just cast him out of its fellowship, although the ex-priest maintains that he is loyal to the principles of Catholicism. His statements of priestly aggression upon American institutions must be read of course with a remembrance of his present relations; but we are little inclined to doubt that his charges are true; and that the popular apathy toward these movements is as alarming as the activity of Rome.

Dr. McGlynn says that such measures as are now attempted by the hierarchy were not thought of in the times of the first Know-Nothingism, but he does not explain the present toleration and indifference. While the secret Native American or Know-Nothing party of 1833-6 maintained the same principles as the present movement, the force of its antagonism was spent upon the Romanists. Its principles were:

The Americans shall rule America.

The Union of these States.

No North, no South, no East, no West.

The United States as they are, one and inseparable.

No sectarian influences in our legislation, or in the administration of American law.

Hostility to the assumption of the pope, through the bishops, etc., in a Republic sanctified by Protestant blood.

Thorough reform in the naturalization laws (requiring 21 years' residence of all foreigners previous to voting).

Free and liberal educational institutions for all classes, with the Bible, God's Holy Word, as a universal textbook.

The new Know-Nothingism has been long festering in the irruptions of Kearney and O'Donnell in California, which have had no counterpart on the eastern shore of the country until the labor lodges, a vast majority of whose members are themselves foreigners, began to demand a check to the foreign tide, in order to secure for themselves a monopoly of labor. The fact that Romanism is strong in all these organizations, comprising nearly one half the Knights of Labor with Powderly at their head, fixes their relation to Rome. It will not be hostile. This marks the greatest difference between the new Know-Nothingism and the old.

This new movement began its Pacific organization last year, singularly not in San Francisco, but in the interior, the first meeting being held we believe in Fresno. The California members easily fall in with the idea of a national party, and adventurers in Philadelphia are ready to lead it. The "national committee" is located there. W. H. Hepburn is chairman; and is said to have money to set his party afloat on some sort of raft. J. W. Munyon is secretary, and his monthly filled with stock cuts is organ of the movement. Dr. E. W. Kirby is treasurer. We all remember Dr. Kirby and how he lost his pocket-book at the Chicago meeting of the American party in June, 1884, when Senator Pomeroy was nominated. If there were no other reason, the fact that Dr. Kirby is a prime mover in this organization is enough to load it with suspicion. They count Powderly and a million and a half others among their supporters. Powderly scorns them; they may secure the rest. The secretary thus voices their hopes to a New York Herald reporter:

We estimate that we will have about 160,000 at the very least. There are many patriotic societies which will join us immediately, although they will still preserve their distinctive organizations. The senior Order of American Mechanics numbers about 140,000, the junior order about 100,000, the Order of Minute Men about 600,000 throughout the rural districts of the East and West; the Senate also has about 600,000. The Patriotic Sons of America have several hundred thousand, and the Sons of Revolutionary Sires can probably muster 10,000 more. In addition to these organizations a great many grangers will join us.

The secretary further enlarges upon the principles of the movement by saying:

So far as the restriction of immigration is concerned the new party would impose a tax of $500 upon every person who lands in this country, and in addition he would be required to obtain a permit from foreign consuls, based upon an accurate biography, to be furnished by himself and by reputable citizens of the neighborhood in which he had lived. Thus paupers, criminal and political agitators could be excluded. A foreigner would have to be a resident of this country twenty-one years before he could vote. It is argued that the naturalizing of a foreigner after a few years' residence gives him an advantage over a man of American birth.

This pseudo American party reveals its nature most surely, however, in its dependence on secret societies. Munyon mentions several: The Senate, National Minute Men, Order of American Mechanics and Junior do, Patriotic Order Sons of America and Sons of Revolutionary Sires. His paper is organ and recruiting agency for several of these orders. The National View, an old Greenback sheet of Washington is claimed to be the national organ of the movement as developed in Kansas. Col. Lee Crandall is its editor, a lodge man and hard drinker. The American Flag of New York is also, as we learn from editor Bailey of the American, an avowed secret society organ. The call invites other lodges to join them:

Especially do we invite the representatives and members of the following organizations to meet and co-operate with us in said convention—viz.: The Patriotic Order Sons of America, the Order of American Mechanics, the Junior Order of United American Mechanics, the Order of Deputies, the Sons of the Revolutionary Sires, the Political Alliance, the United Minute Men, the various granges and all other orders and organizations whose principles and sentiments will enable them to work in the American party on the foregoing basis.

They may get some aid also from the anti-Romanist orders: the Orangemen, American Protestant Association, Knights of the Mystic Chain, United Protestant League, Templars of Liberty and Order of the American Union. If they can combine these forces with the labor organizations they might well congratulate themselves as manipulators of secretism, and Finch's Good Templar, anti-black combination would be cast into the shade.

But such a movement, based upon half-truths and no-truths, such as would be acceptable to all this swarm of secret orders, can never prosper, and those who for the moment are led to follow such a leading will justly deserve the confusion and contempt in which the whole affair will end.

—The Catholic Review declares that the cable dispatch from Rome announcing the approval of the Knights of Labor by the Pope to be a canard, no such decision having been given.

—Bro. H. H. Hinman wrote from Washington Friday, hoping to leave for East Tennessee that day or at latest by Monday, to renew the campaign for Christ and the prohibition of lodge and liquor in that hopeful field.

—Judge Goodwin, an eminent jurist of Michigan, died at Detroit on Friday in his 88th year. He studied law in the office of John C. Spencer before the latter was employed by the State of New York to prosecute the abductors of Morgan, and, doubtless, could have given many incidents of those days.

—Rev. J. W. Logue, a recent contributor to the Cynosure, and for years a steadfast friend of our reform at Northfield, Ohio, has just removed to Monmouth, Ill., to reside with a daughter who is an esteemed member of the Monmouth College faculty. He kindly called on the Cynosure on his way to his new home.

—A note from Bishop Milton Wright on the Pacific coast says that since meeting the Oregon United Brethren Conference in June he has been visiting the different congregations in the conference and during the middle of August held a camp meeting at Philomath. He is to assist Rev. D. Stuck in a protracted meeting at Biggs Station, Cal., during the second week in September, and meets the California conference at Selma on the 29th. He reads the Cynosure with interest.

—Mrs. E. S. Kimball of New Hampshire expresses the desire of hundreds of our readers in her request for a new tract to meet the question of secrecy in the prohibitory movement. We cannot do better than to give her words: "Can the N. C. A. do better than to publish a four-page tract containing the letters of Mrs. Blanchard, Miss Willard, and Miss Flagg's open letter to the Union Signal a year since? It seems to me it would contain unanswerable arguments, expressed in words of such love to men and loyalty to Christ that every anti-secret woman would rejoice to circulate it among her less enlightened sisters,—and brothers, too. I should like a hundred to distribute at the N. H. annual meeting."

REFORM NEWS.

THE STATE CONVENTIONS.

ILLINOIS.

The Illinois State convention will be held in Belvidere, Boone county, probably September 21 and 22.

The Wisconsin meeting will probably be held the week following.

IOWA.

For several years past the Iowa State meeting, auxiliary to the N. C. A., has been held on the last Tuesday of August; but at the meeting last year at Birmingham, it was voted to hold the next meeting at College Springs, and in order that the college students might receive some of the benefits of the meeting, the time was fixed for the third Tuesday of October next. Inasmuch as we have a State agent in the field, he will be able to touch up the memories of the friends of the cause. Let us all make our arrangements to be present to help on the good cause. Masonry has felt the force of our attacks and has shown signs of weakening; let us keep on the good work and not allow the minor orders to overwhelm us.—Free Press.

ANNUAL MEETING OF THE N. H. C. A.

NEW HAMPSHIRE.

The eleventh annual meeting of the New Hampshire Christian Association will be held with Bro. C. L. Baker's church in Manchester on the last three days of October. A partial and tentative programme is as follows: Address of welcome, Elder C. L. Baker; response, Pres. I. Hyatt; Work of the National Christian Association, Pres. J. Blanchard. Miss E. E. Flagg is expected to speak for the National W. C. T. U., Mrs. C. W. Bixby for the New Hampshire W. C. T. U., Miss Anna M. Ray for the Manchester W. C. T. U., Miss (Rev.) I. D. Haines will preach the annual sermon and lead the devotional meetings. Rev. E. W. Oakes will give "The Scriptural Basis of Divine Healing." President Hyatt will tell us "How to Overcome Evil." Other able and consecrated speakers have been invited and their names and themes will be announced as soon as possible. Reduced railroad fares expected. Entertainment free. We shall be glad to meet delegates from all the New England States. The same Lord that last year vindicated his own truth and filled the hearts of his people with unspeakable joy and peace we expect to be present with mighty power to bless and save from sin. Let us not put our trust in learned and able speakers but in the Lord of Hosts who always leads his people to victory. S. C. KIMBALL, Secretary.

MARSHALING THE FORCES IN IOWA.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—From Manchester I went to Springville and called upon that veteran reformer, Bro. D. D. Gibson. He cheerfully renewed his subscription to sustain the Iowa Association in carrying forward the reform work for another year. While here I called upon Dr. Watson of the Friends church, who is in hearty sympathy with the work of Christ and his church against the lodge.

From Springville I went to Marion and visited Joseph G. Brush, who so nobly sustained the annual meeting when it was held at Marion some years ago. From Marion I went to a new village between there and Cedar Rapids, and called upon brethren Lutz, Maudsley, and others, some of whom subscribed for the Cynosure and others for the support of the State work. Among others I called upon a Presbyterian brother who expressed sympathy with the N. C. A. reform work. He said his minister was opposed to Freemasonry and had condemned it from the pulpit. A wealthy member of the church who is a Mason, commenting upon the utterances of his minister, said, "The less he has to say about Freemasonry the better it will be for him." The Lord hasten the day when his Word may be as fire shut up in the bones of his ministers to be faithfully declared against the false worship of the secret lodge system.

From this place Bro. Lutz took me in his carriage to Cedar Rapids where I met with I. Milburn who took me to his home. He subscribed for the Cynosure and also gave a donation to the Iowa Association. Before leaving Cedar Rapids I visited Samuel Heaton, a veteran reformer, who also gave a donation to the Association. Here, as well as at Marion, arrangements were made for future lecture work.

From Cedar Rapids I went to Springdale and stopped with Laurie Tatum over the Sabbath, preaching in the Friends church in the morning, and in the M. E. church in the afternoon, and delivering an address before the Springdale Christian Association at night. I worked in that community the next day and then went to West Branch. Friend Oliphant and Coggsall paid up their last year's pledges and cheerfully subscribed to carry forward the reform work through another year. Friend A. C. Staples and Wm. Townsend also subscribed to aid the Association, as did also Dr. James Staples.

From West Branch I went to Linton and called at the house of Rev. T. P. Robb, the pastor of the Sharon Covenant church, but found that he had been obliged to rest from his pastoral labors for a season on account of a throat difficulty, and had gone from home. I visited Rev. Mr. Dill of Mediapolis, the pastor of another Covenant church. His people handed me what was back on last year's subscription. Elder Montgomery will attend to collecting what is back on the subscription taken among Rev. Robb's people. The Covenanters and United Presbyterians of Morning Sun had forwarded their pledges to James Harvey of Pleasant Plain, the treasurer, before I came.

I had a pleasant interview with Rev. C. D. Trumbull, the secretary of the Iowa Association and pastor of the Covenant church of Morning Sun. He purposes to be at the annual meeting at College Springs in October. As Rev. Robb was away I thought best to defer my canvass, and came to Wayne township in Henry county, where I spent the Sabbath with Rev. Geo. Fry, preaching in the morning at North Wayne, and in the evening at a point midway between Crawfordville and Washington. On Saturday Bro. Fry took me around and I obtained subscriptions aggregating $33 for the support of the reform work for the coming year. I also obtained three new subscriptions for the Cynosure. Bro. J. K. Cooper, a Free Methodist, who subscribed 50 cents a month last year, was building a house when I called and I hesitated about asking him to renew his subscription, but he volunteered to do so. His brothers, A. M. and F. W. Cooper, cheerfully subscribed the same amount. In their case, also, it was a repetition of what they had done last year. Mr. H. VanSyoc subscribed also the same as promptly as a hungry man would obey a call to dinner. Surely Christ is touching the hearts of his people and moving them by the Holy Ghost to come up to his help against the Masonic anti-Christ. Of the Master it is said "he shall not fail nor be discouraged;" and if we wait upon our Lord he will renew our strength, and our zeal and courage will increase unto the end. The conspiracy of Satan to delude and destroy souls through the agency of the secret lodge system must be exposed. Who is for Christ against the idolatry and infidelity of Masonry? Who is for the Republic against the despotism of the lodge? Through one class of lodges Satan works to revive idolatry and spread deistical infidelity; through another he is working to inaugurate a reign of anarchy and terror.

The triumph of the lodge means victory for Satan over Christ; the triumph of the Gospel means peace; peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ; peace on earth, and good will among men. Fear not to stand with Christ against the lodge. Who is on the Lord's side? Who will work with Christ to deliver the church from the dominating and corrupting power of the lodge? Remember that when Christ is the leader and Satan is his foe, there can be but one issue to the conflict. Let us stand with Christ in the battle, assured that he will conquer.

C. F. HAWLEY.

REFORM NOTES.

ON THE TRAIN, Aug. 22, 1887.

At Martin, Allegan county, Michigan, is a large congregation of Psalm singers, where they tolerate no secret-society members, and where I addressed two fine audiences, and received a collection for National Reform. The pastor, Bro. Miller, and his right-hand man, Thos. Shepherd, made my stay here quite pleasant. Bro. Shepherd reads the Cynosure, and says the only anti-secret lecture they have had at Martin was from Bro. Hinman years ago, and the truth he uttered did not return void.

I next attended Island Park Assembly, at Rome City, Ind., and heard for the first time Rev. Sam. P. Jones. He gave one sermon, and as usual drew the

THE HOME.

HER MESSAGE.

Wounded in fight beside the Nile,
Out of the watching and the strife,
A soldier sought this English home
To spend his last few days of life.
So young, so brave, and yet he knew
The days were numbered he could live;
And glory seemed so vain a thing,
And fame could little comfort give.

Not fearing, but yet longing sore
For just one word of peace and love
That unto him, and him alone,
Might seem a message from above.
He sought it in a calm, fresh morn,
And in the sunsets' dying flame,
From holy priest, in holy book;
But it was thus the message came:

One summer eve he paused to rest,
Beside the church's holy place,
Just when the gloaming, still and dusk,
Threw over all its mystic glare;
Then came a little pleasant child,
And opened wide the church-yard gate.
"Do you not fear," the soldier asked,
"To cross when it is dark and late?"

She lifted up a smiling face,
And in a pleasant voice replied,
"Oh, no! besides, I have to cross;
My home is on the other side!"
Then on she went her lonely way;
Her form was lost amid the gloom;
She never knew her simple words
Had lit his pathway to the tomb.

He took the message, calm and sweet,
And ever after to his rest
He went with unreluctant feet.
The words went ringing in his heart;
They were his comfort and his guide;
And at the last he whispered clear:
"O soul, the road thou needst not fear;
"Thy home is on the other side!"

COLLEGE BOYS AND COLLEGE MEN.

BY MRS. A. E. KELLOGG.

CHAPTER VIII.—(Conclusion.)

[Class Reunion at W——town, Mass., June 9th, A.D. 187—. Present in the hotel parlor, Hon. John Baxter, William H. Harper and Judge Simms.]

Simms—"This is a delightful occasion, but it is sad to miss some members of our class who promised so well. Some have fallen by the way and others have failed—worse than failed! Harper, you are from Michigan. Can you tell me anything of George Green? I have heard nothing of him for years. The last time I saw him I feared he was not doing well. There was something about him that repelled me: I could scarce say what, for he was still a fine looking man. But his conversation and general appearance impressed me somewhat painfully, and my wife shared my feeling although she exerted herself to make his stay with us agreeable. His visit was during the State Fair. Yes, I had forgotten, I have seen him once since in Washington, but a very short interview proved that we possessed nothing in common, so I did not call upon him. And yet I am much his debtor. You may remember that we were great friends in our Junior year, and going to the bad fast enough, but his recklessness and wickedness converted me and we broke up our intimacy. How I wanted to save the girl he married! But a false sense of honor prevented me. Poor girl!"

Mr. Harper—"You may well say, poor girl! Yes, I know him well, and a more worthless, lost man I do not wish to see. They are separated now. She lived with him a bitter life until she saw her eldest son married and the father of three children, walking in his father's footsteps, her second son likewise; her eldest daughter, a lovely girl, like herself humiliated and heart-broken; the wealth which she had inherited from her father squandered, and her husband often deposited on the floor of the hall by his companions in a state of beastly intoxication. Driven at last to desperation, she applied for a divorce."

Mr. Baxter—I happened in the town on some legal business during the trial, and was horrified to find that the wretched man was my old class-mate. The evidence was the most sickening that ever polluted a court room, proving him to have been faithless in every relation and false to every trust. There was a little of the old cunning still in his eye, but it was more a leer than a dash such as it once was."

S.—"Had he grown old and bowed by his life of sin?"

Mr. B.—"No, he was bloated and gray, but his form was still good; you know he had a splendid physique, and he had never broken his constitution by manual labor."

S.—"And poor Susie Glenn! If I had only tried to save her! But I felt that because he trusted me I must not expose him. But perhaps it would have done no good. Her mother tried and failed. He was so plausible, you know, that Susie would have believed him against the world. Poor Susie! Did you see her, Baxter?"

Mr. B.—"Oh, no! I could not intrude upon her grief at such a time."

Mr. H.—"I was in the place with my wife not long ago; you know they were schoolmates. We took a carriage and drove about the town, and called for a few moments to see a lady bearing her name, but we should not have recognized her; she was so much changed. I enquired at the hotel about Green and was pointed to a man across the street who was shuffling along in slippers. They told me that he was often locked up and sometimes had not the means to buy a breakfast. Utterly lost!"

S.—"This is his harvest time. He used to say he was sowing his wild oats and it was nobody's business."

Mr. H.—"How was it, Simms, that Green was a benefit to you? I thought his influence anything but good."

S.—"Well, it was the this way: you know I have a keen sense of the ridiculous and a great love of fun, a bond which held together several congenial spirits in what was known to themselves as the 'Funny Club.' We met every week with the tacit understanding that our carousals were to be kept secret. We had literary exercises which were a mere farce, expensive suppers, costly wines, and fun at any price. Green was not as merry as many others, but he was a leading spirit in the club, always designing and worse than he seemed, not closely intimate with anyone but me,—and I have always despised myself for feeling a little proud of the distinction and for not discovering sooner the influence which I allowed him to exert over me. Our intimacy culminated when he began his courtship by a confidence which meant more extended use than comported with my self-respect. I did, however, help him to concoct an artful note to Miss Glenn which covered his designs. And I helped him also in the matter of his relation to Miss Noble. You know how long he devoted himself to her; so exclusively that it was supposed among her friends that an engagement existed between them. I think, like myself, she was proud of his partiality rather than deeply interested; but he was vain and supposed she would break her heart for him. Well, I helped him out of that; and I doubt if either she or the doctor know to this day of the little plot which brought them together. They were so admirably fitted for each other that they needed only to be brought into pleasant social relations in order to make the discovery for themselves, and I think they have been very happy and useful."

Mr. B.—"What a splendid fellow Glenn is! I knew him well when he was surgeon-in-chief for his department during the war, was often thrown in contact with him and visited his hospitals."

Mr. H.—"Yes, I liked Glenn as a youth, but was afraid he would be lost, as I saw the growing intimacy between him and George Green."

S.—"There was never the slightest danger. The intimacy was only apparent; it had no foundation, and was sought by Green as a means of reaching his sister and his father's money. But I did not tell you just how Green did me good. Well, I had been troubled in mind for some time about my course and what might be the end, and one evening I had been more thoughtful than usual, with a wavering determination to begin a new life, when Green came in with the reply to our note, as he called it, and so shocked me by his reckless speech, almost amounting to blasphemy, perverting Scripture and speaking irreverently of his father's prayers, that I felt impelled to throw him off, and I seemed to receive an impulse to a higher and a better life which I did not myself understand, but I think I do now. I believe it was God-given in answer to the prayers of my sainted mother. I never met the club again and I believe it was disbanded after some of the members had been expelled from college."

Mr. H.—"How well the doctor is looking; he does not grow old as fast as the rest of us; and what a brave speech he made this afternoon! How grand it seems to see such a man stand up before the world against wrong and sin. I thought of Luke, the beloved physician. I am told he is very wealthy."

S.—"Yes, he inherited money and has not wasted it. I suppose he will provide for his sister and her family if she will allow him. But I fancy she would be slow to accept help even from him."

Mr. B.—"Have you ever visited Glenn at his home?"

S.—"No; I have met him but seldom since we left college. They have visited us, but we have the pleasure of returning the visit in reserve."

Mr. B.—"A few years ago I was in Glenville and called upon him, leaving Mrs. B. at the hotel. They insisted upon sending the carriage for her, and we spent a most delightful day; and as I observed him in his beautiful home, surrounded by his happy family, resting evidently in the love of his charming wife, I assure you I was deeply interested; and especially when with reverently bowed heads all waited until he had asked the divine blessing at the table at dinner. I said to myself, Is this the fun-loving Hal of our college days? But I need not have been surprised for I remember bursting into his room with two or three others and finding him reading his Bible, and when one said, 'Hello! I did not know as you were one of the saints, Hal. How is this?' 'No,' he replied; 'I am afraid I am not; but I should conclude myself more than a sinner,—yes, a heathen, if I failed to study that book.' We left his room sobered and I never forgot the lesson. I made inquiries of others about him and found my highest impressions of him confirmed. One said, 'No man in our city is doing more good than the doctor. Himself full of health and spirits, his presence is like a ray of sunshine even in a cell where the out-cast suffers, for the poorer and more unfortunate the patient the more attentive and kind the doctor.' His eldest son has adopted his profession and is now in the office with his father and bids fair to prove a worthy successor to him."

Mr. H.—"How little one can tell among a class of boys who are going to be men and who are going to fail. I should have said that of all our class none promised better than George Green; perhaps a little wild, but a good scholar, or at least he did well in his class."

S.—"Yes, but no man understood class tactics better, or could make a good recitation on so small capital. He invariably copied his exercises from those of the boys and used a 'pony' for his translations when he had need, and very often got more credit from the professors and even the class than the man he stole from. As I look back I can see the secret of success and failure as I did not see it when it was before my eyes. Hal was a boy to be trusted always though so full of merriment as to be thought a rattle-brain, and even thought a little wild. Yet no one ever detected him in a mean act or heard him utter a profane word, and he was truth itself: while the basis of Green's character was selfishness. He was unscrupulous as to means, seeking his own pleasure at whatever cost to himself or others. And now we see the result in each case. One, a man honored and wise, rich and good; his children a crown to his manhood and his home a place of rest. The other, a besotted wretch, his wife broken-hearted, his children ruined, his home a desolation and his name a by-word, and his soul lost. What a lesson to the young might be drawn from the history of our class!"

Mr. B., (looking at his watch)—"Well boys, our train goes in just an hour. 'When shall we three meet again?'"

WAIT, WORK, HOPE AND SING.

BY I. N. KANAGA.

This is a wondrous world in which we live. We must needs do much at waiting as well as working. We must hope, too, and be strong as we tread amid the shadows and then indeed we may sing aloud for joy. We must necessarily wait the unfolding of the future and leave to God's wisdom and guiding hand to guide and rule evermore, for by nature we are not able to choose wisely for ourselves or to direct our own feet in the path of duty and safety. Then again, if we are children of the Most High and desire to renew our spiritual strength or abound in the Christian graces, we must diligently "wait on the Lord." Then, beloved, evermore "wait on the Lord and be of good courage."

Of work there is an abundance of it in the world. This is part of the curse of sin—part of the boon of divine favor. By diligence in business with the special benediction of God we may confidently expect "every good thing" for both worlds. Then, while God works in us, we should carefully work out our salvation, as the promises are all to them who work and wait for the salvation of God.

I would do, I would go, would have, would seek, would know—And thou would have me wait and work at little things awhile, till thou supply all my needs. But we must do much and learn much in the school of hope and love if we would sing aloud for joy. God would have us trust in him at all times and hope in his mercy evermore. And "hope maketh not ashamed," but is a sure and safe anchor to the soul. Pray for, live for and hope for the grace to praise God at all times. Let us praise God more and more and sing of his mercies forever. Then shall "the desert and the solitary places be glad" and we shall break forth into song and our lives shall echo with the joys of salvation and triumph!

Newark, N. J.,

THE DARK.

Where do the chickens run
When they are afraid?
Out of the light, out of the sun,
Into the dark, into the shade,
Under their mother's downy wing,
No longer afraid of anything.

Dear little girl, dear little boy,
Afraid of the dark!
Bid your good-bye to the daylight with joy,
Be glad of the night, for hark!
The darkness no danger at all can bring;
It is the shadow of God's wing.

Where do the little violets creep
In the time of snow?
Into the dark to rest and sleep,
And to wait for the spring, they go
Under the ground where no storm can reach,
And God takes tenderest care of each.

Are you afraid, little girl or boy,
Of the dark of death?
Jesus will carry you full of joy,
To the world of light, he sayeth:
Under the ground where the violets sleep,
Your little body the Lord will keep.

—The Mother at Home.

DO INDIANS EVER LAUGH?

Some Indian school-boys found their teacher had a great aversion to frogs. To them it was a continual source of amusement to see her run away from them. One day a boy caught one, and shut it up in the table drawer. The teacher entered the room. All were in order, but when she opened the drawer the frog, glad to gain its liberty, leaped out upon the table and the teacher made a great ado. One of the boys in a gentlemanly way took up the frog, carried it to the door, and threw it out. No sign of enjoyment could be discerned in their faces. They remained through school hours retaining their solemn dignity. Afterwards as they told of it, they laughed until the tears came, laughed over and over again as they remembered the dismay of the teacher. Why did they not laugh at first? They had not yet come into the ways of white men enough to realize that we would excuse rudeness in our pupils under these circumstances, and they consider it rude to laugh aloud, or to laugh at all at the expense of another in the other's presence.

An old woman who owned a poor old pony that was almost dead from starvation and hard work had brought the pony and tied it to the fence. He was literally "skin and bones." While I was in the house I heard the woman making a great outcry and ran to the door just in time to see an immense flock of crows fly away. I said, "What is the matter?" She replied that the crows had come to pick her poor old pony's bones while he still lived. She saw the funny side of it as well as I, and laughed very heartily. When one of the young missionaries asked an Indian woman for her "Wakan sica tanka," instead of her "Waksica tanks," no one laughed till the teacher was gone. When I inquired why the dish-pan was not given the reply was, she did not ask for the dish-pan, she asked for "the great evil spirit," and I assure you no Indian woman hears that story without laughing heartily. Another teacher, meaning to ask for a tub, asked for a young man, and thought to her face they did not laugh, I have seen a whole sewing-school convulsed with laughter over the mistake several times since. When one of the ministers from the East attending our meeting went up to a group of Indians who could not understand a word of English, and tried to enter into conversation, of course there was no response. He said to me as I came up, "Why do they look so solemn?" I interpreted what he said to the Indians, and all laughed and said, "We did not know what he said; why should we laugh?" It does not seem to occur to those asking the question, why they do not laugh, that they have but little to laugh at in the presence of white men.

Indian children are in the house quiet and orderly; they sit and listen to older people talk, and if anything is said that is very amusing, so they can not control themselves, they put their hands on their mouths and run out to laugh. Men laugh gently and quietly, and now and then you may hear an old woman laugh long and loud; if so, some relative will say aside, "Hear how loud she laughs, like a white man; she is unwomanly." They are a very social people, and around the camp fire one may hear many legends and fables, hear many old war songs and nursery rhymes.

They are human. They are men and women. As a race they are neither treacherous nor lazy, but of course there are some among them who are both, just as among us.

The Indians laugh and cry, they eat and sleep, they walk and run, they talk and think, have hands and feet. There are children among them. They are not born grown up with a tomahawk in hand, ready to go on the war path. Let us save the youth, and so help the old men and women.—Miss Collins in the American Missionary.

THREE QUEER BIRDS.

The trumpeter bird is the rag-picker of the woods and swamps of Guiana, where he is always at work at his trade, with his stomach for a pack and his bill for a hook. He performs a most useful but most extraordinary service, devouring a perfect multitude of snakes, frogs, scorpions, spiders, lizards, and the like creatures. But this terrible bird can be made perfectly tame.

On the Guiana plantation he may be seen fraternizing with the chickens, the ducks and turkeys, accompanying them in their walks, defending them from their enemies, separating quarrelers with strokes of his bill, sustaining the young and feeble, and waking the echoes with his trumpet while he brings home his flocks at night.

The trumpeter is as handsome as he is useful. Noble and haughty in his aspect, he raises himself up on his long, yellow-gaitered legs and seems to say, "I am the trumpeter, the scourge of reptiles and the protector of the flocks!"

In southern Africa there is another great exterminator of reptiles—the snake eater or secretary-bird, a magnificent creature, who attacks the largest serpents, making a shield of his wings and a sword of his beak. The name of "secretary-bird" is derived from the plumes projecting backward from his head, which look like quill pens carried behind one's ear.

In South America, in the very neighborhood of the trumpeter's home, there lives the Kamichi or Kamiki, who wears a sharp horn projecting from his forehead, and a murderous spur on each of his wings. With these three weapons the serpents that he attacks are powerless against him, and are easily put to death.

The secretary-bird, the Kamichi and the trumpeter form a valiant and useful trio. The trumpeter has two merits above the other: the ease with which he can be domesticated, and his musical talent.

The natives have a saying that he has swallowed a cornet. Whether promenading or war-making, he fills the air with his trumpet-calls, and at the sound of his voice of brass the reptiles take to flight.

Presently the bird arrives, flapping his wings and wielding them like a sword. Having killed the serpent, the trumpeter sounds his blast of victory as he had sounded his charge.

TEMPERANCE.

A TOBACCO EXPERIENCE.

When I began my ministry I felt that God would have me give up the habit—that had been fixed on me from my boyhood—of smoking. It was quite a struggle; but I yielded to what I felt was God's will. I separated myself from it. I left it in the camp behind me; but there it was in plain sight.

For five years I saw it, I loved it; it was a bother to me. It lured me back to itself by its fragrance and by its social nature, until at last, by subtle argument and gentle persuasion, after five years of separation, I found myself back again in the camp of the smokers; dancing around my "calf," again rejoicing in the "burnt offering," and regaling myself in its "incense."

After years, the Lord once more called to me to separate myself from my cigar. I thought of my former experience, I hesitated, I parleyed, I dallied with my idol, until I could withstand the Lord no more.

So once more I separated myself from it. But with the remembrance of my former experience, and the consciousness of my carnal love for it—never more strong than at that moment—I turned to the Lord and cried out to him: "Lord, at thy bidding I separate myself from this thing. But I know this separation will not be enduring unless I be separated from it as by death; my death to it; the death of my love for it. Let it henceforth be a dead thing to me."

And so, having prayed in substance this prayer, the Lord brought suddenly to my mind this passage of Scripture: "Likewise reckon ye also yourselves to be dead indeed unto sin, but alive unto God through Jesus Christ our Lord." (Rom. 6: 11.) I knew in an instant that it was the sword of the Spirit by which I was to put to death that enemy; and so, seizing it, I girded it on, and in the name of the Lord I consecrated myself upon my cigar, and slew it.

It is a dead thing now. It has no power to lure me. I see it often, but it is slain to me.—G. F. Pentecost.

DEALING WITH SPECIAL SINS.

The Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, on opening a Mission Tent recently, said: "This is a meeting altogether for the conversion of souls. There is, however, temperance hooked on to it; not to its detriment, not as a side-issue, but as a part of the grand aim of it all. I have found it very useful in conversion to deal with special sins. I remember one Sunday speaking in Exeter Hall, and during the course of my address I said, 'There may be a young man sitting here who is in a draper's shop, and who is wearing on his hands at the present moment a pair of gloves which he has pilfered from his employers.' In the vestry afterwards there came a young gentleman who wanted to see me in private. When we were alone he entreated me not to expose him to his employers, as it would be not only the ruin of himself, but might be the death of his mother. I did not, of course, know anything about it; but I urged him to a better state of life, and I believe that the mere fact of my having mentioned that pair of gloves was blessed by God to his lasting good. Therefore, I think we ought to put particular sins, like intemperance, to the forefront, that men's consciences may be touched."

A DANGEROUS MEDICINE.

A mother told me this incident in her own experience. An older son during his infancy had, by the positive instruction of a physician, been given gin, well sweetened and reduced, to quiet restlessness and pain. When he had grown old enough to talk he startled her one day by calling for some of the mixture, and she became alarmed.

"I saw," she said, "what I had innocently done. I had been feeding an appetite."

Then she told him he could never have any more of that drink. The little fellow begged for it persistently, and finally struck a pang to that mother's heart by saying,

"Well, when I am a man I'll have all the gin I want to drink." The mother carefully and anxiously watched over him, and in a quiet country town temptation was kept out of his way. But as he grew to manhood his health visibly declined, and again a physician ordered stimulants for him. They were given, for, alas! comparatively few people, as yet, have the courage to disregard a doctor's orders in this matter. One day the young man, looking earnestly into his mother's face, said, "Mother, I love that stuff; and if I lived I should have to fight a terrible appetite. I am glad I'm going to die now."

And he did die, even as he wished; and so that mother has only a sad but pleasant memory in place of what she dare not fancy might have been. For what is peaceful death, which holds all within its embrace in perfect rest and leaves all errors and defects to be viewed in the tender, hallowed light of retrospection—what is this to the restless torture of a living sorrow?

Have we sometimes thought the old practice of giving children a taste of stimulants was obsolete? It is not entirely, for in recent years I have known mothers to pursue that dangerous course, not realizing that a very small child could acquire the appetite that works final ruin. There is still opportunity for educating in this direction.—E. M. Hickok.

Let a woman go to India with an avowed purpose of bettering the condition of the natives, and we call her a missionary. In any town in the State, let her show her interest in laws that may effect our boys and our homes, and the foulest, dirtiest profane-mouthed man pronounces her a crank, and a long-haired fool.

A pound of steak costs ten cents, a glass of whisky the same; but the homes of working men, into one of which is taken steak and the other whisky are not the same.

largest crowd. His lecture on "Character" contained some telling blows against the liquor traffic, and the old political parties. He said he was born a Democrat and stayed with them as long as it was possible for a decent man to stay, but he thanked God he had never been a Republican. I had an opportunity of making a short address and interviewing a large number of ministers on our work.

I spent a Sabbath at Ray and Montgomery; the former is where the railroad crosses the Michigan State line, and the latter is the next town above. I had full houses at both points. The meetings were arranged by Bro. R. C. Wylie, who is pastor of the only church in Ray, a large, wide-awake congregation, which is so interested in reform work that they give the pastor a fourth of his time to go out lecturing. Would that every congregation could do the same. His people excel the Methodists in hearty hand-shaking after a sermon. Bro. Wylie has a library that many theological professors might envy. He is well read up, and many of us have our eye on him as one of the coming men of the church. He stands by the Cynosure, and expects to attend the Michigan anti-secret convention at Spring Arbor.

I next visited Detroit and had a profitable visit with those veteran heroes of reform, Bro. C. C. Foote and Bro. Geo. W. Clark. They have pleasant homes and are all aglow with zeal. They were honored by God in taking a prominent part in the anti-slavery struggle. Now, they are giving their whole strength to the anti-secret and prohibition reform, and were eager to do all they could to have me present the National Reform cause in some of the city churches. I called upon Bro. Richard Turnbull, pastor of the United Presbyterian church, and while he was in sympathy with our work, yet he was afraid his people might not receive it favorably. Mr. Scott, the pastor who had preceded him, had been a Mason, and one or more of his leading men were Masons, and Bro. Turnbull had to touch very lightly on these subjects. Mr. Scott was the first Psalm-singing minister I ever heard of who was a Mason.

I gave two lectures in the Presbyterian church at Birmingham, and had good audiences and collections. The United Presbyterian pastor, Rev. J. A. Sherrard, said, "A few anti-secret lectures are what we most need in this town, for our leading men be long to the lodge and stand in the way of every reform." Rev. Joseph McCracken, of the Covenantant church, is a good man to work up meetings. I gave five lectures in Tuscola county, at Fairgrove, Waterville, Caro, Reese and Vassar. The attendance and interest at each was good, except at Reese. Rev. J. R. Wylie, who arranged these meetings, has been for years the popular minister of the county, and is radical on all reforms. I enjoyed a delightful trip on the boat with him, from Port Huron down the St. Clair River, across St. Clair Lake, down the Detroit River, and then down Lake Erie to Lake Side, near Sandusky. This is the popular summer resort where the gate-keepers estimate that 87,000 people have sought refuge from the heat during the summer.

A two-weeks' camp meeting had closed, and we attended the three-days' convention held under the auspices of the National Reform Association, and the W. C. T. U. It was opened with a thundering speech by Dr. Leonard on Prohibition, followed with speeches by Dr. McAllister, J. M. Foster, W. J. Coleman, R. C. Wylie, Dr. Helwig, Dr. Merrick, Dr. Crook, Mrs. Mary A. Woodbridge and others. Everything was harmonious and pleasant. Bro. Foote and Bro. Clark were there from Detroit, throwing telling remarks into the discussions. Bro. Clark warmed our hearts with his reform songs. A lady in the audience sent a note up to Mrs. Woodbridge requesting that Father Clark sing a song she had once heard him sing in Chicago, which contained the words, "Lean out your souls and listen!" The "Old Liberty Singer" was called forward and sang with fine effect. While a large number of the faithful of the land remained and listened through all our discussions, yet it was significant that the masses who were summering here, packed up and left just after our convention opened. The Sandusky and Cleveland papers published our convention as in the interests of third-party prohibition and anti-secrecy, and the multitudes of camp-meeting people who had been having such a hallelujah time singing, "Surely the Captain may depend on me," then, as Sam Jones says, "when the long roll sounded, and the battle began to bulge out toward them, the word was, 'Rats, to your holes!'"

Rev. J. P. Mills of Cleveland showed fine tact in working up this meeting. It was the first time I had met this Methodist lecturer of the National Reform Association. He is a man of fine talent, dark hair and eyes, of fine appearance, excellent physique and good executive ability. He served as captain in the late war, and faced the music of shot and shell on the fields of Shiloh, Stone River, Look Out Mountain, Missionary Ridge and Atlanta. After the second day's fight at Shiloh, he was writing a letter to his mother by the light of a fire at the root of a tree, when a cannon shot went plowing by, spattering him with mud. His mother still preserves that mud-stained letter. Bro. Mills says those battle scenes were not as trying as the persecution he endured from Republicans in Ohio, when he left the old party and ran on the Prohibition ticket as candidate for Representative for Lorraine county. He says about nine out of ten of the ministers in his church are in some secret order, so that to remain in the old Methodist church in which he was born and trained, and which he loves and desires to enlist in the National Reform work, he feels that he must keep quiet on that issue. May God speed the day when every reform lecturer will feel as free to speak out against this, as against any other evil!

Bro. Mills has in view the working up of a grand National Reform convocation at Lake Side next summer, lasting two weeks, and including the questions of the various Christian reform organizations. If the friends of these reforms, with their ablest advocates, can be gathered at this favorite resort, and the meeting is properly conducted, it will shake the nation.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—So pronounced are the United Presbyterian principles in Monmouth, Ill., that in all union religious meetings held in that city the Psalms are used exclusively in praise. That is evidence of a substantial people that none can gainsay.

—The Rev. Mr. Noyes, the self-supporting missionary to Africa, received $30 in Birmingham, Iowa, for his work. He has been a Mason and taken three degrees, but he has renounced his heathenism and goes to Africa to preach to the heathen there.

—A very successful camp meeting was held at Prospect Park, near Wheaton, Ill., by Rev. A. W. Parry of the Free Methodist church. The meeting was undisturbed by outsiders and progressed from first to last gloriously to all engaged, with a number of conversions and the quickening of saints.

—Washington has something unique in the way of evangelization—a veritable church on wheels. It is larger than a common street car, and is drawn by four horses, seats twenty-five or thirty person, carries an organ, adjustable platform for a pulpit and reversible seats. This "Gospel Wagon" cost $750, and is the property of the Central Union Mission.

—On a recent Lord's day six were received into the Baptist church at Morgan Park, near Chicago, three of whom were grandsons of Rev. J. R. Boise, LL. D., of the Theological Seminary there, and another the only son of Rev. J. A. Smith, D. D., editor of the Standard.

—Rev. C. H. Hobart, of Los Gatos, Cal., has been invited to become assistant pastor with Dr. E. H. Gray, of the First Baptist church of Oakland, Cal., and will probably accept. Pastor Hobart's father died lately in Downer's Grove, Ill. He was opposed to secret societies, and the son preached a most memorable sermon on the lodge in Aurora, Ill., Thanksgiving Day, 1882.

—Ben Hogan, the reformed prize fighter, who has been laboring for Christ on the Pacific Coast for two years, has been for several weeks in Chicago assisting Major Whittle in the great tent meetings held all about the city, and Col. Clarke in the Pacific Garden Mission.

—The evangelist Moody revisited Chicago last week on an unpleasant errand. Some of the older members of the Chicago Avenue church had become displeased with the preaching of the pastor, Rev. Mr. Goss, who resigned a week ago, and a considerable majority of the prudential committee were ready to report an acceptance. The feelings of the church were running high, many of the younger members wishing their pastor to remain and writing to the daily papers that the minority should be turned out. A letter from Mr. Goss brought Mr. Moody in haste. He preached once to a crowded house and carried all before him so that Mr. Goss in response to an almost unanimous desire will remain with the church. Five deacons and the clerk of the church resigned, however, and others were elected.

—Andrew Gordon, D. D., an aged, honored and eminently successful missionary to India of the United Presbyterian church, died Saturday morning, Aug. 13, 1887, at Philadelphia, after a serious illness of several months. His death will be heard of with surprise and sorrow by a large circle of friends both in America and India.

—The Cumberland Presbyterians now have 2,546 churches, and a membership of nearly 150,000. The publication house is credited with a clear profit of $8,189 the past year.

—The five schools conducted by the Society for Promoting Female Education in the East (English), in Nazareth, Cana, and other places in Galilee, are reported to be going on successfully.

—The Methodist Church of Canada, it is asserted, has more Sabbath-schools, more teachers, and more scholars than all the other Protestant churches in the Dominion taken together.

—At a recent General Synod of the French Reformed Church, a report on the Protestant population of France showed an increase of seventy-seven in the number of pastors. The subject of "mixed" marriages—i. e., between Protestants and Catholics—was discussed, and one hundred and seventy-two pastors declared that they were of advantage, while forty-five opposed them. It was admitted on all sides that children born of such marriages were too often neither Protestant nor Catholic, but members of the "great army of indifference or unbelief."

—Mr. Spurgeon, in the Sword and Trowel, expressed dissatisfaction with the theological position of many in the Baptist Union, and it is thought he intimates a purpose to secede.

—The Covenanters' memorial was inaugurated at Muirkirk, Scotland, lately. It is of polished granite in the form of an obelisk. The names inscribed on the memorial include those of Richard Cameron, John Smith, William Adam, and John Brown, of Priesthill.

—The statistics of the Y. M. C. A. reported at the San Francisco meeting denote that substantial progress is being made. Thirty-one new buildings were completed in the year 1886. The total value of all buildings is set down at $4,772,980. The total number of paid men engaged in the work in the United States and Canada is 623; value of libraries, $289,335. Six hundred and seventy-seven associations report an aggregate membership of 128,996; three-hundred and twenty-six report Gospel meetings with a total average attendance of 15,387. Part of these figures are exclusively of the railroad associations.

LITERATURE.

At the opening of the collegiate year the thoughtful essay in Scribner's Magazine for September, on the "Development of the American University," by Professor George T. Ladd, of Yale, will be read with unusual care and profit by those interested in the subject of higher education. Professor Ladd has outlined, with considerable detail, a general scheme for primary, secondary and university education. He believes that the last mentioned should "permit and encourage the greatest possible freedom and choice on the pupil's part," but it should only be open to those who have satisfactorily finished the secondary education, which should be long and thorough enough to secure the general scientific culture, or formation, of the pupil. September being the month in which occurs the centennial of the Federal Constitution, Mr. Moncreuf D. Conway's article, entitled "An Unpublished Draft of a National Constitution by Edmund Randolph, Found among the Papers of George Mason," is especially timely. But the fully illustrated articles, "The Modern Nile" and "Camping and Hunting on the Shoshone," are the most attractive of the number. The first, by Edward L. Wilson, one of the most enthusiastic and skillful of travelers and photographers, describes a Nile journey from the Delta a thousand miles to the Second Cataract. Rev. W. S. Rainford, D. D., the rector of St. George's church, New York City, has made a number of hunting excursions to the Rocky Mountains since 1868, and tells his experiences in the second article. His descriptions of Rocky Mountain scenery are captivating, and if his preaching is as good, the church of God is blessed in his labors.

In the American Magazine Curacao, a quaint old Dutch city that seems out of place in the Western Hemisphere, is sketched by Dr. W. F. Hutchinson. The town has a great future if ever the Panama Canal is constructed, the harbor being one of the best in the world, with water enough for any ship afloat. A race of lake-dwellers still existing in Venezuela, is also described, whose houses and habits seem strangely similar to those of the age of stone or bronze. "Our New Navy" is described by Lieut. W. S. Hughes, with illustrations. J. McDonald Oxley gives some account of the Canadian militia. Dr. A. S. Isaacs presents an interesting review of Jewish progress in this country. He ventures to predict that the Jew will not be without influence in forming the religion of the future in America. Lieut. F. S. Bassett (U. S. N.) writes of naval terms. "Hunting the Ku Klux," by Richmond Walker, shows that the famous Klan was materialized by the newspapers for some months after it had ceased to exist. An interesting sketch is given of the life of the great Methodist orator, Bishop Simpson. "The Household" department contains the ripe suggestions of a physician of experience, for preserving health in September.

The publishers of Demorest's Monthly are now taking great interest in Remunerative Home Work for Women, and in the September number publish a prize article on that subject. Mrs. Christine Terhune Herrick has begun a series of articles on Seasonable Entertainments, giving complete information about each, from the form of invitation to "Farewell."

Shoppell's Modern Houses, an illustrated architectural monthly devoted to domestic architecture, is so full of useful and valuable hints about house-building and house-decoration, that its cost is no comparison to its value. The August number has illustrated articles on "Furnishing and Decorating a Summer Cottage," and "Hints on Heating and Ventilation." There are also eleven handsome plans and views of houses of moderate cost. Published by the Co-operative Building Plan Association, New York.

LODGE NOTES.

The four days' annual encampment of the Uniformed Rank Knights of Pythias commenced at Huntingdon, Ind., on Friday. The contest drill for $400 occurs to-day.

The Supreme Council of the American Legion of Honor at Washington have resolved to establish a guarantee fund of $500,000. The fund is to be raised by assessment.

Trouble exists in the military ranks of the Ancient Order of United Workmen owing to a stiff competitive drill arranged for the Supreme Legion meeting at St. Paul, Minn., next month.

The body of William Priestman, agent of the Chicago Masonic Insurance Company, was found at Toronto early Friday morning. A bullet wound was in the head, and all Priestman's money and jewelry were stolen.

The Brotherhood of Railway Section Foreman at Cedar Rapids, Iowa, has started a Coughlin protection fund to aid Timothy Coughlin, the section boss, who is charged with the responsibility of the Chataworth railway disaster.

A convention of colored Masons was last week in this city, those present being representatives of grand lodges, who want to organize some sort of a superior body to a grand lodge. That object was hardly accomplished. There was much speech-making and a banquet to close.

It was decided yesterday, says the Inter Ocean of Monday, by the seamen's assembly to enlist the aid of all assemblies covering kindred interests in a move against non union manned vessels. The Knights of Labor assemblies who will be called upon will comprise the grain trimmers, the iron-ore handlers, coal shovellers, the lumber shovers, the salt laborers, dock workers, and ship-building carpenters. A vessel with a non-union crew aboard, coming in with lumber, will not be unloaded except by its own crew. Grain trimmers will refuse to trim a vessel unless manned by a union crew. The ore handlers, coal shovellers, and dock workers will simply let vessels alone unless union members make up the crews.

The supreme courts of the American Legion of Honor held the first session of the biennial convention in Washington, Tuesday. Several amendments to the constitution were adopted, to go into effect Dec. 1, among them a provision that hereafter no person over 50 years of age can become a beneficial member of the order, and that each member as soon as initiated becomes a contributor to the benefit fund. There were eighteen assessments held during the year ending June 30, 1886, and twenty-one during the year ending June 30, 1887. The average death rate was 1,074. The Supreme Council consists of forty-six delegates representing a total membership of 63,000. The order is carrying a benefit insurance of $183,000,000, and has collected and paid in the course of the last two years about $4,000,000.

On our 16th page to day will be found a striking and instructive illustration of the comparative worth of the various kinds of baking powders now in the market.

Advertisers who wish to secure the attention of the best class of purchasers, will find it to their advantage to secure space in the CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE.

THE RESORTS OF COLORADO.

Colorado has become famous for its marvelous gold and silver production, for its picturesque scenery, and its delightful climate. Its mining towns and camps, its massive mountains, with their beautiful green-verdured valleys, lofty snow-capped peaks and awe-inspiring canyons, together with its hot and cold mineral springs and baths, and its healthful climate are attracting, in greater numbers each year, tourists, invalids, pleasure and business seekers from all parts of the world.

The journey from Chicago, Peoria, or St. Louis and other Chicago, Burlington and Quincy R. R. stations to Denver (the great distributing point for Colorado), if made over the Burlington Route, C. B. & Q. R. R., will be as pleasant and gratifying as it is possible for a railroad trip to be. At all principal ticket offices will be found on sale, during the tourist season, round-trip tickets via this popular route at low rates to Denver, Colorado Springs and Pueblo, Colorado. When ready to start call on your nearest ticket agent, or address Paul Morton, General Passenger and Ticket Agent C. B. & Q. R. R., Chicago, Ill.

A Moral Mystery how any Friend of Religious Liberty could Consent to "Hand over Ireland to Farnellite Rule."

By Rev. John Lee, A. M., B. D.

General Viscount Wolsley: "Interesting."
Chicago Inter-Ocean: "A searching review."
Chattanooga Advocate: "An avalanche of argument."

Christian Cynosure: "It deserves a wide circulation at the present time."

Bishop Coxe, Protestant Episcopal, of Western New York: "Most useful publication; a logical sequel to 'Our Country,' by Josiah Strong."

Rev. C. C. McCabe, D. D.: "It is a useful book and ought to have a wide sale. You are dealing with a question which will soon dominate every other in American politics. The Assassin of Nations is in our midst and is approaching the Temple of Liberty with stealthy tread. The people of this country will understand the Belfast frenzy some day better than they do now."

The Right Hon. Lord Robert Montague: "I have read it with the greatest pleasure, and with amazement at the intimate acquaintance with the acts of Romanism in our midst which you have evinced. I only wish that, instead of publishing your pamphlet in Chicago, you had seen it broadcast over England, Scotland and Ireland."

FARM NOTES.

SELECTING A COW.

A model, useful dairy cow may be known at a glance by an expert. She has a fine, long head, broad between the eyes, and a thin, wide muzzle; the eyes are large, and of a mild expression; the neck is thin and long; the ears are thin and covered within with a deep yellow skin; the forequarters are light and thin, and the whole body has much the shape of a wedge, increasing in size to the rear; the legs are thin with fine bone; the belly is large and deep, with great capacity for food; the back is broad and straight, and the ribs are well rounded towards the rear; the bones of the rump are wide apart; the tail is long and thin; the thighs are thin and are set widely apart; the udder is large and full, especially behind; the teats are of good size, and set far apart upon a broad, level udder, and the milk-vein, so-called, which is the large vein leading from the udder and passing into the abdomen, and which is an indication of the amount of blood circulating through the milk glands, and contributing to the milk secretion, should be full and tortuous in its short course. A fine horn, a deep yellow skin, and a general elegance of form, without any heaviness of beefiness in any part, are also important indications of good quality in a cow for the dairy.—American Agriculturist.

HOW TO GROW CELERY.

For lack of proper knowledge of the nature and habits of celery, most of our farmers, after repeated attempts, have abandoned all efforts toward raising plants or growing it. Almost any farmer who takes pride in supplying his table with reasonable vegetables, will tell you that he has tried to raise plants and has failed, and has purchased plants and set them, but they "had no luck," for they all burned out. Certainly they did: for they demand both coolness and moisture, and get neither. Now, had the intending growers, having made their ground both rich and deep, scooped out a trench two or three inches in depth, and set their plants in it six inches apart, given the ground around them a slight mulch; laid slats across the trench upon which to lay a six-inch wide row of boards, slabs, anything to keep the burning, midsummer sun off the plants from 10 A. to 4 P.M. (this vertical covering may be removed as soon as the plants commence to grow), meanwhile keeping the ground continually moist, they would have been gladdened by the sight of such bunches at the end of the season as are seldom seen off the exhibition table, simply because they had moderated the surrounding elements and given the plants a chance to "make themselves at home."—R. W. S. in Rural New Yorker.

In digging the roots of one young average plant of corn I counted sixty rootlets within the space of one inch. As this root was nine inches long, and the branches averaged at least three inches in length, it appears that this plant has already developed at least 100 feet of branchlets. The primary roots in no case had grown directly downward. They usually were found to extend in a direction a little below horizontal, so that their extremities were about four inches below the surface. The roots which grew out above the kernel were more shallow, their extremities being from two to three inches below the surface.

In order to see how many of those roots are likely to be severed in ordinary cultivation, I inserted a spade to the depth of three inches on each of the four sides of a hill of corn, keeping about three inches from the hill. I then carefully washed away the soil sufficiently to expose the roots, so that I could see how many of the latter had been cut. To my surprise I found that, independent of branches, the number of large roots cut was twelve. Had I inserted the spade an inch deeper almost all of the roots would have been cut. As it was, several of the roots that started from below the kernel were severed.

WESTERN AFRICA.

BY J. AUGUSTUS COLE, OF SHAINGAY,
WEST AFRICA.

Bishop Flickinger of the U. B. church says that, "This volume will well repay a careful reading not only for its discussion and exposition of these societies, but because it gives much valuable information respecting other institutions of that great continent."

J. Augustus Cole, the author of this pamphlet is a native of Western Africa, and is of pure negro blood. He has given much time and care to the investigation of the secret societies and heathen customs of Western Africa. He joined several of the secret orders for the purpose of obtaining full and correct information regarding their nature and operation. His culture and superior powers of discrimination render that he has written most complete and reliable.

Labor Troubles,

BY REV. C. C. BROWN.

The Danger—The Laborer's Grievance—The Laborer's Foe—The Laborer's Fallacy—The Laborer's Hope—Mind and Muscle—Co-Laborers.

TIMELY TALKS ON AN IMPORTANT SUBJECT.

The Papers Say of this Book:

"It is well to remind the world of the great law of human brotherhood, and to make the more general application of it." "Aye, there's the rub!" Our author contributes his mite in that direction, and his voice and reasoning will reach some ears and perhaps touch some understandings and move some hearts that are now so coldly and so completely hedged around by over much respectability and comfortable prosperity."—Chicago Tribune.

"The writer does his work in a way remarkable alike for its directness, its common sense, its impartiality, its lucidity and its force. He has no theories to support; he deals with facts as he finds them, and his assertions by arrays of demonstrative statistics. The work is among the best of the kind I have not the best that we have seen. While it is scarcely possible for it to be put in the hands of all our wage-workers, we wish it could be read by every one of them."—Chicago Interior.

BATAVIA CONVENTION PAMPHLET.

A Staggering Blow!

Such was to Freemasonry the great NATIONAL CONVENTION held in BATAVIA, N. Y., September, 1882. It gave the world

Thurlow Weed's Great Letter

On the abduction and murder of WILLIAM MORGAN in 1826, which has been the most widely published of any Antimasonic document. The dedication of a noble granite monument to the memory of Morgan, and the able and eloquent address of the Convention make this a most valuable pamphlet.

SEE WHY.

It contains—
1. Portrait of Morgan.
2. Portrait of Thurlow Weed.
3. Fine picture of the Monument.
4. The great letter of Thurlow Weed and his affidavit—almost the last public act of his life.
5. The monument oration by Pres. C. A. Blanchard.
6. Addresses on "Christian Politics" by Pres. J. Blanchard, on "The Character of Freemasonry" by Prof. F. P. Bailey, on the "Freedom and Secret Societies" by Rev. H. H. Hinman, and very interesting personal and historical reminiscences.

The Christian's Secret

A Happy Life.

28th THOUSAND.

Baptist Commendation.

"We are delighted with this book. It reaches to the very core of Christian experience, and is eminently practical in its teachings. It meets the doubts and difficulties of conscientious seekers after the bread and water of life, but whose efforts result only in alternate failure and victory. The author, without claiming to be a theologian, sends out the results of a happy Christian experience, and tells it in a happy Christian life."—Baptist Weekly.

Presbyterian Endorsement.

"The book is so truly and reverentially devoted to its spirit that it is disarmingly plain. It contains so much that is sound and practical, so much that, if heeded, will make our lives better, happier and more useful, that the intensest reader who is not already a life with Christ in God can scarcely fail to derive profit from its perusal."—Interior.

Methodist Word of Praise.

"We have not for years read a book with more delight and profit. It is not a theological book. No effort is made to change the theological views of any one. The author has rich experience and tells it in a plain and delightful manner."—Christian Advocate.

United Brethren's Approval.

"We have seldom met with a more interesting volume, abounding throughout with apt illustrations; we have failed to find a dry line from title-page to title."—Religious Telescope.

Congregational Comment.

"It contains much clear, plain, sensible and interesting incident. It is a practical and experimental lesson taught out of God's word, and is worthy of wide circulation."—Church of Christ.

NATIONAL SUICIDE,

AND

ITS PREVENTION.

BY OSCAR F. LUMRY, PH. D.

Prof. Lumry's book, "National Suicide and Its Remedy," will be read with profit even by those who do not accept its doctrine, that taking interest for money loaned one or more per cent. is sin, taking something for nothing. For, as Goldsmith said of his Vicar of Wakefield,

When his fallings lean to virtue's side,

—Cynosure.

Dr. Lumry is a man of ideas and never fails to make his readers understand just what they are. Every sentiment he writes has such an air of honesty that it will in a measure disarm those who read to criticize. It is a good book to set people to thinking, whether they believe his theories or not. The book is well worth a careful reading and study."—Inter Ocean.

On all the points named they differ radically from those which prevail in the organization of society. Either they are true or false. It is a curious fact that all of them have been stigmatized as crazy and yet nearly all of them have been for some years steadily gaining the adherence of men of intellectual ability."—Times.

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful confinement of Morgan in the Canadian gaol, his subsequent conveyance by Freeman to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. The pamphlet is addressed to the people, and attacks his AFFIDAVIT to it.

In closing his letter he writes: "I now look back through the intervening years with a consciousness of having been governed through the 'Anti-Masonic' excitement by a sincere desire, first to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influence of 'secret societies'."

The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. [Chicago, National Christian Association.] Single copy, 5 cents.

The Master's Carpet.

BY

F. Ronayne.

Past Master of Keystone Lodge No. 631

Chicago.

Explains the true source and meaning of every ceremony of the Order, and the Lodge, and the principles on which the order is founded. By a careful perusal of this work, a more thorough knowledge of the principles of the order is obtained than by attending the Lodge for years. Every Mason, every person contemplating becoming a member, and even those who are even those who are subject, should procure and carefully read this work. An appendix is added of 32 pages, embodying which gives every sign, grip and ceremony of the Lodge together with a brief explanation of each. The work contains 22 pages and is substantially and elegantly bound in cloth. Price, 75 cents.

Freemasonry at a Glance,

HOME AND HEALTH.

STARCH FOR BRUISES.

Too many medicines named in the "family column" for the emergency use are articles which are not commonly on hand in the family stock. There is nothing far-fetched, however, in starch, as most households always have a little of it in store. A writer in the Journal of Chemistry says:

"Take a little starch or arrow-root, and merely moisten it with cold water, and lay it on the injured part. This must be done immediately, so as to prevent the action of the air upon the skin. However, it may be applied some hours afterwards with good effects."

"I learned this when a resident of France. It may already be known here, but I have met with none among my acquaintances who seem to have heard of it."

"I always make use of the above remedy when my children meet with an accident; there is nothing unpleasant in its use, and it keeps down swelling, and cleanses and facilitates the healing of scratches when the little ones fall on the gravel in the garden, or get other little hurts."

SOME KINDS OF WHOLESOME FOOD.

One of the brightest phases of woman's education is the increasing attention given to cooking as an art. It is one of woman's rights to help cure intemperance in drinking by removing excitants from the food. By constantly stimulating in early life an unnatural appetite for condiments and dainties, the foundation of intemperance is often laid. Seasoning, therefore, should never be excessive.

In speaking of a few kinds of food, the manner of preparation, and so forth, I desire to emphasize the importance of thorough cooking without any scorching.

Soup should constitute a course for dinner in every well organized household. Remnants of meat, bones from both cooked and uncooked meat, scraps of bread and vegetables, all have their place in the soup-kettle. To have this intended to will require a little care and daintiness; and if the cook cannot be trusted, housekeepers will find themselves repaid for a little personal attention to the soup stock by being able to present an acceptable dish with little or no expense.

The soup kettle should always be ready, but only the regular stock should be made in it, removing enough for each meal to another kettle for special seasoning, to avoid having all the soups of the week taste alike. Soups do not need to be kept except a very few minutes before being served, but they need to simmer for hours.

Beef-ta is most nutritious, and with bread and fruit makes a delicious luncheon. It is made by covering one pound of chopped or ground meat with one quart of cold water, letting this stand half an hour, then bringing it to a boil, when it may be seasoned with salt and a little cayenne pepper. It should cook slowly two hours more. If this beef-ta is cooked in a mush-kettle, or double boiler, it will require no watching.

Game and fish are healthful if not spoiled in the cooking. Most of any kind should not be washed, as that removes the juices. If procured from a clean butcher, it will need nothing more than wiping off with a damp cloth.

Frying makes renders them indigestible. Young chickens split open down the back and flattened with a rolling-pin are ready for the broiler. Some people prefer the process of cooking called smothering, for chickens. This is done by placing the flattened chicken, as ready for the broiler, in a baking-pan with enough water just to cover it. Have a cover for the pan to fit so as to prevent the escape of steam. Place in a hot oven, and when tender put in a broiler over hot coals, just long enough to brown lightly. The gravy made of the water in the baking-pan is also delicious.

Corned beef should be put into boiling water and placed where it will boil very slowly, until the bones will slip out of it easily. If left in the liquid to cool, it is better than if allowed to dry while cooling. Roast or broiled beef digests more easily than corned beef, and should be used more frequently. A leg of mutton boiled in the same way as corned beef is among the most healthful articles of food.

One kind of meat is sufficient for a dinner. Light desserts, such as custards, tapioca, and the like, are better than pies made with lard.—Democrat's Monthly.

ON FREEMASONRY.

Freemasonry Illustrated. A complete exposition of the seven degrees of the Blue Lodge and Chapter. Profusely illustrated. A historical sketch of the institution and a critical analysis of the character of each degree, by F. J. Blanchard, of Wheaton College. Monumental quotations and nearly four hundred notes from standard Masonic authorities confirm the truthfulness of this exposition, and show the character of Masonic teaching and doctrine. The accuracy of this exposition is attested by J. O. Doeber, Past Master University No. 19, Holland, Mich., and others. This is the latest, most accurate and complete exposition of Blue Lodge and Chapter Masonry. Over one hundred illustrations—several of them full page—give a pictorial representation of the lodge-room, chapter and principal ceremonies of the degrees, with the dress of candidates, signs, grips, etc. Complete work of 640 pages, in cloth, $1.00.

Ex-President John Quincy Adams' Letters on the Nature of Masonic Oaths, Obligations and Penalties. Thirty most interesting, able and convincing letters on the above general subject, written by this renowned statesman to different public men of the United States during the years 1831 to 1838. With Mr. Adams' address to the people of Massachusetts upon political aspects of lodge-ry, an able and eloquent exposition of Masonic principles. Introduction. This is one of the most telling anti-secrecy works extant, aside from the Expositions. Price, $1.00 per dozen, $9.00. Paper, 35 cents each; per dozen, $3.50.

Freemasonry Exposed. By Capt. William Morgan. The genuine old Morgan book republished, with engravings showing the lodge-room, dress of candidates, signs, due guards, grips, etc. This revelation is so accurate that Freemasons murdered the author for writing it. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.50.

Finney on Masonry. The character, creed and practical workings of Freemasonry. By Pres. Charles G. Finney, of Oberlin College. President of the "Bright Mason," but left the lodge when he became a Christian. This book has opened the eyes of multitudes. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper cover, 25 cents; per dozen, $2.50.

Masonic Oaths Null and Void; or, Freemasonry Self-Convicted. A book for the times. The design of this is to refute the arguments of those who claim that the oaths of Freemasonry are binding upon those who take them. Its arguments are conclusive, and the forcible manner in which they are put, being drawn from Scripture, makes them convincing. The minister will find in this work a rich fund of arguments. 207 pp., postpaid, 40 cents.

College Secret Societies. Their costs, a character, and the efforts for their suppression. By H. L. Kellogg. Containing the opinion of many prominent college presidents, and others, and a full account of the murder of Mortimer Leggett. 75 cents each; per dozen, $7.50.

Five Rituals Bound Together. "Odd-fellowship Illustrated" (old work), "Knights of Pythias Illustrated," "Good Templarism Illustrated," "Exposition of the Grand Army of the Republic," are sold bound together in cloth for $1.00; per dozen, $9.00.

Sermon on Masonry. By Rev. James Williams, Presiding Elder of Dakota District Northwestern Iowa Conference, M. E. Church—a second Master Mason. Published at the special request of the citizens of different communities, and others. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Thirteen Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason. By Rev. Robert Armstrong. The author states his reasons clearly and carefully, and any one of the thirteen reasons, if properly considered, will keep a Christian out of the lodge. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

The Myetic Tie, or Freemasonry a LEAGUE WITH THE DEVIL. This is an account of the church trial of Peter Cook and wife, of Elkhart, Indiana, for refusing to support a reverend Freemason; and their very able defense presented by Mrs. Lucia C. Cook, in which she clearly shows that Freemasonry is antagonistic to the Christian religion. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.50.

Ritual of the Grand Army of the Republic. With signs of recognition, passwords, etc., and the ritual of the Machiavelli and Blacksmiths' Union. (The two bound together.) 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Are Masonic Oaths Binding on our Inheritors? A. L. Post. Proofs of the enforceability of such oaths and the consequent duty of all who have taken them to openly repudiate them. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Knight Templarism Illustrated. A full and complete illustration of the six degrees of the Council and Commandery, comprising the degrees of Royal Master, Select Master, Super-Excellent Master, Knight of the Red Cross, Knight Templar and Knight of the Temple. 341 pages, in cloth, $1.00; $0.80 per dozen. Paper covers, 50 cents; $4.00 per dozen.

Mah-Hab-Bone comprises the Hand Book, Master's Carpet and Freemasonry at a Glance. Bound in one volume. This makes one of the most complete books of information on the workings and symbolism of Freemasonry extant. Well bound in cloth, 50 cents; per dozen, $5.00.

United Sons of Industry Illustrated. A full and complete illustration of the secret trades-unions of the above name, giving the signs, grips, passwords, etc. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.50.

National Christian Association. 221 W. Madison St., Chicago, Ill.

Morgan's Exposition, Abduction and Murder, and OATHS OF 33 DEGREES. Composed of "Freemasonry Exposed," by Capt. Wm. Morgan; "History of the Abduction and Murder of Morgan;" "Valance's Confession of the Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan;" "Bernard's Reminiscences of Morgan's Times;" and Oaths and Penalties of 33 Degrees. 304 pages.

In the Collar; or, the Coming Conflict. By A. Penick. "A historical sketch, by a United Presbyterian minister, vividly portraying the workings of Secularism in the various religious, domestic, social, religious, professional and public life are trembled and harassed by the baneful workings of the lodge. Being presented in the form of a story, this volume will interest both old and young, and the moral of the story will not have to be searched for. $1.50 each; $15.00 per dozen.

Light on Freemasonry. By Elder D. Bernard. To which is appended "A Revelation of the Mysteries of Odd-fellowship (old work.)" by a Member of the Craft. The whole containing over five hundred pages, lately revised and republished. In cloth, $1.50 each; per dozen, $15.00. The first part of the work, "Light on Freemasonry," 416 pages, 75 cents each; per dozen $7.50.

Secret Societies, Ancient and Modern. A book of great interest to officers of the army and navy, the bench and the clergy. General Washington Opposed to Secret Societies. This is a republication of General Joseph Ritner's "Vindication of General Washington from the Stigma of Adherence to Secret Societies," communicated to the House of Representatives of Pennsylvania, March 18, 1837, at their special request. To this is added the fact that three high Masons were the only persons who opposed a resolution of thanks to General Washington for his refusal to private life—undoubtedly because they considered him a seceding Freemason. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Grand Lodge Masonry. Its relation to civil government and the Christian religion. By Pres. H. H. Chubbuck, of the Methodist Church. The non-Christian, anti-republican and despotic character of Freemasonry is proved from the highest ecclesiastical authorities. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

The Master's Carpet, or Masonry and Baal Worship Identified. Explains the true source and meaning of every ceremony and symbol of the lodge, and proves that Modern Masonry is identical with the "Ancient Mysteries" of Paganism. Bound in fine cloth, 420 pp., 75 cents.

Masonry a Work of Darkness, adverse to Christianity, and inimical to republican government. By Rev. Lebbeus Armstrong (Presbyterian), a seceding Mason of 21 degrees. This is a very telling work and no honest man who reads it will think of joining the lodge. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Freemasonry Self-Convicted. By Rev. J. W. Bain. A careful and logical statement of reason why Freemasonry should not be fellowshiped by the Christian Church, and by the United Presbyterian Church in particular. Paper covers: price 30 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Adoptive Masonry Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of the five degrees of Adoptive Masonry, by Rev. J. W. Bain, explaining the degree of Jephthah's Daughter, Ruth, Esther, Martha and Electa, and known as the Daughter's Degree, Widow's Degree, Wife's Degree, Sister's Degree and the Benevolent Degree. 30 cents each; per dozen, $1.75.

Stearns' Inquiry into the Nature and Tendency of Freemasonry. With an Appendix treating on the truth of Morgan's Exposition and containing remarks on various points in the character of Freemasonry. A Dialogue on the necessity of exposing the lodge. 338 pages: cloth, 50 cents each; per dozen, $5.00. Paper covers, 40 cents each; per dozen, $4.00.

The Broken Seal. or Personal Reminiscences of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan by Samuel D. Greene. One of the most interesting books ever published. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper covers, 40 cents; per dozen, $4.00.

Exposition of the Grange. Edited by Rev. A. W. Green. Illustrated with engravings, signs, grips, etc. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Good Templarism Illustrated. A full and accurate exposition of the degrees of the Lodge, Temple and Council, with engravings showing the signs, grips, etc. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.50.

Oaths and Penalties of the 33 DEGREES OF FREEMASONRY. To get these thirty-three Masonic bonds and oaths, the candidate takes half-a-million horrible oaths. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Reminiscences of Morgan Times. By Elder David Bernard, author of Bernard's Light on Masonry. This is a thrilling narrative of the incident which led to the death of Bernard's Rev. Dr. Freemasonry. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Freemasonry Contrary to the Christian Religion. A clear, cutting argument against the lodge, from a Christian standpoint. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Bernard's Appendix to Light on Masonry. Showing the character of the institution by its terrible oaths and penalties. Paper covers 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Secret Societies. A discussion of their character and claims. By Rev. David McDill, Pres. J. S. Church, Pres. K. W. Beecher, J. C. Hooper, etc. $3.35. Paper cover, 15c. Per dozen, $1.25.

Prof. J. G. Carson, D. D., on Secret Societies. A most convincing argument against fellowshiping Freemasons in the Christian Church. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Secret Societies, Ancient and Modern, and COLLIER SECRET SOCIETIES. Composed of the two pamphlets combined in this title, bound together in cloth, $1.00 each; per dozen, $9.00.

National Christian Association. 221 W. Madison St., Chicago, Ill.

Narratives and Arguments, showing the conflict of secret societies with the Constitution and the Union and of the States. By Francis Semple. The fact that secret societies interfere with the execution and pervert the administration of law is here clearly proved. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

History Nat'l Christian Association. Its origin, objects, what it has done and aims to do, and the best means to accomplish the end and sought the Articles of Incorporation, Constitution and Laws of the Association. Etc., each, per dozen, $1.50.

Rituals and Secrets Illustrated. Composed of "Temple of Honor Illustrated," "Adoptive Masonry Illustrated," "United Sons of Industry Illustrated" and "Secret Societies Illustrated." $1.00 each; per dozen, $9.00.

ON ODDFELLOWSHIP.

Revised Odd-fellowship Illustrated. The complete revised ritual of the Lodge, Encampment and Rebekah (Indies) degrees, profusely illustrated, and guaranteed to be strictly accurate; with a sketch of the origin, history and character of the order, over one hundred foot-note quotations from standard authorities, showing the character and teachings of the order, and an analysis of its character. By President J. Blanchard. This ritual corresponds exactly with the "Charge Books" furnished by the Sovereign Grand Lodge. In cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $9.00. Paper cover, 50 cents; per dozen, $4.00.

Odd-fellowship Judged by its Own Utterances. Its Doctrine and Practice Examined in the Light of God's Word. By Rev. J. H. Brockman. This is a candid, clear, and dispassionate discussion of the character of Odd-fellowship, in the form of a dialogue. In cloth, 50 cents; per dozen, $4.00. Paper cover, 25 cents; per dozen, $2.50. German edition, entitled "Christian and Ernst," paper covers, 50 cents each. The German edition is published by the author.

Sermon on Odd-fellowship and Other Secret Societies. By Rev. J. Sarver, Pastor of the Methodist Church, Leechburg, Pa. This is a very clear argument against secretism of all forms and the duty to disfellowship Odd-fellows, Freemasons, Knights of Pythias, etc. The sermon is shown by their confessed character as found in their own publications. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Other Secret Society Rituals.

Temple of Honor Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of "The Temple of Honor and Temperance," commonly called the Temple of Honor, a historical sketch of the order, and an analysis of its character. A complete exposition of the Subordinate Temple, and the degrees of Love, Purity and Fidelity, by a Templar of Fidelity and Past Worthy Chief Templar. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Knights of Pythias Illustrated. By Past Chancellor. A full illustrated exposition of the three ranks of the order, with the addition of the "Ancient Mysteries of the Temple of Honor." The lodge-room, signs, countersigns, grips, etc., are shown by engravings. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Sermon on Secret Societies. By Rev. H. H. Chubbuck. As presented in the Temple of this sermon is to show the right and duty of Christians to examine into the character of secret societies, no matter what object such societies profess to have. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

History of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. As presented in the Temple of this book contains indisputable, legal evidence that the abduction and murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan, for no other offense than the revelation of Masonry. It contains the sworn testimony of over twenty persons, including Morgan's wife and no candid person, after reading this book, can doubt that many of the most respectable Freemasons in the Empire State were concerned in this crime. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Judge Whitney's Defense before the GRAND JURY. As presented in the Temple of this key was Master of the lodge when S. L. Keith, a member of his lodge, murdered Ellen Sledge. Judge Whitney, by attempting to bring Keith to justice, brought the vengeance of the lodge upon him, but he boldly replied to the charges against him and afterwards renounced Masonry. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Masonic Conspiracy. Resulting in a fraudulent divorce, and various other outrages upon the rights of a defenseless woman. Also the account of a Masonic murder, by two eye-witnesses, by Charles H. Myers. This is a most interesting, true narrative. 50 cents each; per dozen, $5.00.

Pres. H. H. George on Secret Societies. A powerful address, showing clearly the duty of Christian churches to disfellowship secret societies. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Discussion on Secret Societies. By Elder M. S. Newcomer and Elder G. W. Wilson, a Royal Arch Mason. This discussion was first published in a series of articles in the Church Advocate. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Freemasonry a Fourfold Conspiracy. Address of Pres. J. Blanchard, before the Pittsburgh Convention. This is a most convincing argument against the lodge. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Holden With Cords. On the Power of the Secret Empire. A faithful representation in story of the evil influence of the secret societies. By E. K. Flato, Author of "Little People," "A Sunny Life," etc. This is a thrillingly interesting story accurate in its facts, and mainly a narration of historical facts. In cloth $1.00; per dozen, $9.00.

Secrecy vs. the Family, State and Church. By Rev. M. S. Drury. The antagonism of organized secrecy to the welfare of the family, state and church is clear. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Sermon on Masonry. By Rev. J. Day Brownlee. In reply to a Masonic Oration by Rev. Dr. Mayer, Wellsville, Ohio. An able sermon by an able man. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Sermon on Secretism. By Rev. R. Theo. Cross, pastor Congregational Church, Hamilton, N. Y. This is a very clear array of the objections to Masonry that are apparent to all. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Freemasonry at a Glance illustrates every sign, grip, and ceremony of the first three degrees. Paper covers, 15c. Single copy, six cents.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

COUNTRY.

Governor Oglesby was elected chairman of the Illinois State officers, acting as trustee of the Lincoln homestead, to take charge of the old home of the martyred President. They have received a deed of the property, have assumed control, and a custodian will be appointed in a few days.

Georgia's convict-lease system is doomed. The cruelties practiced on the unfortunate criminals are said to be shocking, and the State officers and people are determined to abolish the practice.

The captain of the Cleveland, Ohio, base ball club was fined $10 Thursday for playing the National game on Sunday. This was a test case. A city ordinance permits and the State law prohibits ball playing on the first day of the week.

Two representatives of the Roman clergy of Memphis, Tenn., and New Orleans, La., have gone to New York to present a memorial, signed by many Catholics of the South, to the Rev. Dr. McGlynn, expressing sympathy for him. The gentlemen will wait on Archbishop Corrigan and protest against Dr. McGlynn's excommunication.

The Wine, Beer, and Liquor Dealers' Association of the State of New York took over 900 carriages for their street parade in New York City last Wednesday.

The Washington county, Texas, election cases were brought to a close Tuesday. A large number of citizens were charged with intimidation, destroying ballot-boxes, and other illegal acts about a year ago. The jury brought in a verdict of not guilty to the second count, charging destruction of ballot boxes; disagreement on the other counts. The cases were continued.

A new disease among cattle, which baffles the veterinarians, has broken out at Galesburg, Ill. Ten cows out of one herd died Wednesday, and the malady is still spreading.

It is said that there is intense excitement in Lenoire county, Arkansas, over a reported uprising of the negroes. Some of the people are alleged to have attacked a planter, and three were arrested, among them a justice of the peace, and many others are arming and preparing for revenge.

Professor H. S. Whitney, of the excelsior Academy, on the shore of Lake Minnetonka, Minn., was drowned in the lake Thursday afternoon. Three children were playing on a raft which went to pieces, and he, swimming out to save them, became tangled in the weeds and drowned. Two of the children were rescued alive, but the third was drowned.

Colonel G. C. Gravis, Lieutenant Colonel of the Twentieth Iowa Cavalry, and Brigadier General of the Kansas National Guards under Governor Glick's administration, was burned to death in the barn of the Topeka Fire Department Wednesday. Four horses perished in the flames.

Two murders occurred at Sunday picnic near Exeter, Neb. A good deal of beer had been indulged in, and the festivities continued until late. About 10 o'clock a party of men made a dash for the intoxicants, and in defending the bar Frank and John Newer were shot dead, one through the head, the other through the brain. The murderers have not been arrested.

Twenty Norman horses perished in a fire in a barn near Hastings, Minn., late Sunday night. The animals were the property of William Mies & Son; the building was struck by lightning.

A frightful collision, with loss of life, occurred on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad at Glen Easton, a point twenty-four miles east of Wheeling, Wednesday morning. A west-bound emigrant train was descending a heavy grade, when it crashed into an east-bound freight train with fearful velocity, wrecking both engines and badly smashing up a large number of cars. The passengers of the train consisted of Norwegians, Finns, Danes, Germans, Dutch and a few English. The engineer and fireman of the emigrant train were found to be the only two persons killed outright, but some twenty were injured.

Reports from the Colorado Indian disturbance state that Governor Adams was notified Thursday that Major Leslie had Colorow and his band corralled. The Indians refused to treat with the Major or Sheriff Kendall, and the Governor was asked to lend his assistance at a powwow. Later this was contradicted and the Indians were reported entrenched in the hills, and are so well protected by natural fortifications that their dislodgement by all the State militia combined would be impossible. A battle was said to have taken place on Friday between Sheriff Kendall's men and a band of Indians. Deputy Sheriff Jack Ward is killed, and several of the posse are wounded. Several Indians are reported killed. So far as known, Kendall retreated and the Utes swarmed out from the reservation bent on revenge. They were only held in check by the presence of the colored troops from Fort Duchesne, who appeared just in time to save Kendall and his party from slaughter. The officers of the Colorado National Guard are fully aware of the gravity of the situation, and they confess that they do not look for peace until the snow in the mountains is heavy enough to prevent the Indians from moving.

Charles Alexander Percy of Suspension Bridge, a young man 27 years old, and by trade a wagon-maker, carriage trimmer and painter, made a safe trip through the whirlpool rapids to-day in a life-boat built by himself, and upon the construction of which he has been engaged during the past summer. The boat is about seventeen feet long, with air chambers at either end, in one of which Percy made the voyage.

National bank depositories now hold $20,800,000 of government funds, the greatest amount ever held at one time.

FOREIGN.

In the House of Commons on Friday night after a lengthy debate, Mr. Gladstone's resolution in regard to the government's action in proclaiming the Land League was defeated, the vote standing 272 to 194.

The rains of Sunday night left the City of Mexico almost entirely under water. Pedestrians could not make their way through the flooded thoroughfares. Monday the shops were being pumped out.

The excursion yacht Monarch was capsized by a squall in Bristol Channel on Friday, and fifteen persons were drowned.

In mid-ocean, Aug. 15, the thirteen passengers and sailors of the burned steamer City of Montreal were picked up by the German vessel Mathilde. The castaways suffered very much from thirst. They were landed at Falmouth.

The London Standard Berlin correspondent telegraphs that he has learned from the highest authority that Germany has agreed to support Russia in Bulgarian affairs on condition of Russian neutrality in event of a war between Germany and France.

Fire broke out in the composing room of the Montreal Herald Friday night, and three compositors are believed to have perished in the flames. One of the men, seeing how rapidly the flames spread and that there was no hope of saving the paper, rushed back to demand his pay; before he could return the floor fell in, and he disappeared in the debris, and has not been found. A half dozen business houses in the building were destroyed, and the loss will reach $500,000.

London dispatches state that under the auspices of the Liberal League and the Radical and Irish Temperance Club a procession containing 10,000 men marched to Trafalgar Square, and listened to speeches by Messrs. Biggar, Nolan, Quinn, and Shirleaf, members of Parliament, against coercion. A resolution denouncing the proclamation of the Irish National League was adopted. In the vote in the House of Commons, Friday, on Mr. Gladstone's motion relative to the proclamation of the league, nine Liberal Unionists supported Mr. Gladstone, and seventeen other members of the party were absent and unpaired. The victory of the government by 78 majority has induced it at once to commence the warfare, and John Manderville, William O'Brien, and others have been summoned for making incendiary speeches.

REPORTS OF GOVERNMENT CHEMISTS

As to Purity and Wholesomeness of the Royal Baking Powder.

"I have tested a package of Royal Baking Powder, which I purchased in the open market, and find it composed of pure and wholesome ingredients. It is a cream of tartar powder of a high degree of merit, and does not contain either alum or phosphates, or other injurious substances."

E. G. LOVE, Ph.D."

"It is a scientific fact that the Royal Baking Powder is absolutely pure."

"H. A. MOTT, Ph.D."

"I have examined a package of Royal Baking Powder, purchased by myself in the market. I find it entirely free from alum, terra alba, or any other injurious substance."

HENRY MORTON, Ph.D., President of Stevens Institute of Technology."

"I have analyzed a package of Royal Baking Powder. The materials of which it is composed are pure and wholesome."

S. DANA HAYES, State Assayer, Mass."

The Royal Baking Powder received the highest award over all competitors at the Vienna World's Exposition, 1873; at the Centennial, Philadelphia, 1876; at the American Institute, New York, and at State Fairs throughout the country.

No other article of human food has ever received such high, emphatic, and universal endorsement from eminent chemists, physicians, scientists, and Boards of Health all over the world.

NOTE.—The above DIAGRAM illustrates the comparative worth of various Baking Powders, as shown by Chemical Analysis and experiments made by Prof. Schedler. A pound can of each powder was taken, the total leavening power or volume in each can calculated, the result being as indicated. This practical test for worth by Prof. Schedler only proves what every observant consumer of the Royal Baking Powder knows by practical experience, that, while it costs a few cents per pound more than ordinary kinds, it is far more economical, and, besides, affords the advantage of better work. A single trial of the Royal Baking Powder will convince any fair-minded person of these facts.

* While the diagram shows some of the alum powders to be of a higher degree of strength than other powders ranked below them, it is not to be taken as indicating that they have any value. All alum powders, no matter how high their strength, are to be avoided as dangerous.

The more pressing news from the men out in the front of our lodge-battle, has constrained us to lay aside an entertaining letter from our Bavarian artist friend, and an account from the Inter Ocean of the preliminary investigation for the promised Masonic trial of the boddler and run-away McGarigle. This whole matter is too ridiculous for a serious thought, only as it shows the astonishing audacity of Freemasons. It is at such sacrifice of our feelings, our readers may be assured, that we are compelled to postpone this story. Sheriff Matson and the members of Lincoln Park Masonic lodge are likely to wink themselves blind with their private signals over this matter.

Monday was the great day of the year for the labor-lodge "boss." In Chicago, some of his followers tramped the streets and enjoyed a picnic in a rain storm, but multitudes took to the saloon early in the day. Probably no class would work so hard against the abolition of the day as the saloon-keepers. We are glad to learn that protests against Miss Willard's bad counsel to join the labor lodges for the sake of temperance, are so strong that she may yet be convinced of the error. But it is the plainest of moral truths that men are not saved from one sin by striking hands with them in another.

But a more significant parade took place in Chicago on the day before, when some thousands of German Catholics tramped nearly half a score miles through the city, and opened the convention of German Catholics, about which there has been of late so much controversy. In the hall the portraits of Presidents and popes are ranged side by side, and the papal flag lovingly wraps itself about our own national emblem, which we can well imagine to shrink from the contact as from the embrace of a serpent. It is expected there will be a Teutonic explosion against Irish supremacy before this meeting, the first of its kind in this country, is over.

Winnipeg, the capital of Manitoba province, which is just now the cynosure of all eyes because of her brave and determined fight against Sir John Macdonald and the Canadian Pacific monopoly, has some attractions which our American cities cannot boast. The old New England Sabbath, the butt of infidel ridicule, and almost vanished glory of our American institutions, is there enjoyed to the full. It is a city scarce twenty-four years old, too insignificant twenty years ago to be noticed in the encyclopedias, yet now has 23,000 population and church sittings for 15,000. On the Lord's day the streets are empty and the churches full. All places of business are closed, the street cars housed, and everybody enjoys the blessed old-fashioned day of rest and quiet.

Ten years ago, the missionary R. G. Wilder, with broken health after thirty years labor in India, began the publication of the Missionary Review, for the encouragement of Christian missions above every sectarian or private consideration. The Review has become one of the ablest and greatest of missionary publications, filling a field of its own and doing a noble work. But Dr. Wilder is a sufferer from an incurable disease, and knowing that his days are numbered he prefers to give up his work here and return to India to yet a few days tell the good news of Christ, and then die on the field of his life's battle. His wife and daughter who go with him are equally devoted to the great cause of missions. This determination gives us a picture of Christian devotion upon which it is good to meditate.

The Grand Army claims to be non-political, but there must be more care or the order will have to answer a graver charge. McClaughry, one of the conspirators who has been robbing Cook county, having given up the fight for a new trial, accepted his sentence, and is serving out his time in Joliet, was a member of the order. A petition is in circulation for Gov. Oglesby, another member, to pardon him. It is said 10,000 Grand Army men have signed it without question, and the whole order is a unit in the matter. The guilt of this man was so plainly proved in the great boddler trial that it is simply amazing how these men can substitute the performances of their lodge for all reason, right and law. The Grand Army may outlive the political charge, but if it attempts to break down law and shield crime, its name should rot.

Fairmount, Indiana, is settled by Quakers. They are strong and practical disbelievers in lodgery and in the saloon as well. Neither abomination can they tolerate. For years they have kept away the liquor dealer, but more than once our old friend Jonathan Winslow had to lead the assault and order the agent of death and hell to depart, before he had to be helped. A fellow named Smith was lately defiant, but a meeting was held in one of the churches, and a vigilance committee appointed. A few weeks ago his new saloon was given the dynamite bounce. He got the broken timbers together and was ready again to open. But last Friday 300 men, women and children gathered about and tore the poison-trap to pieces with picks and axes, and reduced it to kindling-wood. The people are unanimous against the saloon, and they protect their homes against it as they would against a tiger. They are right.

Christ came "that the thoughts of many hearts might be revealed." He still comes in the presence of some great truth upon the conscience of a nation. The people of East Tennessee are amazed at the revelation of character the prohibition discussion has developed in Judge R. R. Butler, representative in Congress from the first district. He has all along been in favor of the amendment, and known as a life-long temperance man, but the golden bribes of the liquor dealers have, like Ithuriel's spear, revealed the devil that is in him. He has sold himself to the saloon for $2,000 in cash with an additional $3,000 if he can carry his district against the amendment. The Judas bargain has been so thoroughly exposed that it is hoped the reaction will win to the right side many wavering votes; but the blood-money of the saloon is corrupting in every direction, and may succeed for the time in putting off the happy day of prohibition.

Lord Salisbury has an apparent victory over his Irish opponents. He has proclaimed their National League as dangerous; and a meeting having been called at Ennis to meet on the Sabbath, that too was proclaimed. Ireland was at the excitable war pitch all the week. Tens of thousands were to come and have their meeting, in spite of proclamations or bayonets. But the government was firm. Troops and a large body of police occupied the ground on Saturday and the League crowds, led by six members of Parliament and a few priests, met outside the lines and speaking began from carriages, but the crowd was soon dispersed under protest. This is a dangerous step for the government. No premier has of late years attempted to suppress a political meeting of a harmless character. The radical party looks on with surprise and inward satisfaction, believing such strained efforts cannot long endure, and are a prelude to the downfall of the Salisbury government. Mr. Gladstone in an article in the Nineteenth Century contends that the results of the late elections are equivalent to an improvement of the Liberal party strength of 22 per cent, and that a new election would leave the Tory party in a minority of 103 in Parliament.

CHRISTIAN MORALITY VERSUS NATURAL MORALITY.

BY REV. B. W. WILLIAMS.

Secularists, when contending against the use of the Bible in the public schools, sometimes gravely tell us that they are not opposed to all moral teaching, but only to the Christian theory of morals; they favor the teaching of natural morality. Among the "Nine Demands of Liberalism" there is one to the effect that all laws favoring Christian morality shall be abrogated, and that all our laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality. In order that we may rightly judge as to the relative merits of the two codes, let us institute a comparison—or rather a contrast—between them. This will aid us in making the choice intelligently.

Christian morality is that pure, wholesome, and benevolent system of ethics taught in the Christian Scriptures; natural morality is that loose, intangible, and licentious code of morals afforded by the light of nature. Which shall we enforce and practice? Let us take a few specimens from each.

The Ten Commandments, interpreted in the light of the sermon on the Mount and the life and example of Christ, form a brief but comprehensive epitome of Scriptural morality. Rightly considered, they condemn every vice, and enjoin every virtue. They are still more briefly summarized by the Saviour in the command, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy strength, and with all thy mind; and thy neighbor as thyself." Luke 10: 27. Jesus laid down the Golden Rule, "Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them." Matt. 7: 12. James says, "Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this, To visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the world." James 1: 27. Paul says, "Abhor that which is evil; cleave to that which is good." Rom. 12: 9. He emphatically denounces such crimes as "adultery, fornication, uncleanness, lasciviousness, idolatry, witchcraft, hatred, variance, emulations, wrath, strife, seditions, heresies, envyings, murders, drunkenness, revelings and such like;" and he plainly declares that "they which do such things shall not inherit the kingdom of God." Gal. 5: 19-21. The whole tenor of the Bible is to teach us that "denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, we should live soberly, righteously, and godly, in this present world." Titus 2: 12. These are specimens of the pure and perfect morality taught in the Christian Scriptures.

We next inquire as to that vague, doubtful, non-descript something termed "natural morality." In order to fully understand it we must notice the lives and teachings of its prominent votaries. Let us notice the kind of morality taught and practiced by some leading champions of unbelief who rejected the morality of the Bible, and were guided only by the light of nature.

Hume maintained that pleasure or profit is the test of morals; that "suicide is lawful and commendable;" and that the Seventh Commandment is not binding on either sex. Bolingbroke taught that "the chief end of man is to gratify the appetites and propensities of his animal nature." Rousseau, according to his own confession, was a habitual liar, thief, libertine, and debauchee. Voltaire, we are told, "contended for the unlimited gratification of the sexual appetites, and was a sensualist of the lowest type." Lord Herbert apologized for lewdness, and argued that the "indulgence of lust and anger is no more to be blamed than thirst or drowsiness." Helvetius moralized on this wise: "It is not agreeable to policy to regard adultery as a vice in a moral sense. If men will call it a vice, they must confess that there are vices which are useful in certain countries and ages."

Thus we see that while Christian morality enjoins truth, honesty, virtue, chastity, temperance, benevolence, the love of man, and the fear of God, natural morality allows falsehood, dishonesty, sensuality, vulgarity, obscenity, profanity, and wickedness of every kind. I now call attention to the following points of contrast between Christian morality and natural morality:

1. Christian morality is derived from the unerring Word of God; natural morality is deduced from the fallible maxims of men.
2. Christian morality exhibits the principles of vice and virtue in clear and unmistakable terms; natural morality leaves them in obscurity and uncertainty.
3. Christian morality regards both the outward conduct and the motives of the heart; natural morality considers only the overt act.
4. Christian morality has its fundamental support in religious truth; natural morality has no support other than mere expediency, utility, or self-interest.
5. Christian morality prescribes our duty to both God and man; natural morality has reference only to our duty to man.
6. Christian morality teaches men to practice virtue because it is right; natural morality requires virtuous conduct only as a matter of policy.
7. Christian morality encourages men to be good by the rewards promised to the righteous; natural morality offers no such encouragements.
8. Christian morality restrains men from vice by the punishments threatened to the wicked; natural morality affords no such restraints.
9. Christian morality impels men to righteousness by a sense of their obligation to God; natural morality offers no such incentives.
10. Christian morality finds a solid foundation for virtuous character in the renovation of the heart; natural morality affords no such basis for virtuous character.

Other points might be enumerated, but these will suffice. In view of these considerations, it would seem that the effort to substitute natural morality for Christian morality is a deliberate blow against social purity and order.

This is the general argument; its application to the lodge is direct and plain. It has ever been claimed by Freemasons that their order is a "most moral institution," "the handmaid of religion." It is, according to the English lectures, "the science of morality." Mackey calls it a "strictly moral institution," whose principles tend to make men virtuous. But this is not Christian morality, since it is such as can be accepted by Jews and Mohammedans. The Bible which is on the altars of American lodges is not there to be read and obeyed, but to form a part of the lodge furniture, like the square and compass. It can be replaced by the Koran, the Vedes, or any writings held to be sacred by pagan nations. It is, therefore, not in the lodge for the purpose of enforcing morality.

"Equal love to man" is not a doctrine of the lodge, but love to sworn member of the order, who can be but a small part of the race. Freemasons are sworn to falsehood when they promise "ever to conceal" the secrets of the order. The morality they are taught is of so low a type that they swear each other not to commit adultery with certain known female relatives of Masons. The English lodges have year after year placed at their head a notorious libertine, whom an American actress refused to recognize with the applause of all civilized people. The whole category of Christian morals may thus be shown to be disregarded, both in principle and practice; and the conclusion is inevitable that the Masonic lodge, and all secret orders derived from it, are arrayed against the social purity and order of the human race.

THE NEW KNOW-NOTHING MOVEMENT.

BY REV. E. H. HINMAN.

In the call issued to the new "American party" the following secret orders are specially designated: The Patriotic Order of the Sons of America, the Order of the United American Mechanics, the Junior Order of United American Mechanics, the Order of Deputies, the Sons of Revolutionary Sires, the Political Alliance, the United Minute Men and the grangers. Thus it will be seen that the main reliance of the new movement is in the secret orders. The call congratulates the nation on the rapidity with which these orders have sprung up and their great power. It says, "The world has never before witnessed so many strong, respectable and influential bodies, so speedily banded together for the common purpose of holding the government steadily to its original design, and repelling all forms of attack and plotting against its free institutions."

Evidently the man who wrote this call saw nothing but good in the great net-work of secret orders, and from them they expect sympathy and support. But it remains to be seen whether a political party can rely on many different orders, all secret, all selfish, and in many things arrayed against each other. It is at least an untried experiment, and it seems quite probable that the downfall of the secret lodge system will be at least precipitated by their mutual antagonism. It is not at all probable that the foreign element will coalesce with the new movement. "When rogues fall out honest people get their dues," has come to be a world-wide proverb, and that it may be true in the case of a war between the different secret factions is "a consummation devoutly to be wished."

What this so-called American party means by "laws calculated to eradicate the evils of intemperance" is seen in the following statement of the secretary of their national committee: "Intemperance will be eradicated by improving the whole social constitution. The most advanced prohibitionists are beginning to see that the enactment of sumptuary laws will not cure the evil. Men must be improved morally." This has come to be the favorite doctrine with that class of men whose theory of moral excellence is that it consists in the perfection of self-seeking. The theory holds that all intemperance is the result of poverty and misfortune, and that if you can abolish poverty, you will abolish all intemperance. To do this there are several devices, such as the organization of secret trades unions and Knights of Labor, the issuing of a vast circulation in greenbacks, and the adoption of a prohibitory tariff on manufactured goods and upon all immigrants. This, it is thought, would enrich the laborer and starve the saloonist.

As a system of moral reform it has the merit of great simplicity. It consists in taking off all restraint on men's animal appetites and greed of gain, giving them all they desire for selfish gratification, and teaching that then they will be honest, temperate and happy.

There is another theory precisely akin to this. It is that of the Anarchists. They hold that our criminal laws provoke men to crime, and that if all law and government were abolished there would be universal sobriety and good order. Such theories find special favor with whisky sellers and other criminals. As an appeal to the baser passions of the lowest strata in society, they are sure to have quite a following; but sooner or later even the worst of men will see that they are destructive to their interests, and that it is safer and wiser to have law and government. It is not poverty that causes intemperance, but it is intemperance that causes the poverty. It is not law that causes crime, but crime creates the necessity for law. The world will not be reformed simply by legislation, but legislation is both an aid to, and an outgrowth of moral reform.

This new party makes its appeal to the lower and baser elements of society, and it will have its following, but it is well to remember that, as in the storms that sweep over the earth it is the upper currents that finally prevail, so the influences that are from above, and that appeal to the moral sense of mankind rather than to their passions, must finally have recognition and permanent adoption.

Washington, D. C.

IN PRISON FOR PREACHING.

NOTES FROM CHARLES STREET JAIL, BOSTON.

August 25, 1887.

"Forasmuch then as Christ hath suffered for us in the flesh, arm yourselves likewise with the same mind; for he that hath suffered in the flesh hath ceased from sin." 1 Peter 4: 1.

Several years ago President Robinson of Brown University published an article in the New York Independent in which he sought to prove that the Lord Jesus Christ uttered the twenty-second Psalm while hanging on the cross.

"The testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy." Rev. 19: 10. What Christ foresaw of his sufferings to be endured for man during his first advent, and foretold through the writers of the Old Testament, that, in due time, he actually, historically accomplished, as we learn from the writers of the New Testament. Of course this fulfillment of a part of the prophecies concerning the Redeemer is a sealed guarantee deed, executed by Jehovah of hosts, that not one jot or tittle of all that is prophesied of the Lord Jesus Christ, both in the Old Testament Scriptures and in the New, can possibly fail of complete fulfillment in due time. If God would discharge to the last letter the prophecies of the matchless misery to be heaped on the sinless Son of his love, we may be incomparably sure that not the smallest fraction of the glorious prophecies will fail of equally perfect and complete fulfillment ad verbum ad litteram, word and letter.

He did cry, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me? the assembly of the wicked have inclosed me: they pierced my hands and my feet. They part my garments among them, and cast lots upon my vesture," when he hung bleeding on that cross. Psalm 22: 1, 16, 18, compare Matthew 27: 46; Mark 15: 34. Then he will tread the winepress. He certainly has not trodden it yet. Compare Isaiah 63: 1-6, with Joel 3: 9-17; Zech. 14: 1-19; Rev. 14: 14-20; 19: 11-21.

Meanwhile, those disciples who do not consider themselves above their Master, and those servants who do not insist on occupying a higher position than their Lord, will be content to "go forth, therefore, unto him without the camp, bearing his reproach, for here we have no continuing city, but we seek one to come." Heb. 13: 13, 14. Or, as we are exhorted through the Apostle Peter in the passage quoted at the beginning of these notes, "Arm yourselves likewise with the same mind."

When Peter uttered these words he had learned the mind of Christ. He was no longer the mouth-piece of Satan as when, before, he had contradicted the Master on this very point. (Matt. 16: 21-23.) He no longer tried to defend Christianity with the sword, and so make its success depend on creature strength. (Matt. 26: 51, 52; John 18: 10, 11.) He had learned to believe what Jesus said, instead of opposing the One whom he pretended to call Master. Now, he could exhort others not to fall into the ditch into which he had himself formerly stumbled through his unbelief. "Beloved," he says, "think it not strange concerning the fiery trial which is to try you, as though some strange thing happened unto you; but rejoice, inasmuch as ye are partakers of Christ's sufferings; that when his glory shall be revealed, ye may be glad also, with exceeding joy." 1 Pet. 4: 12, 13.

Christ's true disciples, then, are not to be surprised if bonfires are built around them, and their faith in Christ and faithfulness to him are tested by burning fagots applied to their bodies. The Apostle Paul talks in the same manner: "Let THIS MIND be in you which was also in Christ Jesus;" who being in the form of God did not think that his equality with God was a thing for him to snatch at; "but made himself of no reputation, and took upon him the form of a servant, and was made in the likeness of men; and being found in fashion as a man, he humbled himself, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross." Phil. 2: 5-8.

The Holy Spirit tells us again through this same Apostle Paul, Romans 8: 9, 10, "Now if any man have not the Spirit of Christ he is none of his." "And if Christ be in you, the body is dead because of sin." In writing to the Corinthian Christians Paul boldly affirmed, "We have the mind of Christ." 1 Cor. 2: 16. To these same Corinthian disciples of Jesus, Paul also wrote, "I determined to know nothing among you save Jesus Christ, and HIM crucified."

Everybody agrees that the cross was for Christ and for his contemporary disciples. But do we all agree with the Holy Spirit in saying, "Yea, and all that will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution?" 2 Tim. 3: 12. I confess that nothing in the New Testament has been more convincingly impressed upon my mind, from the day of my conversion in 1855, than this unalterable truth of the Gospel. This may be heresy according to the creed of the Cynosure, but so understand I the Bible of my God and of the God of my fathers. It is applicable to all Christ's disciples in all the days until he come again to take his church to himself, in visible and eternal glory as set forth in this twelfth verse of the third chapter of second Timothy. I am not ignorant that another doctrine is preached by some who say that this Gospel of men forsaking their all for Christ here and now, is not applicable to Christ's disciples here and now.

It is said that eight billion dollars of wealth hoarded in earthly [in?] securities are possessed by professed disciples of Christ in the United States. This mass of concrete contradiction to Christ's commands may seem to some an argument sufficient to justify the denial that persecution must be suffered now by all who will live godly in Christ Jesus. But though such, or an angel from heaven preach any other Gospel than that which Jesus and Peter and Paul preached and practiced, I dare not agree with them. Accordingly it comes to pass that I have been permitted, and am still allowed, in a small way, to illustrate in my experience what I read in my Bible, and suffer prosecution and persecution for freely preaching the blessed Gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ in places of common, public resorts in the principal city founded by the Pilgrim Fathers.

The city council of Boston has decreed that the free, public preaching of the Gospel on Boston Common is a criminal act. In accordance with that decree the court have fined me $50 and costs each, for four sermons preached on Boston Common this summer. In each of the first three cases an appeal to the Superior Court was taken. Bail was required for my appearance at that court in the June and July terms to prosecute my appeal. An aggregate of $800 for the three cases was demanded, and pledged by six bondsmen. But the city did not allow the cases to come to trial in June or in July, though in the latter month they were called, but their trial was deferred by request of the District Attorney. They were not put on the docket at all for August. The plea for this delay was, and is, that those accused of drunkenness, and the cases of such as are in jail must be tried first, and there are so many of these, it is said, that the case for preaching could not be reached, though it actually was reached in the reading of the docket in court, but put off by the government.

The fourth case was brought yesterday for my preaching last Lord's Day on Boston Common. I pleaded that though the preaching was known by me to be in opposition to the ordinance, Sect. XI, chapter XLII of the Revised Ordinances of Boston, 1885, yet as that ordinance was plainly an attempt to abridge unlawfully the religious liberty guaranteed by the United States Constitution and the Massachusetts Bill of Rights; and above all, as it opposed my Gospel commission, it was my plain duty to regard the Constitution and fear God rather than the city ordinance, and preach the Gospel freely to such as chose to listen, on grounds where the public have a right to freely assemble. I, therefore, denied that the complaint which accused me of preaching "against the peace of the Commonwealth" was true.

The judge otherwise decided, as he did in earlier cases, and fined me the highest fine that the city charter permits a judge to impose for any violation of a city ordinance. Not desiring to further jeopardize friends who were willing to give the additional $400 bail required as surety for my appearance to prosecute my appeal to the Superior Court, I was committed to the Tombs for about two hours and then to Charles Street Jail; for all of which I humbly praise the Lord; esteeming the reproach heaped upon me for preaching Christ freely to the common people in places of common resort in Boston, greater riches than the treasures gathered by the Police Commissioners from some 3,000 liquor saloons, and by the Police Courts from many thousand drunkards every year. This is my answer to them who do accuse me of seeking notoriety by disobeying the city ordinances of Boston.

WM. F. DAVIS.

Mt. Washington, Chelsea, Mass.

IN BONDS FOR THE WORD OF GOD.

The imprisonment of W. F. Davis, well and widely known as the Lumbermen's Evangelist, told above, is one of those instances of gross injustice in the name of law, which the people of God have endured from the devotees of the Cain religions of earth, and which have given the world some of its choicest treasures of Christian literature and noblest examples of Christian faith. Bro. Davis has many sympathizers who will lift the prayer of faith for him and reach out the hand of fellowship in his suffering for the truth's sake. From one of these, who bears the honored name of a former governor of Massachusetts, well known as an Anti-mason, we reprint the following letter as it appears in the Boston Evening Journal:

I read in your columns this morning that Rev. W. F. Davis was arraigned in the police court "for preaching the Gospel on the Common last Sunday without a license," was fined $50 for this criminal act, and committed to jail in default of payment.

I laid down my paper to ask: Is this Boston, the cradle of American liberty, where James Otis and John Hancock and John Adams wrested the right of free speech from a despotic King and Parliament? Has the great struggle of an indignant people for "inalienable rights of life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness" ended in the assumption of authority by councils or courts to imprison any men who dare preach the Gospel without license? It would seem that the Revolution was fought in vain. There is small gain in deliverance from a despotic monarch and cabinet if the freedom of the citizen is in equal peril from despotic councils and courts.

By what right can any citizen be arrested, who is guilty of no crime against life or property or social order? If I am rightly informed, Mr. Davis was preaching the Gospel to a company of hearers, quiet, well-behaved, interested in religious truth. There was no breach of good order; there was no indication of a possible disturbance of the peace. But he was silenced by the police, and dragged away to the disgrace of a public trial, and is now confined in jail for the atrocious crime of preaching the Gospel. If such wrongs are possible in the name of law and good government, then law and good government are merely synonyms for an irresponsible despotism.

But I am told that a city statute forbids preaching, and a license can be obtained by application to the proper authorities. My only answer is, statutes that infringe on personal rights, except for cause, are unconstitutional, and liberty is in peril, if they are obeyed without protest. The right to forbid public speech on the Common, which occasions no disturbance, involves the right to restrict private conversation as well, or gathering in groups for social enjoyment.

It is possible to preach the Gospel, free from all molestation of police, in the streets of Canton, and Yeddo, and Calcutta, and Bangkok. What is tolerated in the great centres of the Confucian, and Buddhist, and Bramanic faiths is a crime in Christian Boston, to be punished rigidly by fines and imprisonment. Will it not be wise to invite missionaries of these ancient religions to visit our country to teach us the first principles of religious freedom?

A century ago, Thomas Erskine in England won immortal fame by securing the personal rights of every British subject against the encroachments of kings or judges. The monarch was against him, and the Cabinet and a large majority in Parliament, and the chief judges on the bench, but by his matchless exposition of the principles of English liberty, his unflinching courage and his resolute purpose to succor the defenceless, he won the greatest triumph at the bar in all legal history, and stands at the head of modern advocates. He compelled in the name of justice the repeal of a series of unjust laws, enforced for years by despotic judges. There is a good opportunity for any Boston lawyer to win an honorable fame by defending the victim of an oppressive law, and compelling the repeal of a statute which violates the first principles of personal freedom. I know little of legal technicalities, and have no assurance that this statute may not find legal foundation on which to rest securely. But, as an American citizen, who believes in liberty and not in toleration; as a Baptist, who is proud of the victory for religious liberty won by his fathers against the unjust laws of Massachusetts and Virginia, every instinct in my nature revolts against the tyranny of a statute which compels a minister of Jesus Christ to beg of a civil magistrate the privilege of preaching the Gospel of Jesus Christ. I would go to prison a hundred times before I would surrender the freedom in which I was born.

There is a charming tradition of Patrick Henry, which only lacks good historical authority to be the finest incident in his eventful life. He was called on, so the story runs, to defend a Baptist minister who had deliberately broken the law that forbade dissenters to preach. Attorney and judge and jury felt sure of the conviction of the offender. But the great orator saw an inevitable acquittal in the very words of the indictment. He commenced with great deliberation, "May it please your honor, I wish to call your attention to the crime for which this prisoner is arraigned: Preaching the Gospel of the blessed God!" He paused, after an emphatic reading, which startled the entire court. Then looking the State's Attorney full in the face, he said, "Did I read aright? Listen again to the crime alleged," pornouncing each word with intense earnestness, "Preaching the Gospel of the blessed God!" Then came a long pause, during which his whole frame trembled with emotion, till raising his voice to thunder tones he cried out, "Good Heavens! What an atrocious crime! Preaching the Gospel of the blessed God!" The audience were overwhelmed with sympathy; the frightened attorney shook like an aspen leaf; the judge, recognizing the folly of the whole arraignment, cried, "Sheriff, discharge the prisoner;" and prosecutions of dissenters were at an end in Virginia.

A whole century later, in freedom-loving Boston, a criminal is arraigned on a similar charge—preaching the Gospel without license. There is need of a second Patrick Henry to awaken universal indignation for such an outrage under the forms of law. The Supreme Court of Michigan recently decided a similar statute to be unconstitutional. The Court declared that liberty could not be restrained unless its exercise was proved to be a nuisance; and preaching in each case must be shown to be a nuisance before it can be condemned. It may be hoped that the Superior or Supreme Court of Massachusetts will interpose a shield for the protection of citizens against scandalous law. HEMAN LINCOLN.

THE DECLINE OF THE KNIGHTS.

We observe that Mr. Powderly, chief of the Knights of Labor, repels with much rhetorical vigor and a fine show of sarcasm, the allegation that his organization is on the eve of disruption. "It is true," he says, "we are breaking up. We are at last forced to acknowledge the truth so long, so stubbornly resisted. We are breaking up—breaking up as the plowman breaks up the soil for the sowing of new seed. We are breaking up old traditions. We are breaking up the idea that might makes right. We are breaking up the idea that money makes the man and not moral worth." Mr. Powderly continues in this strain to the length of a long paragraph, stating the various things which the Knights are "breaking up," and winding up, by way of climax, with the assertion that the order "will continue its appointed work of breaking up until universal rights shall prevail." This is all fine enough as a specimen of the labor-leader's eloquence, but it is not convincing argument, and it is not fact. We should be as deeply gratified as Mr. Powderly if the organization he represents should really succeed in the laudable work which he sets before it. We are in full accord with him as to the desirability of "breaking up" intemperance, crime, injustice, poverty, and all the other evils and abuses which he names, and if we thought the Knights were really doing this we would surely be among the very first to deplore their decline.

If all the Knights had been Powderlys, or if the chief himself had been left to shape not only the entire policy of the order, but the action of the local assemblies, matters now might be different. But this he has not been able to do, and no man living could do it. No hundred men with four-fold the executive ability and intellectual grasp of Mr. T. V. Powderly would be equal to the task of holding such a body as the Knights of Labor together for any great length of time. For a time, before the organization had already tried its strength, and while the ardor of the new members was still at a white heat, it did have the appearance of firmness and solidity. But after the cooling process had set in with several great defeats, like the Missouri Pacific strike of last year, the brittleness of the organization began to appear. It soon became apparent that to attempt to fuse together so many non-affinitive substances would only result in mutual resistance, disorder and ultimate failure. Under the broad and easy terms of membership the lowest and least manageable element in the order soon outnumbered the more intelligent and conservative element, predominated over it in the councils of the local assemblies, and finally came to represent, to the public mind, the whole organization. The real good it effected in some directions, in securing juster laws for labor, shorter hours, and other remedial measures, was eclipsed in the public view by the riotous and criminal action of bodies of Knights of Labor engaged in strikes, the brutal assaults upon non-union men, the resort to mob law, the employment of the cowardly and senseless boycott, and the loss and demoralization of business caused by these incessant conflicts and upheavals.

The peace-loving and law-abiding classes within the order, as well as without, have become wearied and disgusted with the useless strife and senseless wrangles, the insolent assumptions and arbitrary methods of the Knights under such leaders as Irons in the West, and the Quinns and Maguires in the East. The ends sought have been no justification for the means employed. The latter have been repugnant to the American sense of justice and fair play.

The decline of the Knights is inevitable. Disintegrating forces are at work upon the order, both within and without. Within, jealousies, rivalries, antagonisms, such as have naturally risen from the composition of its membership, are weakening it daily, and driving out of the order its best and strongest men. Without, antagonized public sentiment is working against it; counter combinations are forming, and enemies are attacking it on every side. It has lost the sympathy and good-will of nearly all conservative and right-thinking men. The General Assembly of the Knights which meets in Minneapolis in October will bring matters to a critical issue. If the better element predominates in that Assembly, and wise counsels prevail, some salutary changes may be made, the order take a new lease of life, and perhaps justify in time some of the high claims which Mr. Powderly has made for it.—Christian at Work.

REFORM NEWS.

ILLINOIS STATE MEETING.

The State Christian Association of Illinois will meet in convention in Belvidere, Sept. 21st and 22nd.

The place has been deliberately and wisely selected, and the occasion will be important in the highest degree. The object is "to expose, withstand and remove secret societies, Freemasons in particular, and other anti-Christian orders, to save the churches of Christ from corruption, and the administration of justice from perversion."

Let the friends of light, liberty, and equal rights rally from all parts of the State. Never has there been a time when there was a greater demand, or more encouragement to work in this cause. Come, then, dear friends, in the name of the blessed Saviour who said nothing in secret, and who by the mouth of his Apostle commanded his followers "to have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them." Come to vindicate his claims and prerogatives as the only true God and the only proper object of worship, and to testify against the infidelity, idolatry and profanity of the lodge. Come to vindicate that liberty wherewith Christ hath made his people free, and to testify against that implicit faith and blind obedience which is imposed and demanded by the lodge. In a word, come to testify to all the professing followers of Christ in Belvidere, and elsewhere, who may hear your testimony, that there can be no communion between light and darkness, and no concord between Christ and Belial. "Ye cannot drink the cup of the Lord and the cup of devils; ye cannot be partaker of the Lord's table and the table of devils."

WM. WISHART, Vice President.
HENRY L. KELLOGG, Sec'y.

THE STATE MEETINGS.

ILLINOIS.

The State Christian Association of Illinois will, D. V., hold its annual meeting at Belvidere, Boone county, September 21st and 22d, opening at 9 o'clock A. M., with a prayer and praise meeting of one hour. Bro. I. R. B. Arnold will precede this session with a six days' series of illustrated lectures, and remain with his full choir of singers and workers until the close of the convention. Pres. C. A. Blanchard, Rev. M. A. Gault and M. N. Butler are positively engaged as speakers. Pres. L. N. Stratton, Dr. D. S. Kennedy and Rev. John Harper have been invited, and it is hoped that Dr. Wishart will preside.

John B. Finch, chairman of the National Prohibition Committee, has called a conference to meet in Chicago, Nov. 30, to which ALL prohibitionists are invited, and as the anti-lodge is the oldest prohibition movement in the country, there should be a full representation from all parts of the State, and at least five delegates appointed to this Chicago conference.

WISCONSIN.

Will Pres. J. W. Wood and his associates in the State executive committee permit me to say that M. N. Butler of Missouri is now working and lecturing in Wisconsin against the Secret Lodge System of iniquity, and will, D. V., continue his labors for one month. If you so order he will be succeeded by an energetic young man in colporteur work. I have arranged with Bro. I. R. B. Arnold to pitch his tent either at Milton or Milton Junction, Sept. 23d, and that on the 28th inst. the tent will be at the disposal of the Wisconsin State Christian Association for a convention. Bro. Arnold offers to remain with his force of nine workers and musicians. Bro. Faris and Bro. Galloway are down for speeches, and Bro. M. A. Gault has Wisconsin on his list. Other speakers can be had if you want them, and will say so. Brother and sister Arnold suggest that if there is any lack of entertainment 100 can be supplied with rations in the "Family Tent," and surely the dwellers round about can bring lunch with an extra ration for a fellow-pilgrim a coverlid or robe, on emergency, and the whole thing be made a camp of the saints, filled with Holy Ghost religion. After talking with brother and sister Arnold I got so wonderfully enthused that I thought I should be glad to take Mrs. Stoddard and, indeed, my whole family to the Wisconsin State meeting. This whole thing is of course subject to the Wisconsin brethren; but I have felt so confident of approval that after a limited correspondence I have ventured to strike out and set Bro. Butler at work, and also make conditional arrangements as above. Gentlemen of the executive committee, friends throughout the State, and emphatically brethren and sisters at Milton Junction, What do you say? Is it the Lord's command to his chosen leaders, "Speak unto the people that they go forward?" or shall we "stand calling on the name of the Lord" a little longer?

IOWA.

Iowa rallies her forces for council at College Springs on the third Tuesday in October, but her near neighbor, Missouri, has not sent out a call yet. Bro. Butler reports encouraging facts attending his few days' labor in that State, and if the standard was set in the name of the Lord many would gather about it. Will not the true and the tried "call a solemn assembly?" I recall the names of sixty-one prominent men whom I have personally known, and with whom I have labored in this cause, who have now "fallen asleep." Does not this startling fact of mortality admonish us who remain to "be instant in season," abounding in the unfinished work left us? Will those who remain in Missouri accept the trust, and move forward for one more gathering?

OTHER STATES.

Bro. Paine, and those who read the Cynosure, will not fail to note that the big tent and convention boom is moving towards Minnesota.

What has become of Bro. Figg, president of the Indiana State Association? Three letters have failed to bring a reply from him. The N. C. A. Board are desirous of co-operating with friends in sustaining a "Tall Young Missourian" who would make it lively for the craft in that State, if only the leaders will call the muster roll, and show their colors. One brave woman writes from the north part of the State, and a few others have responded with some courage, but no official voice has been heard, or general expression of friends received. Is there not a Gideon, or a Joshua, or a Deborah, to lead the hosts in Indiana? Speaks, for the time is short.

RAIDING THE LODGE IN NORTHERN ILLINOIS.

Cherry Valley, Ill., is a town of 815 inhabitants, three churches and seven different secret orders. A gentleman at the depot told me there was a lodge meeting of some kind every night in the week. The M. E. camp meeting is half a mile northwest of the station, and Thursday was the ninth day of its annual session. I reached the stand in time for the forenoon service. The crowd was not large, but orderly, and I should judge composed mainly of well-to-do people from rural districts. Presiding Elder Vanhorn was in charge, and I took the first opportunity to speak with him personally, and bring the anti-lodge work to his notice. Knowing him to be an advanced and zealous subject in the "secret empire" I had not anticipated a very enthusiastic reception and was not disappointed. He remarked, "I never think of the subject, but go right on saving souls," and suiting action to the statement, passed on to the minister's quarters. I spent some hours distributing literature, conversing with any who were willing to talk on the subject, and found both ministers and lay members who avowed their opposition to the whole lodge system.

Parties from Belvidere were interested in the general subject, and especially in the proposed State Convention. Bro. Worcester and his intelligent companion were instant in season, and the good Lord so ordered that sister Worcester had a searching conversation with the Presiding Elder's wife, who attempted a defence of her husband's course on the ground that he had promised to keep secrets and it would be unmanly and unchristian for him to break his solemn covenant. Alluding to the Elder's Temple oath, and the fifth libation of pure wine from a human skull, sister Worcester asked how she could reconcile that with the teachings and example of Christ. No justification was attempted, and after a somewhat extended conference the discussion ended with apparently the most kindly feelings on the part of both parties, who met as sisters in Christ for the first time.

Returning with Bro. Worcester to his home, we planned for future work. We visited Kingston on Friday, and on Saturday canvassed Belvidere. Bro.

Swartz of the M. E. church said, "You cannot find a man in Belvidere more heartily in sympathy with your work than I am." My next call was on Bro. Windsor of the Presbyterian church, who has quite positive views, but prefers to manage matters in his own way and make his own statements. Bro. Walker of the Evangelical Associate church was not at home, and Bro. Clark, Free Methodist pastor, was at Ridot camp meeting. Bro. Reed of the North Side Baptist church had no kind word for the movement, and was at first specially severe on one Franklin W. Capwell, whom he had known in Western New York, and who had afflicted him with a copy of a paper called the Christian Cynosure, which he endured for a time and finally "hired a man to take it off his hands." I did my best to vindicate Bro. Capwell, and when I gave some facts about old Father Ewell and Elder Owen, and others whom I knew on the field of his former labors, I could detect, as I thought, a marked change in his demeanor.

I visited several of the old settlers and the building where the lodge met, where Ellen Slade was held in custody, and where Judge Daniel Whitney faced and foiled the lodge in its attempt to silence and suppress his testimony. I conversed with men who stood outside the lodge on that eventful night, and who knew and still remember the details of that bloody and terrible affair.

Returning on Saturday evening with Bro. Worcester, I attended church Sabbath morning near by, where the preaching was in German. Arrangements were made for me to speak in the evening, and I then went seven miles to Franklin Grove Free Methodist church and spoke at 3 o'clock to a very intelligent and attentive audience. Returning to my evening appointment I was greeted by Pastor Keller and a substantial audience, who certainly "gave earnest heed to the things spoken." In compliance with their wishes Bro. W. will arrange for a further discussion of the secret lodge system among these people.

Failing to meet Elder Stover of the South Side Baptist church in Belvidere on Saturday, I called on Monday for an interview. He is but recently from Massachusetts where he had belonged to several secret lodges, Blue Lodge, chapter and encampment, among them. He attempted a defence of the orders and was most earnestly seconded by his wife. I took my position as an humble "cowan," and listened attentively until I had learned some things and it seemed my time to speak. I opened up the lodge, chapter and encampment very briefly, and when I spoke of the fifth libation from a human skull the wife asked, "Did you say they drank pure wine?" I replied, "Yes, madam, and from a human skull, invoking double damnation if the Knight tells his wife the truth about his initiation;" and then I went on with my statement of facts and objections to the whole system. Our conversation continued for perhaps an hour, and so far as I could discover without the least feeling of unkindness on the part of any one. Bro. Stover stated that for want of time, mainly, he had not been in a lodge of any kind since coming West, and I felt very much drawn towards him by his evident sincerity, candor and gentlemanly bearing during the entire interview. I invited him to attend our State Convention, and assured him of an opportunity to present his views, and sincerely hope he will accept and make us a speech. He had never before heard of the N. C. A., or its distinctive work. Hastening to the train I met the W. M. of Belvidere Lodge, but my time was too limited for comparison of views, and so it is postponed for a future interview.

FROM THE SOUTHERN AGENT.

A Sabbath at Lynchburg among the Virginia Hills.—A Y. M. C. A. Welcome.—Southern Railway Experiences.—The Eastern Tennessee has Drunken Employes and Shabby Conveniences.—Prohibition in Tennessee.

JONESBORO, E. Tenn., Aug. 31, 1887.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I left Washington on the 27th inst. at 8:30 A. M. by the Virginia Midland, for this place, hoping to reach here at 12 P. M. When we reached Lynchburg, Va., 174 miles from Washington, I found the train more than an hour late and connections impossible, so I concluded to remain there over Sabbath.

Lynchburg is one of the old and important cities of the State, having been chartered one hundred and one years ago. It was named after a Judge Lynch, but whether Lynch law originated there, I cannot say, but it has been executed there a good many times. The city is situated on the banks of the James River, about 160 miles from Richmond, and is in the center of the tobacco-growing section of Virginia. It is built on the high steep banks of the river, and some of its streets are too steep for carriages. Others, running parallel to the river, are nearly level, finely paved and have many large and excellent buildings. The scenery is quite romantic. Hills rise in all directions, and on the north the Blue Ridge stands up grandly against the sky. The city has a limited street railway system, the cars being drawn up very steep grades. There is a fine fountain, a new Custom House, and numerous schools and churches. The colored population is large, and they have some elegant and capacious churches.

Nearly all the pastors, however, both white and colored, were away. I called on the pastor of the M. E. church (colored), whom I found to be an intelligent and cultured gentleman. He came from Washington, D. C., where he had been pastor. He belonged to no secret society, and though he had not given the matter much thought, endorsed our views in reference to the effect of the lodge system on the interests of religion. He said, however, that there were a good many Masons in his church and that it would be quite unsafe for a pastor to assail the system. He was glad to read the literature I furnished him, and promised to give the subject his careful attention. I attended service in the morning at the Second Presbyterian church and heard a good sermon from a divinity student. In the afternoon I went to the fine new building of the Y. M. C. A., where I was mostly kindly received by the secretary, who, on my giving my name, recognized me as a correspondent of the Cynosure. I was glad to know that our paper was read. A considerable congregation of young men was ably addressed by a Dr. Grey and the other exercises seemed highly interesting and spiritual. Anti-secrecy tracts and books were gladly accepted. I stayed at the Relay House where are good accommodations at reasonable rates.

I left at 1:20 A. M. on the 29th, but after running two hours our engine broke down and we were detained more than three hours. We were in the mountain region and the scenery was delightful, but the air was so chilly that we all suffered, and were glad to have the warmth of the sun once more. At Bristol we found the East Tennessee train waiting, and at 12 M. were at this place.

Because there is no competing line, this East Tennessee R. R. is worse managed than any other I know of. There are only a very few waiting-rooms on the entire line. There is none at this place, and at some other points the accommodations are of the worst possible character. They grant no stop-over permits on any class of tickets. The conductor, whose breath was redolent of whisky, made me pay double fare from Bristol to this place, or else surrender my ticket to Knoxville.

I met here a most kind reception from Rev. J. M. Hall of the A. M. A. I find here a warm interest in the prohibition campaign, and have yet to find one man or woman who is not in favor of the amendment. I have already made arrangements for speaking here and in the country on the question of the amendment. I have also arranged to speak on the secrecy question at a point four miles from here in the country. I will add that it is regarded as quite uncertain whether the amendment will carry. Mr. Butler, the Republican Congressman from this district, it is said, has come out against it. May God help Tennessee. Yours in the Lord,

H. H. HINMAN.

THE MISSOURI OUTLOOK.

Salting the earth.—Humphrey and Kirksville.—The United Brethren Conference with Weaver and Warner holding down the valve.—The subtle poison of the lodge.—The flood of lodgery flows over Avalon.—Be careful of the colleges.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—The morning of August 25 found me distributing literature to every dwelling in the town of Humphrey, the seat of Humphrey College which had one hundred and fifty students last year. Prof. Smith gave me a cordial invitation to visit the school at some future date.

The day set in rainy, and the next morning in spite of mud I filled Kirksville with literature to hundreds of dwellings, called upon several professors and the editors of both newspapers. The night previous I had listened to a splendid address on higher education by Prof. Nason, late president of the State Normal, and it was a lecture calculated to make men and women better, and point them to a higher and nobler life. It was before the Teachers' Institute; and here, as in Trenton, I put the truth in the hands of many young men and women who control our schools. One church, small though it is, maintains a testimony against the lodge, so I am informed. Never have I found people more friendly and cordial than the people of Kirksville, the Mecca of learning in Missouri, and an important point for the American movement to sow the seed of truth and good government.

At Brashear on the 26th I found the North Missouri Conference of the United Brethren church in session. Bishop Weaver was in the chair and Rev. Warner, his right bower, busy sowing the poison that is to rend the church asunder. The committee, on the last day in the evening and at the last hour, brought in their resolutions, with not a syllable or whisper on the great question of secret societies. But there were a few yet true to Christ and to the right. Rev. A. W. Geeslin, the compiler of the "Exposition of the Grange" and a fearless reformer, brought forward the following paper:

WHEREAS, We believe the Commission appointed by the General Conference of 1885 to revise and amend the Confession of Faith and Constitution of our church was in conflict with the constitution, which says expressly that "No rule or ordinance shall ever be passed to do away with or change this Confession of Faith" and that the constitution cannot be changed except by request of two-thirds of the whole society, Resolved, therefore, 1. That we cannot consistently vote on the proposition submitted to the church by said commission.

2. That we recommend that petitions be circulated on every field to the next General Conference to make no alteration in our Confession of Faith or constitution.

This brought S. H. Bagley, the agent of Avalon College, to his feet with the protest that the paper was entirely out of order, and not proper for discussion in a United Brethren Conference. The paper, however, was briefly discussed and voted upon. Perhaps four votes in its favor.

Rev. M. Bratcher then presented a paper to define, if possible, the position of the conference on secret societies. It read:

WHEREAS, We believe that all secret societies are contrary to the Word of God and infringe upon the rights of those outside their pales and injurious to Christian character; therefore

Resolved, That we will not receive into the church affiliating members of any secret society.

Elder Geeslin made a strong but brief address in favor of the resolution and the great fundamental doctrine of the church. Elder D. A. Beauchamp tried hard, but unsuccessfully, to get the bishop to define the position of the church. The conference was quietly informed that the minor orders had been in the eastern and even in the White River Conference, and Mr. Warner responded, "Yes, and Freemasons, too," and he evidently knows whereof he speaks.

Just think of this conference being so poisoned that only four or five votes were given in favor of the above resolution! No wonder the church has not a dollar of church erection funds. No wonder the missionary collections have not increased with the growth of membership. No wonder Avalon College is on the decline, and instead of hundreds of students, as it had when an Anti-masonic school, it has not even half a hundred, and not one the last year outside of Avalon supported by a United Brethren family! Men who wish their boys schooled to principle and Americanism can hardly afford to patronize such a school in a little lodge-ridden town. The new president is able and willing, as is his noble wife, but the conference did not inspire confidence, and it will be a battle at wonderful disadvantage. Anti-secrecy people should hesitate before sending their children to be educated by those Avalon lodges that have ruined the school. The college agent forcibly informed me that he never had been, and thought he never would be a subscriber to the Cynosure. Anti-secrecy people, when you send your son or daughter to college, remember Wheaton and College Springs, or some like place, where your child will be safe from the contamination of lodgery. Many United Brethren will not remain in a church that communes with Masons and secretists. They believe too much in Bible Christianity for that.

May God hasten the day when the U. B. church will be purged and swept of disloyalty to this great question. Thousands of the rank and file are for meeting this nullification in the courts, if the change of constitution is persisted in. What will be the outcome of all this is hard to tell. We would like to say much more, but we are encroaching on your valuable space.

SPIRITED OPENING OF THE OHIO CAMPAIGN.

Conneaut's Theatrical Church.—Kingsville and Wayne.—An Angry Mason Wills at a Seceder's Word.—Mecca and Gustavus.—A Lively Debate.—Another Throws off the Yoke.

GREENBURGH, O., Aug. 25, 1887.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—The work has fairly begun again in this State. Leaving Silver Lake, N. Y., one week ago this evening, I found myself at 2 o'clock the following morning at Conneaut, Ohio. Here I was conducted by two half-drunken men through the darkness about a mile to where I found accommodations in a hotel. After daylight I found my way to Capt. Z. L. Wood's where I was made very welcome. Arrangements were soon made for meetings in the Christian church; the pastor agreeing that I should have the church for a lecture in the evening, if I would preach for him in the morning.

Conneaut has a population of about 3,000, with no less than ten saloons, seventeen lodges and four

CORRESPONDENCE.

WATCHING THE NEW ORLEANS CONVENTION.

NEW ORLEANS, La., Aug. 27, 1887.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Your many readers may think my voice has been silenced; but, thanks to a kind heavenly Father, I have changed not. I returned here from the country, August 3d, but was very soon overtaken by malarial fever, which has had me confined in doors. I am now able to get about, but am yet weak.

I find the secretists much astir because of the proposed convention, to be held here this winter. I feel that some good was done in the upper parishes this year through my efforts, God helping. Rev. B. Dorsey of Dorseyville is the most whole-souled, out-spoken against secretism in Iberville parish. Dear brethren, there was more than an ordinary meaning in Paul's letter to Timothy, "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith." How many have entered the anti-secret army, but when persecution arises they become silent, or join hands again with Satan. I have been threatened, and even until now I am envied by many. The secretists, too, have used their pernicious influence against me to prevent me from earning a living, but, thank God, he is here and everywhere. I am not working for worldly, but for godly recognition, yet I seek not the enmity of any, but if the truth make them enemies, let them answer it. All who read this pray for me. Peace be unto you all in Christ.

FRANCIS J. DAVIDSON.

THE BIBLE ON THE SABBATH.

EVERLY, Iowa.

God has said fifteen times in the Bible the seventh day is the Sabbath. He has nowhere said the first day is the Sabbath. Twenty-six times God has commanded us in the Bible to keep the Sabbath day holy. Nowhere has he commanded us to keep the first day of the week holy. It is recorded three times in the Bible that Jesus said, "I am Lord of the Sabbath;" but nowhere is it recorded he is Lord of the first day. It is recorded three times in the Bible that God kept the seventh day; but nowhere is it said he kept the first day of the week. One hundred and thirty-three times the word Sabbath refers to the seventh day; but nowhere does it refer to the first day. There are thirty Sabbaths referred to in the Bible as monthly or feast Sabbath; but not one first-day Sabbath spoken of. Twice it is stated that the Sabbath was made for man; but not a word said about the first day being made for man.

The first day of the week is mentioned eight times in the Bible. The first time it is mentioned in Matt. 28: 1. Here the Sabbath and the first day are mentioned together as different days. The Sabbath is the last or seventh day and the other is the first day of the week. It shows plainly they were not the same days, and no hint that they ever would be. The three next times it is mentioned it refers to the resurrection of Christ. The next time is in John 20: 19. Not a word said here about keeping Sabbath. No religious services were held. They simply meet for fear of the Jews. Nobody there but disciples and two of their number were absent. The next is in Acts 20: 7. It is claimed that breaking bread here was celebrating the Lord's supper, but Acts 2: 46 disproves it. Besides Paul preached till after midnight and did not break bread till after that, so it is plain the first day of the week was not kept as Sabbath. 1 Cor. 16: 2 is the last reference I make. It is claimed that this text proves that the first day of the week is the Sabbath. But Matt. 23: 23 proves the reverse. Jesus here stands between the new and old dispensations and says it is right for all men to pay tithes of all they possess. The Jews paid tithes in kind, so they would have to bear burdens to carry their wheat and barley, etc. So Paul tells them they must begin to lay these by on the first working day after the Sabbath so as to have their gifts ready when he comes. Besides Paul tells us he kept the seventh day, but did not keep the first. He surely did not teach one thing and do its opposite, and he says it was his custom to keep the seventh day. The Bible tells us that all the women that followed Jesus from Galilee kept the Sabbath. It is not said that one of them ever kept the first day for Sabbath. It is said that Barnabas and Silas and Timothy kept the seventh day.

It is nowhere stated in the Bible that any of Christ's disciples or himself ever kept the first day of the week or ever commanded any one else to. After mentioning several places where Christ kept the Sabbath, the evangelist states that this was his custom to keep the Sabbath. If God has not given us the command to keep the first day of the week for Sabbath, nor Christ, nor one of the apostles, nor even the women that followed Jesus from Galilee, where did we get it? I answer, from the traditions of the Romish church and nowhere else. In Mark 7: 9-13, we have this whole thing described. Please read these references. God says keep the seventh day for Sabbath. Man says keep the first day. Which shall I obey, God or man? I prefer to obey God, so I shall keep the seventh day of the week for Sabbath.

I. BANCROFT.

REFORM LIBRARIES.

YORK, Pa., Aug. 21, 1887.

EDITORS CYNOSURE:—It seems to be self-evident that all genuine reforms are related closely. If this is true, it follows that a man or woman who only enlists in one reform is a person of one idea. Freemasonry has its old "landmarks" posted up everywhere. They are like barbed-wire fences, only more diabolical. A temperance man always tears his pants in trying to get over the devil's barbed-wire landmarks; and sometimes a temperance woman has had to mend her skirts after making a public exhibition of her agility in the great temperance field. Tariff reformers look as if they had passed through a threshing machine; and the civil service reformers may be likened unto the old soldiers who were forced to "skedaddle" from the bloody field of Bunkerloo. Byron gives us some encouragement when he tells us so beautifully that "when matters get to the worst they sometimes mend." Our great Republic has a strong Constitution; but any horse-doctor can easily see that the great American epidemic is the blind staggers. The hoodwinked secretist staggers around in the dark dens of secretism; and the hoodwinked outsiders stagger up against the barbs of the landmarks and get badly scratched all over. The anti-secret reformer, when in distress, may very properly exclaim, "Oh dear, is there no remedy for the blind staggers?"

After serving in the great anti-secret army for eighteen long years, I am thoroughly convinced that the best task an anti-secret worker can perform is to establish an anti-secret, anti-rum, anti-tobacco, anti-ring, anti-Catholic, and in short, a general reform library. To do this is a very easy task, if the proper steps are taken. "Great oaks from little acorns grow." This is the whole story. And you can't improve on the acorn plan. So, just put in your acorn at once.

As we gain experience in working up reform libraries, and in drawing all classes of reformers into a close communion, we can write up our plans and ideas for the Cynosure, to aid and encourage those who need "more light" and more courage.

E. J. CHALFANT.

AN OLD-TIMER IN KANSAS.

HAZELTON, Kas., Aug. 15, 1887.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I used to be a constant reader of the Cynosure, and quit taking it about ten years ago because I was too poor. I lived at Coffeyville then, and soon after moved to this part of the State which was new then, so as to grow up with the county, which I have to some extent, if I was an old man. I was president of the first anti-secret society of this State for four years, from 1873, I believe, if my memory serves me right. During all this long time I never let an opportunity pass without dealing Masonry a blow.

It is the very opposite of Christianity, while the teachings of our Saviour are all truth, and "the truth," while the teachings of Masonry are all false; it teaches lies and compels its members to tell lies. It is impossible for a Mason who understands the order to be a Christian in truth unless he renounces Masonry. A man can not travel in the "narrow way," and in the "broad way" of Masonry and the world at the same time.

I have in my scrap-book clippings from the Cynosure of ten to fifteen years ago, and among them my own letter charging the defeat of Samuel Pomeroy to the Masonic order in consequence of his Anti-masonic speech at Chicago in 1869. The letter is dated at Coffeyville, Kansas, Dec. 15, 1873.

I am as well pleased now with the Cynosure as I was long ago, but can not do much for the cause for all my time is taken up in trying to direct people on to the "narrow way" that leads to eternal life. May the Lord bless you. Yours in the faith,

N. B. BLANTON.

PITH AND POINT.

WHAT I THINK.

I think the State conventions of Wisconsin and Illinois should be held in the last half of September, and near together, so the delegates can attend both. I think it will require but one shot more from Bro. Wm. Johnston on "Minor Secret Orders," to open some eyes in the G. A. R. Fire on, brother. I think if Bro. M. A. Gault lives long enough our God will be known in the U. S. Constitution. God's order is, "Let your light so shine, that others may see," etc. This question, like prohibition, God in the U. S. Constitution, and secrecy, can only be settled by God's almighty help. Let us learn how to follow our great Commander as he may lead in all these reforms, and we soon shall find we all are where God has arranged for us to be. See Col. 3:11. Yours till victory. —R. SMITH, Maryville, Mo.

A BLESSING.

I hold your paper to be first of all. I have taken it ever since it was first issued, and it has been a great comfort to me. But now my health has failed and I can not see to read, but am left to meditate on what I have read. I have done all I could for you in the past and will not cease till my life's end. I pray that my influence may still be for the glory of God. May God bless you and may your paper be always seasoned with grace. I am now waiting for the call of my Saviour, who is near. —J. COLLINS, Antwerp, O.

ONE WHO DARES TO BE A DANIEL

There is no other enterprise so dear to me. Of course the religion of Christ is first, and the work of the Cynosure is first to be done in that cause. My heart is with you for all it is worth. I was twelve years old when Morgan was murdered, and I remember well the stir it made. My father was an active "Jack"; but God made me an Anti-mason, as well as anti-rum, anti-slavery, anti-episcopacy; and I should name my utter abhorrence of tobacco. I live in a hard region for this work and suffer much privation for the sake of the cause. My wife and I hold our church membership as Wesleyan Methodists three hundred miles from home to be free from secrecy. While I stand out against everybody, everybody is out against me, but if God wants to use me as leaven in the big lump I am willing. —L. B. LATROFF, Hollister, Cal.

ZION'S WATCHVOICE.

It is evident that the influence of secret societies in the church of Christ can not be removed by silence, hence the need of sound and truth-abiding testimonies which are to be rendered first by watching and praying and second by a faithful discharge of their duties by the watchmen on the walls of Zion. In order to protect our Zion against the demoralization of the secretists we must remember that all of whom it is known that they are members of secret societies must be convicted of the evil, and the minister, bishop or pastor who receives them unquestioned to the communion must be guilty of an act of abomination, no matter how he may try to excuse himself. —K. KOERNER.

WHO MAY JOIN THE G. A. R.?

We are told the G. A. R. must have served in the army six months and have a certificate of their discharge from the army before they can be full members. Is this true, or does their initiation entitle them to full membership? Please answer through the Cynosure, in which we are increasingly interested. It seems to get better every week. Its principles are so pure and clear and it bears evidence that the divine hand is in the work. May heaven's richest blessing rest upon the editors and all the faithful workers in this good cause. —MINERVA HARVEY, Pleasant Plain, Iowa.

It is the rule, we understand, to receive no one into the G. A. R. who does not have his discharge papers or cannot prove clearly that he served in the Union army.

BIBLE LESSON.

STUDIES IN THE NEW TESTAMENT.

LESSON XII.—Sept. 18.—Solemn Warnings.—Matt. 7 13-29. GOLDEN TEXT.—Every tree that bringeth not forth good fruit is hewn down and cast into the fire.—Matt. 7:19.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

COMMENTS ON THE LESSON BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The Strait Gate. vs. 13-14. The pursuit of the highest good is subject to one law—it must be attained by entering the strait and narrow way of self-denial. No one ever became very learned or very rich, or distinguished themselves in any line while freely indulging every natural desire. Much more must self-sacrifice be the law of attainment when we come to the highest good of all. It is the person who has no great absorbing aim in life that can always find plenty of room for every demand the world may make upon him, but when he sets himself with singleness of purpose to the attainment of any great object he finds the way growing very narrow and himself growing narrow within if the object is a selfish and ignoble one. The word "narrow" means in the original "troubled" and has reference to the obstacles with which the path to life is crowded. It might be translated difficult. And one reason why it is difficult is given in the warning that follows.

2. False prophets and how known. vs. 15-23. The entrance to life is always beset by false teachers. It was so in Isaiah's day. They who claimed to be the religious instructors of the people "cried 'Peace, peace,' when there was no peace." They were silent on popular sins. Though God had made them watchmen of Zion when they saw the enemy coming they sounded no alarm. The high license error is one taught by many ministers and editors. They lead the nation astray from every principle of truth and righteousness, when they teach that the Government or the state can allow for a certain sum of money a crime which is the parent of all other crimes, and yet be guiltless. So many are deluded by the general silence of the pulpit on this subject to imagine that they can be good lodgemen and good Christians at the same time. The ancient false prophets taught the Israelites that they could mix Baal rites along with the worship of the true Jehovah and yet be good Jews. "By their fruits ye shall know them." Are such religious teachers those who lead the most self-denying lives? Are they willing to spend and be spent in Christ's service? Are they always on the lookout to win souls? The false teachers can always be separated from the true by applying this unailing test. However they may seem outwardly the wolf nature is always sure to crop out in the end. Another test is, Do they show in their whole lives the Christlike spirit of self-consecration? Can they say with him that doing the Father's will is their meat and drink? They may have revivals in their churches, and may seem to do wonderful works, but the point is, do they practice that obedience without which all works are vain? God never meant that the way to life should be a blind way, and he has given us all these warnings that "the wayfaring man though a fool need not err therein."

3. The wise and foolish man. vs. 24-29. To build a religious house on anything outside of Christ is to build one's house on the sand. Too many do this. They say they are as good as others, or that the lodge religion is good enough for them, and thus in a thousand ways cheat themselves of God's free gift of salvation.

From Peloubet's Notes.

1. The house is the general fabric of an outwardly religious life.—Ellcott. 2. The rock is Jesus Christ (Ps. 28:1; Isa. 26:4; 1 Cor. 10:4). He founds his house on a rock who, hearing the words of Christ, brings his heart and life into accordance with his expressed will, and is thus, by faith, in union with him, founded on him.—Alford. "The rock" can be nothing else than the firm foundation of repentance and obedience, the assent of the will and affections as well as of the lips. 3. The sand answers to the shifting, uncertain feelings which are with some men (the "foolish" ones of the parable) the only ground on which they act—love of praise, respect for custom, and the like.—Ellcott. Some build their hopes on worldly prosperity, as if that were a sure token of God's favor; others upon their profession, privileges, or reputation. Everything besides Christ is sand.—Henry. 4. The wind, rain, floods, represent collectively the violence of persecution, of suffering, of temptations from without, beneath which all but the life which rests on the true foundation necessarily gives way.—Ellcott. This prophecy was verified in the primitive church, bearing all the brunt of the waves and storms of the world, of people, of tyrants, of friends, of strangers, of the devil himself persecuting her, and venting all the hurricane of his rage upon her. She stood firm because was built upon a rock. So far from being injured, she was made glorious by the assault.—P. Schaff.

Vers. 13, 14. The way to all good, as well as to heaven, is narrow, but is as broad as the love of God can make it.

The gate is narrow, but every one can enter it who will.

Vers. 15. False professors will creep into the church. But all sheep are not wolves, because some wolves look like sheep.

Vers. 16-19. Time and results will prove every man and every doctrine, whether they are from God.

That religion which produces the best disciples, and changes the most men into disciples is the true religion.

Even the best tree bears some poor fruit.

The only way to bear a life of good fruits, is to have a good heart.

Vers. 15, 20. We must judge by the fruits, but not by first appearances, nor by the tree before it has had time to mature its fruit.

Vers. 22. Many works connected with religion, as giving, church building, etc., can be done by those who have no religion themselves.

Vers. 21-23. Men are never shut out of heaven arbitrarily. Their own character is the angel with flaming sword that keeps them out of paradise.

Vers. 24-27. It is a terrible thing to find all our lives a failure at last.

The only sure foundation of character or hope is Jesus Christ.

It is the storms of life which test whether we are good or not; any house can stand in sunshine.

WASTING FRUIT.

There are, perhaps, comparatively few localities this season where fruit is over-abundant, but where this is a fact, especially in the case of small fruits, it often happens that the price obtained by the producer barely covers the cost of packing, picking, transportation and commission. Indeed, with berries at 6 and 8 cents a box in the streets of Chicago, one can readily perceive that the original price received by the one who has been to all the trouble of cultivating, fighting insects and preparing the fruit for market must be very small.

It is under these circumstances that we frequently see a statement that fruit is rotting on the bushes or on the trees, because the price obtained will not pay for marketing. Such an item always sends a thrill of regret through the mind of the dweller in cities to whom an abundance of fresh fruit would be a blessing.

When all has been canned and preserved in various ways that is necessary for home use there still remain large quantities that cannot be used in these ways, and the home market cuts almost no figure, as most of the neighbors are themselves supplied with fruit, and in any case the price is very low.

Is there, then, no way in which this waste can be avoided, and these bountiful gifts of nature utilized? The subject of canning fruit for market has been suggested in the past years, but has met with several obstacles. Some of these are the difficulty of getting the products into market, and the impossibility of competing in price with the canning factories, where the work is done by the wholesale. The cost of jars and sugar is necessarily larger in proportion in smaller quantities, and also necessitates a large outlay of money, in addition to the labor involved. But dried fruit meets with a ready sale to commission merchants, and calls for little outlay beyond the time and labor involved. Where there is sufficient fruit to justify the purchase of a fruit evaporator or drier, the work is greatly simplified, but in more than one instance, a flourishing business has grown out of as small a beginning as drying a few bushels of apples or berries.

This is especially adapted to the consideration of girls and women who are desirous of earning money at home, and if they never build up a business, they may find their time pleasantly and profitably employed, and at the same time do the world a service by preserving these fruits that would otherwise have perished.

In this, as in all other business, what is worth doing is worth doing well. Much of the dried fruit in market is poor, dirty and mixed with foreign substances, and this fact has in the past created a prejudice against dried fruit. But a good, clean product will soon make a place and reputation for itself and be in demand.—Farm, Field and Stockman.

THE
Man Traps of the City.

BY THOS. E. GREEN.

Mothers—place this book in the hands of your sons
It treats of

The Tiger and His Den.
Cups of Flame.

Emberment.
The Devil's Printing Press.

Etc., Etc., Etc., Etc.

A book that is sensational, not from excited rhetoric or florid figures of speech, but from the facts that flow like molten lava from the pen of the writer. It is a book of timely warnings, where sin and crime are made plain, and the reader is made aware of the danger which they have surrounded by the literature of the day, and painted in strong, true colors. The life of the prodigal is here shown in its true light, not as a life that, though wicked, has its delights, but as a thing of death, now and in future life to be abhorred.—WESTERN CHRISTIAN ADVERTISER.

Price, postpaid, cloth bound, 75 cents.

Paper bound, 50 cents.

The Christian Cynosure.

J. BLANCHARD. EDITORS. HENRY L. KELLOGG.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 8, 1887.

M. N. BUTLER, well known to the Cynosure readers, has entered upon the N. C. A. work, and, D. V., will give his entire time to lecturing and circulating literature for the coming year. He is now in Wisconsin looking up friends and preparing the way for a State meeting. He will probably attend the State meeting at Belvidere on the 21st and 22nd inst., and should friends in Indiana desire he will devote the fall and winter to that State. A number have written to the General Agent from Indiana and he hopes to hear from others soon so as to act intelligently in this important matter.

BISHOP WEAVER, since presiding at White River Conference, Ind., has held another in Missouri, where there was formerly a strong anti-secret sentiment. As usual, he quietly sneered at the opponents of the lodge, told them they had members of secret societies in some of their churches, and also even in the churches of White River Conference, Ind. Dr. Warner in the congregation called out, "Yes! Freemasons, too!" This is about the most pitiful exhibition yet. Old, grey-headed men lifted into prominence by sinful, worldly compliance, jeering at young country ministers, cowed and over-awed by these very men and the terrible craft of local lodges, not because they are in favor of lodgeites, but because, not having power to cast them out, still resolve and vote against them. Warner is said to be, and doubtless is, a Mason. It is blessed that God will render to every man according to his works.

THE LECTURE SEASON.

"If there be in the land famine, if there be pestilence, blasting mildew, locust, or if there be caterpillar; if their enemy besiege them in the land of their cities; whatsoever plague, whatsoever sickness there be: what prayer and supplication soever be made by any man, or by all thy people Israel, which shall know every man the plague of his own heart and spread forth his hands toward this house: then hear thou in heaven." 1 Kings 8: 37.

This prayer was evidently inspired. Solomon himself was so imperfect a character that his case is taken to prove that regenerated people may fall from grace and cease to be children of God. The reason why prayer was to be made toward that house was, that God by promise had made it his dwelling-place. The law was there which is "perfect, converting the soul," and there Christ was pictured in every sacrificed lamb.

The lecture season is now upon us. All the lecturers, and all ministers who preach against the false worship, should agree on an hour to pray together, as Daniel did, with his face toward Jerusalem, which then contained God's whole system of redemption for men. The Abolitionists held concerts of prayer, and we must. For "this kind goeth not out but by prayer and fasting." There is but one person in the universe who can overthrow the lodge system, which has in it no Decalogue, no morality, no perfect example and no atoning blood. That one person is Jesus Christ. He can do it, for he has "all power in heaven and on earth." Without him we can do nothing. Moody's Bible study and drill meetings should be lecturers' institutes against the Satan worship of the world. If the two could be blended, the redemption of the world would draw nigh.

PRESBYTERIANS AND CONGREGATIONALISTS.

These two denominations were originally one; or rather, the second sprang from the first. In the Westminster Assembly there were six Congregationalists or Independents, and as they were known to be backed by Cromwell, they had great weight from that circumstance, beside their large learning and talents.

"The god of this world" favors neither of these denominations. Both were Puritans, and the Congregationalists were Pilgrims. Jenny Geddes threw a stool at a bishop's head for "saying mass at my (her) lug;" Cromwell cut off a king's head; and both denominations "refused to allow even a ceremony which is not enjoined in the Word of God." Of course the lodge-god, who has nothing else but such ceremonies, hates both these forms of religion. The religious people who founded this government had no ideas in common with those which founded secret lodges and erected "temples" to unknown gods.

One thousand two hundred and one Presbyterian churches, more than one-sixth of those belonging to the Presbyterian General Assembly, are reported as "vacant," i. e., without pastors; and of every two Congregational ministers, one is supported in part by charitable funds. Has the lodge anything to do with this?

A few years since the Grand Lodge of Michigan ordered all Freemasons in that State to withdraw from Congregational preaching until the Grand Traverse resolutions, condemning the lodge, should be rescinded. There is a lodge working nightly beside every Presbyterian and Congregational church in the United States; and every pastor is measured and weighed in their scales. All that they ask of a minister is to be let alone by him. If he keeps his communion open to lodge men and allows nothing to be said in his meetings against them, their triumph is sure. But the leading Presbyterian paper in the United States regards their ceremonies as devil worship; and several State Congregational associations have declared the lodge system to be a false religion. The lodge leaders, therefore, distrust those two denominations, and only wish enough Masons to join them to silence their pulpits. Nor have they forgotten that the great Baptist denomination, fifty years ago, was the leading denomination in opposition to the lodge.

This state of things cannot last. It will soon be seen that the lodge antagonizes and disintegrates the churches; and the issue once made, the question will be carried. The rapid multiplication of sub-lodges, like the rage of slavery before it fell, is at once a token and effect of fear. And the end hastens.

SHALL THE GOSPEL BE BOUND?

Rev. W. F. Davis, who is now in a Boston jail for preaching to the crowds on the Common on Sabbath day, is a man of quiet, orderly deportment, and it is difficult to imagine why the Boston authorities should allow him to be incarcerated. He has appeared in all his intercourse with the Cynosure to be an intellectual, gentlemanly and capable man. His winter campaigns to preach the Gospel in the remote lumber camps, where thousands of men go outside of civilization and morality to furnish building material for this great country, prove that Mr. Davis is no specialist preaching on the Common merely because the Mayor and Council forbid it. And the fact that he was first arrested in company with Dr. A. J. Gordon, of the Baptist church, and H. L. Hastings, editor of the Christian, who has a large store and publishing house on Cornhill, proves that he is not alone in his belief that there should be preaching on the Common. Mr. Hastings is known and respected on both sides of the Atlantic as editor, lecturer, and antagonist to the groveling infidelity of the times.

Boston Common has heard sermons long before members of the present city government were born. The father of the late Elam P. Langdon, of Cincinnati, that gentleman told us, climbed into an elm on the Common and preached the first Methodist sermon Boston ever heard, and was not molested.

There is this, however. Both Mr. Hastings and Mr. Davis are known to be open opponents to the secret lodges which march over the Common with the blare of military music on Sabbath to draw young men into their dens of anti-Christ, and draw money from the masses. In this, it seems there is no harm. The only possible question is whether Mr. Davis should persevere in preaching where, like Paul, he must fight with beasts at Ephesus.

But the point Mr. Davis makes is doubtless this: that orderly, well-behaved preaching on that Common to multitudes who are strangers having no church seats, is a part of the "public welfare" which laws and constitutions are made to protect; and he feels it his duty to make a case against an unreasonable and wicked ordinance made to give rowdies and Freemasons a monopoly of the Sabbath use of the public property. And as Baptists, Quakers and Methodists have had a taste of such ordinances, they will doubtless move for repeal. Meantime, this brother is too well known and respected to be allowed by his friends to suffer ignominious confinement.

—The Christian Conservator of Dayton announces that Mr. Reuchlin Wright, son of Bishop Wright, will have charge of the business management of that paper. He will be an excellent assistant to brethren Floyd and Dillon in the good work of maintaining United Brethren principles.

—Bro. Butler, after a few days in Chicago and vicinity, started for Sharon, Wisconsin, Friday, intending to visit also Clinton Junction, Janesville and Milton Junction, preparatory for a State convention. In his late Missouri work he distributed some 9,000 pages of tracts, visited three college towns and two teachers' institutes.

—The White River United Brethren conference, in spite of the opposition of Bishop Weaver and Rev. Wm. McKee who represented the secret society wing, adopted a good resolution on the Cynosure, recommending it to the patronage of the people for meritorious effort against "one of the most gigantic evils" with which the Christian church contends.

—Bro. Alexander Thomson, of the National Board, has yielded to the solicitations of his old friends at Bartlett, Ill., where he taught school several years, to return to them and become pastor of their church. He left his pleasant home and fruit farm near Saugatuck last week and began his ministry last Lord's day. His family remains at Saugatuck for a few weeks longer.

—Rev. C. F. Hawley arrived in our little town last Friday, says the Birmingham, Iowa, Free Press of the 31st ult., and has been visiting among the friends of reform for a few days. He preached in the United Presbyterian church on Sabbath morning and in the Free Methodist in the evening. He reports the work in the State as favorable, and that the interest is increasing.

—Bro. M. N. Butler had some interesting experiences in Missouri which are not noted in his interesting letter. He found at or near Princeton a brother who had taken many degrees in Masonry. When the Holy Spirit came upon him in sanctifying power the lodge devil was cast out of him and the tobacco out of his store. He has prospered in business ever since he resolved to be out and out for Christ.

—Rev. J. Milligan Wylie, of Newcastle, Pa., after attending the Christian Congress in this city last March, journeyed on through several of the Western States and Territories on a mission tour. He found towns full of secret lodges and with few churches, and these were always noted for Sabbath desecration, profanity and drunkenness. The boasted morality of secretism, so ably defined by Rev. B. W. Williams on another page, had no effect in restraining these evils.

—The fall term of Wheaton College opened this week Tuesday. During the long vacation the college buildings and dormitories have been put in excellent repair and a large attendance has been expected because of the early engagements of the rooms in the ladies' hall. Prof. Elliott Whipple, late of the University of Santa Fe, New Mexico, will add to the number and efficiency of the faculty this year. There is a very interesting and hopeful condition in the College church and special labors for salvation are begun.

—The Free Press, in an account of the camp meeting of the Fairfield District, Iowa, Free Methodist conference, tells of a number of the preachers who have been saved from the sin of the lodge. Among them were E. P. Hart, associated with Rev. B. T. Roberts as a superintendent of the Free Methodist church; Rev. C. E. Harroun, Jr., who was a Good Templar; E. Y. Carl, who was a seven degree Mason, and E. E. Hall, who was an Odd-fellow. The lodge was not spared by these brethren when they spoke on the sins of the nation.

—The first part of September has passed and our readers may be expecting the monthly portrait and biography. There is in preparation a sketch of Dr. Walther, the leading spirit among the German Lutherans of America, whose death last May was sincerely mourned by the great denomination to whose welfare he had given the labors of a powerful mind and many years, and under whose influence the churches forming the Synodical Conference of the Lutheran church, and its largest division, were led to take a most uncompromising position against the secret lodge. This interesting biography we promise in the first number of the new volume which will issue September 22.

—Among our letters is a statement from Elder Bancroft of his reasons for the Seventh-day observance as he understands the Scriptures. We have given both sides of this question in several numbers of the Cynosure, and do not wish to close the argument with seeming disrespect to any one of the brethren engaged in it. But we must keep to the distinctive work laid upon us of the Lord. Therefore with one or two further contributions to the discussion we shall close. Any of our readers who wish to read an interesting document should write to our near neighbor, the Bible Banner of this city, for the articles of Elder Canright, who has for many years been a Sabbatarian, but now believes that a mistaken view. We have other articles, especially an excellent discourse by Rev. J. M. Foster, of Cincinnati, on sanctifying the Sabbath, which will appear as early as possible.

OUR CINCINNATI LETTER.

CINCINNATI, O., Aug. 31, '87.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—In the year A. D. 79 Vesuvius burst out in an eruption, filling the air with clouds of ashes and striking such terror into all hearts that men thought not only was the world coming to an end, but that the gods themselves were suffering. The cities of Pompeii, Herculaneum and Stabia were buried beneath a mound of ashes, cinders and sand, and left hermetically sealed. On that fatal night a Roman sentinel kept watch at the gate that looked toward the burning mountain. Amid the confusion and terror he had been forgotten; and, as Rome required her sentinels, happen what might, to stand at their post, unless relieved by the guard or set at liberty by their officers, he had to choose between dishonor and death. He chose the latter. "He would not purchase life at the expense of a soldier's honor or the price of his oath." He was faithful unto death. "After seventeen centuries they found his skeleton standing erect, clad in its rusty armor, the helmet on his empty skull and his bony fingers still closed upon his spear." His loyalty to the Cæsars is a pattern of the Christian's loyalty to King Jesus. The National Reform Association is seeking to unite all Americans who will be thus faithful to the King of kings.

Last Friday afternoon I spoke at the Georgetown Prohibition camp-meeting. This meeting continued three days. Leonard, Sharpe, Work, and others spoke. It was under the management of W.H. Hannah, Prohibition candidate for State senator. He has been a prohibitionist from his youth, and as a result of his personal efforts, not a saloon is in Georgetown. In 1869 he was made superintendent of Brown County Sabbath-school Union. There were only twenty-five Sabbath-schools in the county. He began holding conventions and organizing schools in every "school district." Many parts of Brown county were as ignorant as the Hottentots of Africa. They had never seen a Sabbath-school and did not propose to have any. In one case they burned their school-house to keep him out. They said, "That is just the way the Rebellion started. You are trying to get up another war." But in four years he had a Sabbath-school in every school district in the county, one hundred and twenty-five schools. The people will remember him for this and send him to the Legislature this fall.

On the fair grounds I addressed 700 people, on the subject, "Prohibition, God's Method of Destroying the Liquor Traffic." That night I spoke in the court-house on the "Basis of Moral Legislation." The house was packed, standing room in aisles and hall-way all occupied. Rev. Hughes spoke on the political situation. His Battle-Bow Quartette furnished music. On Sabbath I preached in the United Presbyterian church of Springfield, Rev. Joseph Kyle, pastor. They have been in their new church four weeks. It is a happy combination of the beautiful and the useful. It has all the modern conveniences. The audience room was filled in the evening. The theme was, "The Mediatorial Dominion of Christ." A collection was lifted for National Reform amounting to $12.56. This evening I preach in the Poplar Street Presbyterian church.

OUR BOSTON LETTER.

AN ADVENTURE AMONG THE SPIRITS.

Spiritism in this city, while at times seeming to be in the ascendancy, is, after all, waning. The closely successive exposures of mediumistic doings are striking death-blows. Judging from the spiritualists' census, we should suppose that the new Spirit Temple, on the Back Bay, would be thronged to overflowing. Such, however, is not the case. It is just the reverse. A good seat can always be found there at any period of the services. There can be little doubt in regard to the earnestness of the followers of this deluding "ism," and one could scarcely do otherwise than respect their earnestness, however erroneous it may be, were it not for their superficial investigations. Of course they claim to have reasons for their hope, but to me they are reasons most unreasonable.

When I ask how spirits are materialized, the reply is, that they partake of the body of the medium. When I ask how this is done, they say by manipulations unexplainable. Allowing that this may be so, I put this question: Suppose the medium to be a Caucasian female, and the spirit desirous of materialization an African male, how is he to partake of her nature and still retain his own for identification? I have never met a spiritist that could answer that clearly, nor do I expect to.

I have, also, another question which I would like answered. Many spiritists claim to recognize their friends by means of wearing apparel, and spirits always do appear well clothed. The question is, does clothing have spirits? Because a great deal of the clothing seen on spirits has, after the death of the subject, been packed away, or given to poor relations. Just imagine the feelings of one of these poor relatives when he sees the identical suit he has on his own person, also covering the spirit form of his cousin. The Scriptures inform us that we must pass into the world beyond as naked as we came. Scripture and spiritism are surely at variance on this point. Some may claim that clothing has no spirits, and that the clothes seen on spirits are not really such—only similitudes for sake of recognition. If that is so, why can't we consistently conclude that spirits are not really seen—only similitudes?

So we might go on applying nonsense to nonsense. I have an 'uncle whose misfortune is his faith in spiritism. At his earnest solicitation, after many refusals, in order to prove ourselves free from bigotry, my aged mother and myself consented to accompany him to the "sitting," or, rather seance of a celebrated materializer of this city. My uncle's deceased wife had appeared at the house of this medium, at least he claims to have met her there, and as she and my mother were very intimate before her departure into another part of the universe, he was very anxious to have them meet again. Thoroughly an infidel in regard to her brother's belief, my mother reluctantly consented to meet her spirit sister-in-law.

Arriving at the medium's residence, and after paying an admission fee of one dollar each, we were ushered into the seance chamber where we were to witness what was considered marvelous phenomena.

The experience of that eventful occasion will be continued in my next letter. D. P. MATHEWS.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

After testing the new Civil Service regulations in the War Department, the Civil Service Commissioners stated that the experiment was a success, except in some minor particulars that can be readily adjusted to meet existing conditions of the system in question.

It is given out that Secretary Lamar is strenuously opposed to the new civil service rules, and that he will exert his influence to prevent their application to the Interior Department, though I doubt the truthfulness of the report, for Mr. Lamar, having been a college professor, fully appreciates the scholarly attachments of his subordinates.

I have it from good authority that the new Commissioner of Patents has made the unexpected and interesting discovery that the pay-rolls of his office contain the names of quite a startling number of ladies or women whose salaries are not provided for in the Congressional appropriation bills, and who are classed as "laborers," but whose labors are not perceptible—at least, to the public vision. These fair "laborers" are chiefly distinguished by their attractive personal appearance, and it is said they are protected by statesmen high in the councils of the nation. Gen. Allen Rutherford, formerly an Auditor of the Treasury, but now a prominent claim attorney of this city, and a clerk named Brouner, of the Pension office, are under arrest on the charge of purloining Government records from that Bureau, the penalty being five years at penal servitude. The clerk confesses his crime, but the lawyer stoutly denies his guilt and attempts to saddle another with the offence charged.

The Treasury has redeemed and re-coined into dimes about four and three-quarter millions of trade dollars; the time for redemption will expire in a few days, and it is believed that very little is now left outstanding. Despite the fact that more than sixteen million dollars have been paid on pensions this month, the excess of Treasury receipts over all disbursements foots up three and a half millions for the same period—thus largely augmenting the already enormous surplus, which seems a very troublesome white elephant on the hands of the Government.

Colonel Daniel Lamont, the President's Private Secretary, is said to be interested in a Democratic pictorial weekly, soon to be launched on the great sea of New York journalism. I hear that the new venture will call into requisition the wonderful talents of Thos. Nast, who has done so much to win fame and fortune for Harper's Weekly.

Delegates to the International Medical Congress are arriving daily, and it is thought there will be from two to three thousand—perhaps more—in attendance. It will probably be the largest and most important meeting of this character that ever assembled, and its deliberations are anticipated with general interest. The venerable prohibitionist, Dr. N. S. Davis of Chicago, is to preside at this great meeting.

Several public meetings of the citizens of Washington have been held lately, in which were boldly presented charges of malfeasance and misfeasance in the management of the affairs of the city Water Department, and the President was even petitioned to remove the District Commissioners for neglect of duty. But the fact that the accounting officers of the Treasury Department have at last certified to the correctness of the accounts of the Commissioners for nine years past, will, I suppose, acquit them of all blame and put a quietus to the agitation. *

NATIONAL REFORM AT SARATOGA SPRINGS.

A meeting extending over part of two days has just been held under the auspices of the National Reform Association, at Saratoga Springs, New York, and was attended by large audiences. The Rev. Herrick Johnson, D.D., of Chicago, presided. The Rev. Joseph Smith, D.D., Moderator this year of the Presbyterian General Assembly, presented a series of forcible resolutions.

The discussions turned chiefly on the question of education as presented in the third resolution, and were participated in by the Rev. Dr. Price, President of the Methodist College for Young Ladies, Nashville, Tennessee; the Rev. Dr. Cowles, President of Elmira Female College; the Rev. Dr. S. V. Leech, of Saratoga, for seven years Chaplain of the New York Senate; the Rev. Dr. Smith and the Rev. Samuel McLanahan, of Baltimore; the Rev. Mr. Winn, of Petersburg, Va.; the Rev. Messrs. Tufts, Sawyer and Lanphar, of Massachusetts; the Rev. H. E. Niles, D.D., of Pennsylvania. These representative men from so wide a range of territory were quite unanimous in their discussion. The only difference of opinion manifested was in the suggestion by Dr. Smith whether the church rather than the state ought not to be entrusted with the whole work of education.

At one of the sessions, Joseph Cook, of Boston, addressed a large audience on, "The Latest Mormon Conspiracy." The following resolutions, prepared by Mr. Cook, were unanimously adopted:

Resolved, By the convention of members and friends of the National Reform Association, assembled at Saratoga, Aug. 16th, that we have reason to believe that there is now on foot a deep laid plot to bring Utah into the Union before the next Presidential election, and to give her electoral vote to the political party that makes the easiest conditions for the Mormon priesthood.

Resolved, That if Utah were admitted, as it is now proposed by Mormon conventions that she shall be, with a constitution nominally abolishing polygamy, but leaving the power of the Mormon priesthood practically unbroken, it is our conviction that their political influence would soon restore polygamy; place it where slavery was, under the shield of State rights; drive into great distresses or into exile the non-Mormon population; and probably ultimately necessitate military interference by the Federal power for the extirpation of what was long ago denounced as the twin-relic of barbarism.

Resolved, That Christian schools in Utah are prospering and are to be in every way commended and strengthened, but are not rapid enough in their operation to avert the great political perils attending the present local and national relations of Utah.

Resolved, That we unite with the Federal judges, preachers, editors, teachers and leading business men of Salt Lake City in asking Congress to extend over Utah the Idaho statute depriving of the right of suffrage all who practice or advise polygamy, and in protesting against the admission of Utah to the Union, except under conditions that will effectually prevent it from becoming a Mormon State, and will secure to all classes of its citizens the protection of a republican form of government.

The Rev. Dr. Price, of Nashville, awakened deep interest by a statement to this effect: "We in the South have not yet been brought face to face with the social perils and difficulties which confront our brethren in the North. For example, few assaults have been made upon the use of the Bible in the public schools. But I have observed that at the last meeting of the Texas State Teachers' Association a resolution signed by the names of three teachers, evidently of foreign extraction, was sent up to the desk for action. The resolution objected to the opening of the sessions with prayer in substantially the following terms: 'Resolved, that this Convention does not look to Zeus or Jupiter or Buddha or any other supernatural power to direct its proceedings. We look only to the presiding officer of the Convention.' The President refused to read the resolution, but that it should have been offered at all is significant. The flood is evidently moving in our direction, and we are looking with intense solicitude to the manner in which, and the principles upon which, our brethren in the North are about to settle this, and the whole body of problems involving the relation of religion and the state."

THE HOME.

NOT AS I WILL.

Blindfolded and alone I stand,
With unknown thresholds on his hand.
The darkness deepens as I grope,
Afraid to fear, afraid to hope;
Yet this one thing I learn to know
Each day more surely as I go—
That doors are opened, ways are made,
Burden are lifted or are laid,
By some great law unseen and still,
Unfathomed purpose to fulfill,
"Not as I will."

Blindfolded and alone I wait,
Loss seems too bitter, gain too late;
Too heavy burdens in the load,
And too few helpers on the road;
And joy is weak and grief is strong,
And years and days so long, so long,
Yet this one thing I learn to know
Each day more surely as I go—
That I am glad the good and ill
By changeless law are ordered still
"Not as I will."

"Not as I will!"—the sound grows sweet,
Each time my lips the words repeat.
"Not as I will!" The darkness feels
More safe than light when this thought steals
Like whispered voice to calm and bless
All unrest and all loneliness.
"Not as I will," because the One
Who loved us first and best has gone
Before us on the road, and still
For us must all his love fulfill,
"Not as we will."

—Helen Hunt Jackson.

ONE IN CHRIST.

As in the late war, men learned a new way of living, in regiments. One from the hill country of New Hampshire, who had never lived in social life before, found, with amazement, he was in close intimacies in the mess, in the march, when elbow touches elbow on parade. He found himself another man; found he had tastes, faculties, amusements, he never dreamed of before. And over all was the spell and power of the commander-in-chief.

The church was and is, an army; one head and all we are brethren. Christianity is Christ in man; faith does not save us, but faith in Christ saves us; his blood avails for us, because the life is in the blood; his righteousness is not transferred to us, but he is our motive power to do righteously.

Thus the Gospel is monochromatic; one light and one color to one light. Receiving the light brings us a wholly new element of cordiality, comradeship, partnership, brotherhood, working toward what we call sociality, in place of all the jealousies, wildness and segregations of the old society.

The world is becoming one out of many, E pluribus unum, where it had been living on exactly the other tendency, which might be called, that, to make many out of one. Such simple faith in God, such clear certainty of heaven, such genuine love of man by man made the marvelous conquests of new-born Christianity. The uplifted Son of God draws all men unto him; the drawing is still going on, and the army of the living God, as it nears the end of the campaign is more a unit, and more conforms to the one unifying Spirit.

In the first century was no way to the way; Christ was the way; the way of life, as they called it, extended itself from life to life, as Paul said, not by instruction, but by communion, by example, by sympathy or contagion. An honest man made another honest; a pure woman made another pure; a live boy made another live; and a brave girl made another brave. God's Holy Spirit is mediumistic, and it is our highest, noblest work to exercise the feelings which conveys the spirit to another.

Faith in Christ, from faith in Christ—love, from love—life, from life. "You," cried Paul, "whom I have begotten." Indeed, faith, hope, love, grow by exercise, and our love for man tests our love to God. A man who lives in heaven has a heavenly home, and she who loves others, others love; to have friends show yourselves friendly. Love begets love. And what doth hate, but endless hate still breeds.

He walks in the presence of God that converses with him in frequent prayer and communion; that runs to him with all his necessities; that asks counsel of him in all his doubtings; that opens all his wants to him; that weeps before him for all his sins; and that asks remedy and support for his weakness; that fears him as a judge, reverences him as a lord, and obeys him as a father.—Jeremy Taylor.

SECTARIANISM SWALLOWED UP.

When the tide is out, you may have noticed, as you rambled among the rocks, little pools with little fishes in them. To the shrimp, in such a pool, his foot-depth of salt water is all the ocean, for the time being. He has no dealings with his neighbor shrimp in the adjacent pool, though it may be only a few inches of sand that divide them.

But when the rising ocean begins to lip over the margin of the lurking-place, one pool joins another; their various tenants meet; and by and by, in place of their little patch of standing water, they have the ocean's boundless fields to roam in.

When the tide is out—then religion is low—the faithful few are to be found insulated; here a few and there a few, in the little standing pools which stud the beach, having no dealings with their neighbors of the adjoining pools, calling them Samaritans, and fancying that their own little community includes all that are precious in God's sight.

They forget for a time that there is a vast expanse of ocean rising—every ripple brings it nearer; a mightier communion—even the communion of saints—which is to engulf all minor considerations, and to enable the fishes of all pools—the Christians, the Christ-lovers of all denominations—to come together.

When, like a flood, the Spirit flows into the churches, church will join to church, and saint will join to saint, and all will rejoice to find that if their pools have perished, it is not by the summer's drought, nor the casting in of earthly rubbish, but by the influx of that boundless sea whose glad waters touch eternity, and in whose ample depths the saints in heaven, as well as the saints on earth, have room to range.

Yes, our churches are the standing pools along the beach, with just enough of their peculiar element to keep their inmates living during the ebb-tide period of the church history.

But they form a very little fellowship—the largest is but little; yet is there steadily flowing a tide of universal life and love, which, as it lips in over the margin of the little pool, will stir its inhabitants with an unwonted vivacity, and then let them loose in the large range of the Spirit's own communion.

Happy church, farthest down the strand, nearest the rising ocean's edge! Happy church, whose sectarianism shall first be swept away in this inundation of love and joy; whose communion shall first break forth into that purest and holiest, and yet most comprehensive of all communions—the communion of the Holy Ghost! Would to God that church were mine!—Dr. James Hamilton.

A LIVING BIBLE.

In the home of a young man who was an infidel a young lady resided, who was a relative of the family. Her fretful temper had made all around her uncomfortable. She was sent to a boarding-school, and was absent some time. While there she became a true and earnest Christian. On her return she was so changed that all who knew her wondered and rejoiced. She was patient and cheerful, kind, unselfish, and charitable. The lips that used to be always uttering cross and bitter things, now spoke nothing but sweet, gentle, loving words.

Her infidel cousin George was greatly surprised at this. He watched her closely for some time, till he was thoroughly satisfied that it was a real change that had taken place in his young cousin. Then he asked her what had caused this great change. She told him it was the grace of God which had made her a Christian and had changed her heart.

He said to himself, "I don't believe that God has anything to do with it, though she thinks he has. But it is a wonderful change that has taken place in her, and I should like to be as good as she is. I will be so." Then he formed a set of good resolutions. He tried to control his tongue and his temper, and keep a strict watch over himself. He was all the time doing and saying what he did not wish to do and say. And as he failed time after time, he would turn and study his good cousin's example. He would read this living Bible, and say to himself, "How does it happen that she, who has not as much knowledge or as much strength of character as I have, can do what I can't do? She must have some help that I don't know of. It must be as she says, the help of God. I will seek that help." He went into his chamber and prayed to that God whose very existence he had denied. He prayed earnestly. God heard him, helped him, and he became a Christian. Dear friend, for whom does your life speak—is it for Christ? Are you a "living Bible?"—Y. M. Christian Magazine.

NAPOLEON'S TESTIMONY.

In a communication inserted in the New York Observer of April 16, 1842, Prof. G. de Felice, of Montebau, translated from a French journal the following conversation related by Count de Montholon, the faithful friend of the fallen emperor on St. Helena: "I know men," said Napoleon, "and I tell you that Jesus is not a man!"

"The religion of Christ is a mystery which subsists by its own force, and proceeds from a mind which is not a human mind. We find in it a marked individuality which originated a train of words and maxims unknown before. Jesus borrowed nothing from our knowledge. He exhibited in himself the perfect example of his precepts. Jesus is not a philosopher, for his proofs are miracles, and from the first his disciples adored him. In fact, learning and philosophy are of no use for salvation; and Jesus came into the world to reveal the mysteries of heaven and the laws of the Spirit."

"Alexander, Cæsar, Charlemagne and myself founded empires; but upon what did we rest the creation of our genius? Upon force. Jesus Christ alone founded his empire upon love; and at this hour millions of men would die for him."

"It was not a day of battle which achieved the triumph of the Christian religion in the world. No; it was a long war, a contest for three centuries, begun by the apostles, then continued by the flood of Christian generations. In this war all the kings and potentates of earth were on one side; on the other I see no army, but a mysterious force, some men scattered here and there in all parts of the world, and who have no other rallying point than a common faith in the mysteries of the cross."

"I die before my time, and my body will be given back to the earth to become food for worms. Such is the fate which so soon awaits him who has been called the great Napoleon. What an abyss between my deep misery and the eternal kingdom of Christ, which is proclaimed, loved and adored, and which is extending over the whole earth."

SHORTENING THE BABY.

Our baby now is four months old,
A bonnie boy, with hair like gold;
And his long clothes are put away—
For mother shortened him to-day.

He has the loveliest of frocks,
All trimmed with lace, and two pink socks
That father bought, the best by far
And prettiest in the whole bazar.

And now the rogue can kick about;
His little feet go in and out
As though they could not rest, and he Is just as happy as can be.

Besides, he feels quite proud to-day
With all his long clothes put away,
And dressed so fine! And then, you know,
We praise the boy, and love him so!

His grandmamma must see him soon;
We all go to look this afternoon,
And take the pet, and stay for tea—
And what a riot there will be!

At first, perhaps, she may not know
The baby, he has dwindled so;
But let her guess, and do not say
That mother shortened him to-day!

—J. R. Eastwood, in St. Nicholas.

THE ESKIMOS.

In the American Naturalist there is an article by Mr. John Murdoch on what he calls "some popular errors in regard to the Eskimos." One of these "popular errors" is the notion that the Eskimos pass the winter "in a sort of hibernation, in underground dens, living in enforced idleness, and supporting life by stores of meat laid up in less inclement seasons." Mr. Murdoch, who spent two winters at Point Barrow, says this is a wholly mistaken impression. In spite of the extreme inclemency of the climate, the winter, he asserts, is passed by the Eskimos "in one continued round of activity," and he gives a very interesting description of the manner in which they occupy themselves. Another "popular error" on this subject is the idea that the Eskimos always eat their food raw, and devour enormous quantities of blubber.

At Point Barrow, Mr. Murdoch found food that was habitually cooked, although certain articles, like the "black skin" of the whale, were usually eaten raw. Taking into account the fact that the Eskimos have no butter, cream, fat, bacon, olive oil, or lard, he doubts whether much more fat is consumed by them than by civilized peoples.

At Point Barrow the fat of birds and the reindeer was freely partaken of, but comparatively little actual blubber either of the seal or whale was eaten. "Seal or whale blubber was too valuable, for burning in the lamps, oiling leather, and many other purposes, especially for trade."

THE LITTLE STRANGER.

As Doctor Byron was one day passing into the house, he was accosted by a very little boy who asked him if he wanted any sance, meaning vegetables. The doctor inquired if such a tiny thing was a market man. "No, sir, my father is," was the prompt answer. The doctor said, "Bring me in some squashes," and he passed into the house, sending out the change. In a few moments the child returned, bringing back part of the change; the doctor told him he was welcome to it, but the child would not take it back, saying his father would blame him. Such singular manners in a child attracted his attention, and he began to examine the child attentively. He was evidently poor; his little jacket was pieced and patched with almost every kind of cloth, and his trowsers darned with so many colors it was difficult to tell the original fabric, but scrupulously clean withal. The boy very quietly endured the scrutiny of the doctor while holding him at arm's length and examining his face. At length he said:

"You seem a nice little boy; won't you come and live with me, and be a doctor?"

"Yes, sir," said the child.

"Spoken like a man," said the doctor, as he dismissed him.

A few weeks passed on, when one day Jim came to say there was a little boy with a bundle down stairs wanting to see the doctor, and would not tell his business to any one else.

"Send him up," was the answer; and in a few moments he recognized the boy of the squashes; he was dressed in a new though coarse suit of clothes, his hair very nicely combed, his shoes brushed up, and a little bundle tied in a homespun check handkerchief on his arm. Deliberately taking off his hat, and laying it down with his bundle, he walked up to the doctor, saying:

"I have come, sir."

"Come for what, my child?"

"To live with you and be a doctor," said the child, with the utmost naivete.

The first impulse of the doctor was to laugh immoderately; but the imperturbable gravity of the little thing rather sobered him as he recalled, too, his former conversation; and he silently felt he needed no addition to his family.

"Did your father consent to your coming?" he asked.

"Yes, sir."

"What did he say?"

"I told him you wanted me to come and live with you and be a doctor; and he said you were a very good man, and I might come as soon as my clothes were ready."

"And your mother, what did she say?"

"She said Dr. Byron would do what he said he would, and God had provided for me." And said he, "I have on a new suit of clothes," surveying himself, "and here is another in this bundle," undoing the kerchief and displaying them, with two little shirts white as snow, and a couple of neat checked aprons, so carefully folded, it was plain none but a mother would have done it.

The sensibilities of the doctor were awakened to see the fearless, the undoubting trust with which that poor couple had bestowed their child upon him, and such a child! His cogitations were not long; he thought of Moses in the bulrushes abandoned to Providence; and above all he thought of the child that was carried into Egypt—and that divine Saviour had said, "Blessed be little children;" and he called for his wife, saying, "Susan, dear, I think we pray in church that God will have mercy upon all young children."

"To be sure we do," said the wondering wife; "and what then?"

"And the Saviour said, 'Whosoever receiveth one such child in my name, receiveth me.' Take this child in his name, and take care of him."

From this hour the good couple received him to their hearts and home. It did not occur to them that one of the most eminent physicians and best men of the age stood before them in the person of that child; it did not occur to them that this little creature, thus thrown upon their charity, was destined to be their staff and stay in declining age—a protector to their daughter, and more than son to themselves,—all this was then unrevealed; but they cheerfully received the child they believed Providence had committed to their care, and if ever beneficence was rewarded it was in this instance.—Parlor Magazine.

TEMPERANCE.

PROHIBITION IN POLITICS.

AN OPEN LETTER TO THE REPUBLICAN PARTY.

The forces of whiskey and the forces of the political Prohibitionists will march hand in hand, like friendly allies and co-workers, as before.—Chicago Evening Journal.

GENTLEMEN:—Twelve months hence this nation will be undergoing the excitement of another Presidential contest, and it is time you understood the ground of your hope of success, lest you suffer another defeat, and a greater one than in 1884. You may as well understand now, as at any other time, that Prohibition as a reform, like Anti-slavery in the past, has come to stay, to work, and to conquer. It is fast becoming the issue of this generation.

We are aware that it will suffer defeat after defeat at the hands of the distillers, brewers and saloon men, aided by selfish politicians, and it will cost its adherents serious losses in liberty, property and valuable lives; but the blood of Haddock and his fellow-martyrs, mingling with that of the 100,000 drunkards who die annually in the United States, is crying to God to remove from our country the evils of the drink traffic. The weeping widows and orphans of those whose lives it has destroyed, and continues to destroy, and thousands of other earnest men and women, resting on the promises of the Bible, are praying daily and nightly for this result, and not as those without hope; for God is our help and our strength in this contest, and who can stand against us?

We have not the shadow of a doubt of our success. We are gaining in influence and numbers day by day. Our votes are already counted by hundreds of thousands. Next year we shall be stronger than now, and a year later more vigorous still.

Do we expect to carry any general election by our votes? Not yet. But we do intend to leave a deep impress of our increasing power upon all future elections in this country. You tell us that by our ballots we are helping the Democratic party, the promoters and active agents of the drink traffic. We have no favors to ask of any party that openly upholds the saloon by its patronage; nor are we in sympathy with its principles or leaders; and we are opposed to all parties that by their indifference or pusillanimity encourage the perpetuation of the manufacture and sale of ardent spirits. If your party, like the Democratic, refuses to oppose the saloon interest, you will find us arrayed against you as well as that; and if the country has to remain under Democratic rule for another decade or two, we shall calmly wait for you (as the Anti-slavery reformers did) to adopt a Prohibition platform, and then, united with you, we expect to triumph decisively over our antagonists and yours.

But unless you do favor our principles and aims, and adopt them in the approaching canvass, we, holding the balance of power in the casting-vote of the country, expect to witness your defeat. You will need our vote, not only next year, but in every contest where you are pitted against the Democracy. The course that you will have to pursue in order to obtain it is easy. Make absolute prohibition the issue, and you will have the earnest support of every conscientious man and woman in the nation, and triumph as signally as you did in the dark and doubtful struggle of 1864. You did it then because God was with you in those troublous times. Let him be with you in emancipating our country from the slavery of whiskey, and future generations will revere your patriotism and humanity. You should meet this issue squarely. Every saloon, every drunkard, and every principle of justice appeals to you in favor of absolute prohibition.

H. M. HUGUNIN.

A MONSTROSITY.

BLOOMINGTON, Ill.

A bird with but one wing and one leg would indeed be a strange creature; quite different from anything mother nature has yet turned out. Raising such poultry would hardly be profitable business. They might travel some but it would be by jumps and flops as leg or wing were brought into play. But in a trial of strength they would be at a great disadvantage pitted against birds of much inferior strength having properly matched members. We do not pretend that the creator of nature has ever made such a blunder as this; yet man in his creations has frequently brought forth just such monstrosities, especially in morals and politics.

One of these unhappy productions is the Prohibition party, composed practically of two members equally as incongruous as a leg and a wing. Little wonder that she has only progressed by jumps and flops as either of her totally diverse members have been in use. I refer to her open and secret members or limbs, totally diverse in action and quite divergent in line of motion. This has caused her past contortions of body and her spasmodic actions resulting in her very indifferent progress thus far. This has been while the body was quite small and light; but any one can see that the present locomotion will be entirely impossible when the body becomes a great national party. Is it the part of prudence to refrain from examining into this matter because some may scowl at all investigations? Is it good carpentry to go on building a house "divided against itself" which we are assured can not stand? Matt. 12: 25.

Is it not best to settle this matter now while we are in the formative state? Either let us hang down our wing in the hope that a foot will grow on it so as to match our other limb, or let us swing our leg in the air in the hope that feathers will grow to match our wing.

While we are as yet only in the skirmish line would it not be well to know who are our commanders? and from whom we are to receive orders? Certainly it will be too late to organize when the battle is in progress and we stand in the presence of our enemies. If part of us are to understand sign, grip, password, and regalia, let us all be equally informed and uniformed. But if the sword of the Spirit, the freeman's vote, and civil law are to be our weapons, then surely the others are cumbersome and should be put away. There can be no true unification of the present elements. 2 Cor. 6: 14.

I have proposed that the Lancet of this city open its columns to both sides on this question. If no one capable will take it up the writer will try to present reasons why all oaths, secrecy, and rituals should be abandoned and none but open methods adopted. Meanwhile those who favor the secret methods should show why their tactics should be adopted.

H. D. WHITCOMB.

DRINK AND SLAUGHTER.

Dayton Ulrich, a Chicago printer, made a murderous assault the other day on his wife, Elsie Ulrich; his mother, Mrs. Bradford, of No. 85 West Adams street; Henry Thompson, of No. 121 West Jackson street, and the latter's wife. Mrs. Ulrich was cut several times by her husband, who, armed with a large pocket-knife, attacked everybody he met until captured by the police. The woman received several serious cuts on the arms and body, and a slash across the back of the neck which the physicians regard as dangerous. Ulrich had been drinking heavily, and caused much trouble to his wife, his nine-year old child, and his landlord, Thompson. While in his cups he threatened to kill somebody before sunset and attempted to keep his word. He went home, and, according to his wife's story, found her splitting wood. As she was stooping over he attacked her viciously, showering blows on her neck and fast. She did not know he was using a knife until the warm blood flowed over her body, and then she screamed for help. Ulrich turned and confronted his mother, at whom he made a single lunge with the knife, laying the flesh of her right arm open to the bone. He next met Thompson, and drew the bloody blade of his knife across his right shoulder, making a wound which required sixteen stitches. Thompson's wife next ran afoul of the printer, and was cut about the left shoulder.

When the police arrived Ulrich, covered with blood, was found hiding under a bed. He is locked up at the Desplaines Street Station, and when interviewed blamed his neighbors for causing trouble between himself and wife. Mrs. Ulrich says her husband is a victim to the excessive use of liquor, and when drinking is very jealous of her.

THE PROHIBITORY LAW IN MAINE.

Governor Bodwell of Maine has received replies to more than half of the letters recently sent out by him to the sheriffs and county attorneys of the State, urging the enforcement of the prohibitory law. Sheriff Kelly of Lincoln county reports that there is no rum sold in his county, and the Sheriff of Hancock county writes that he at once shut every shop in Ellsworth upon receipt of the Governor's letter. One sheriff from a large city said he enforced the law as far as his judgment dictated. As a rule the officers reported they had done all they could to stop the liquor traffic and should do so in the future. In Bangor, where more liquor is sold than in any other city in the State, a move is being made to hold a big mass-meeting to see what can be done to suppress the sale.

Protestant churches. I have never visited a town of its size more given over to Baal worship. The Congregational has the largest membership of any of the churches. The pastor, Rev. Mr. Finley, is a man of no special convictions on any moral reform. He attends public dances, and his children dance. But recently I am told a theatrical troupe came and played the Black Crook, a low, vulgar performance. It was attended and indorsed by members of this congregation. Chairs were taken from the church to accommodate the multitude who could not otherwise obtain seats. The Baptist church is struggling hard for existence. The pastor, a young man, appeared friendly, but was not posted on the lodge question, and could not attend the lecture.

Sabbath morning I felt conscious of the presence of the Holy Spirit in special power. There was a good attendance, the best of attention, and I feel sure the truth spoken will not be void of fruit. The attendance in the evening was somewhat diminished by the rain. I was told that nearly all the men present were members of one or more of the orders.

My next stop was at Kingsville where I was disappointed in not finding a meeting arranged. Rev. Rockwell, an old veteran reformer, had hoped to have prepared the way for me here, but was not able to secure a suitable place. A brief call at the home of Jeremiah Luce was very pleasant. He is now in his 88th year and is one of the Morgan stamp of Anti-masons.

Since coming to this section I have arranged meetings as follows: Mecca Congregational church, Sabbath morning and evening; Greenburgh town-hall, Monday evening; Gustavus Congregational church, Tuesday evening; Cortland Congregational church, Wednesday evening. Arrangements have partially been made for North Bloomfield for Thursday evening. I expect to spend the last of the week with Wesleyan friends in and about Middlefield.

Last night we had what some of our colored friends would call a powerful meeting in the M. E. church at Wayne. After I had spoken the usual time I gave opportunity for questions, or remarks. A man by the name of Khinear (who is a member of this church) arose fairly boiling over in his wrath, and stated that he did not wish to discuss the question; that he considered the lecture beneath his notice; that it was a lie from beginning to end; that I had not uttered a word of truth; that I had either been black-balled or expelled, etc., etc. In short, I "gave him the rope and he hung himself." When he concluded, Mr. Edward Bladon arose and stated that he was an old Mason, that he had belonged to the lodge for years, but had left because of the company he was compelled to associate with while there. He testified that what I had said he knew to be absolutely correct. This testimony caused the color of Mr. K.'s face to change quite materially. A young chap that had come in late and sat back by the door seemed to feel it incumbent on him to expose his ignorance, and for the want of something better to say, he told of a Mr. Johnston who had been there before me to lecture. He denounced him as an old crank and wound up by protesting against having my meeting in the church. So one and another spoke. The people were greatly aroused on seeing the terrible spirit of this thing of darkness. Many were the warm hand-shakes and the invocations of God's blessing that I received at the close.

MIDDLEFIELD, O., Sept. 1.—I have just arrived at Bro. E. J. Hayes and see by this week's paper that my report of last week failed to reach you in time for publication. I carried out the programme of meetings as sent. They were all that I could have expected both in attendance and interest. I had a full house Sabbath morning and evening at Mecca. Rev. Knapp, the pastor, had taken one degree in Masonry, but said he had not been to the lodge since. One look was evidently enough. He received me quite coolly and was what some would call judiciously cautious. The attendance was fair at Green, and very good at both Gustavus and Cortland, some two hundred being present each evening. Revs. Thompson and Jewel, pastor of the churches (Congregational) in the last two places received me very cordially.

The Gustavus meeting was prolonged until ten o'clock by a discussion in which the people were intensely interested. A wild-headed fellow, the Methodist class-leader, and several others took the Masonic side. Rev. Thompson, who is nominated on the Prohibition ticket for State senator, and myself, the other. It is unnecessary to add who came out ahead. As light dispels darkness, so discussion kills Masonry. At the conclusion a lady who seemed to be very much distressed in mind, said, "What shall we do? Our preacher and class-leader both belong to this terrible thing!"

You can put down the name of H. Robinson, of Cortland, on your list of seceded Masons. He was initiated in Iowa; was for some time a member of Morning Star Lodge, No. 31, Youngstown, O. He testifies to the correctness of our expositions. I am much indebted to brethren L. Rice, H. H. King, E. B. Kralh, E. W. Bascom and others for entertainment and assistance in our work. As they invited me to return again, I conclude my credit is still good.

To-day I visited Warren and Girard. When I first got off the train at Girard I thought it was as near the bottomless pit as any town I had ever visited. Saloons were on every hand and their terrible effects everywhere to be seen. My impressions were bettered as I advanced into the town. I found Mr. A. W. Kennedy, principal of the high school, a man of no ordinary ability. He subscribed for the Cynosure, and assisted me in getting another subscription. I remain in this section until next week. All I know of Masonry in this town is that the saloon-keeper wears the pin. May God help the laborers to keep the work moving. W. B. STODDARD.

NORTHERN ILLINOIS.

Notes of a Colporteur.—Good Templars and Temperance.—Sound words at an S. S. convention.—More lectures needed.

WHEATON, Ill., Sept. 2, 1887.

If we become disheartened, when we see how many there are who care not for truth, let us stop considering how many oppose and remember how many there are who sympathize with us, and wish us God-speed in our work. There are thousands in northern Illinois who have not yet bowed the knee to Baal.

From August 2 to August 24 I visited quite a number of towns in this part of the State, going north through Elgin and Crystal Lake as far as Harvard, and then south through Belvidere and DeKalb to Wenona. The secretary of the T. M. C. A. at Elgin worked with the I. O. G. T. for a time, hoping to secure help from them in return. He has not yet received any help, nor do they seem to help forward the temperance cause any more here than at other places. At Belvidere three years ago there were two prohibition votes cast; neither was from a member of the Good Templar society there. One of the ministers of Belvidere told me what his belief was in regard to secret societies, but I promised not to give his name or belief, for we both feared it would injure his influence. He said: "You know we ministers are very careful of our influence." Both Masons and Odd-fellows are members of his church. No one can be too careful of his influence. Often if we stand for truth we will lose personal influence, but can we lose influence for right, by standing fearlessly and openly by the truth?

Bro. M. S. Worcester of Kingston is known for miles around as an Anti-mason, and lodge-sympathizers call him fanatical. He has scattered tracts all through that section and secured many readers for the Cynosure.

LaSalle and Peru are the roughest towns I have visited. LaSalle, alone, pays at least $20,000 license and a liquor bill of perhaps $250,000 or more. Some people cannot go along the streets without becoming intoxicated, and no wonder, for the saloon odor is enough to intoxicate any ordinary man. The streets are paved with fossils and the city itself seems to be fossilized. Geo. S. Blanchard believes that all the Blanchards are radicals, from Pres. J. Blanchard of Wheaton down to Geo. Blanchard of LaSalle.

August 17th and 18th I attended the Putnam County Sabbath-school convention at Hennepin. The evening was occupied by Rev. D. W. Wise, pastor of the Congregational church at Granville, and Mr. Conebeare of Mendota. Rev. Wise thought that the teaching of the Sabbath-school, if received, would destroy all unholy organizations. Mr. Conebeare's subject was, "Our Boys." He spoke first of the boys of '61 and '65; of how nobly they defended our government in its hour of peril, offering their lives to preserve the Union, and then, after the war was over, going home and neglecting the trust committed to them; allowing evil, designing men to rule until our government has become a partner in crime and an encourager of strikes. Then he urged the boys of '87 to be true followers of Christ, students of God's Word, and to secure the enactment and enforcement of laws consistent with God's Word.

At Wenona Mr. Jerome Howe has done what he could in the way of distributing tracts and securing Cynosure subscriptions. The beautiful city of Ottawa has its share of secret orders and of course its proper proportion of saloons. A plate on the northeast corner of the court-house advertises the fact that the corner-stone was laid by the Masonic fraternity. But little has been done in Ottawa to oppose the secret empire.

In many places in northern Illinois I am told that they have had no lectures on secretism for ten or even fifteen years. Most of the Anti-masons are old men, and agitation is necessary to reach the young men who are joining the lodge. Masonry and Odd-fellowship are gaining in many places. I have urged the appointment of delegates to the State Association by anti-secret churches, and the attendance of individual members of other churches wherever I have been. Many have agreed to go, and I have reason to hope that there will be a large attendance. No one within a reasonable distance of Belvidere should fail to attend.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—The opening exercises of the McCormick Theological Seminary at No. 1060 North Halsted were held Friday afternoon, in the presence of about two hundred students and friends of the institution. The opening prayer was offered by the Rev. Dr. Coyle, after which the Rev. Dr. LeRoy J. Halsey delivered a lecture on the subject, "How to Make the Best Use of the Scriptures During the Three Years' Course." The incoming class numbers about forty, making altogether about 120 in the school. The new Fowler Hall, which is nearly completed, will be dedicated about the middle of the month.

—Rev. C. H. Hobart, of Los Gatos, Cal., formerly of Aurora, Ill., has received a hearty call to become assistant pastor with Dr. E. H. Gray, of the First Baptist church of Oakland, Cal., and will probably accept.

—Bishop William Harris, the New York resident bishop of the Methodist church, died Friday afternoon at his home. He was taken ill with heart trouble a month ago, when in Liverpool. He sailed immediately for New York, and has been under medical care since his return. He died surrounded by his family, consisting of his wife, his son, and daughter. Mrs. Dr. Hatfield, a daughter, of Chicago, was the one absent member of the family.

—The Chicago Evangelization Society, whose President is D. L. Moody, has appointed Merton Smith to conduct the tent meetings to be held in the Sixteenth Ward. The tent has been placed at the junction of Halsted Street and North and Clybourn Avenues. The neighborhood is largely German. The first meeting was held last Sabbath evening. During the present week Rev. Mr. Goss, President Blanchard of Wheaton College, and E. W. Bliss, evangelist, will take part in the proceedings. The Gospel Temperance Choir of Chicago Avenue church, under the leadership of Frank Jewett, will continue its services.

—Says the Midland, "That staunch and liberal friend of the United Presbyterian church, Elder Henry Harrison, of New York City, we are glad to hear, is improving in health by his visit among the lakes of Ulster county, N. Y."

—Rev. J. A. Thompson, president of Tarkio College, Missouri, will be inaugurated September 15. The address will be made by Rev. Wm. Johnston of College Springs, Iowa, and the college keys will be formally turned over to the new president by Rev. W. P. McNary, the president of the board, and an inaugural address will be delivered by the president.

—The whole number of churches in the United States has been estimated to be 132,435, with 91,911 ministers, and 19,018,977 communicants.

—The Lutheran Synodical Conference has missions and schools for Freedmen in New Orleans, Little Rock, and Meherrin, Va. In New Orleans there are 133 colored communicants and 380 colored children in the parochial schools.

—The Union Signal gives the following extract from a letter written by Elizabeth L. Comstock: "During the past thirty years I have visited more than 120,000 prisoners, some in England and Ireland, but chiefly in this land; 195,000 sick and wounded soldiers in military hospitals; 85,000 inmates of poor-houses, and many private homes and asylums for the insane, blind and afflicted. 'Comfort ye, comfort ye, my people,' has been my commission. Dear Rebecca Collins, of New York, and Sarah Smith, of Indianapolis, were laborers with me twenty years ago. Many a time in the midnight hour we have visited the haunts of sin, the dens of infamy and shame, in the love of Jesus, seeking to snatch some brands from the burning, to bring to the Saviour's fold some lost, wandering sheep."

OBITUARY.

HUGH BRECKENRIDGE.—In Mercer county, Ill., six miles from New Windsor station on the Burlington line, is situated one of the strongest Wesleyan churches in Illinois. Of this church one of the strongest members, intellectually and spiritually, has been the brother whose name heads this article. Wednesday we laid his mortal remains away to sleep until the resurrection morning; the Sabbath before at about eight o'clock his spirit returned to God who gave it.

He was born in Trumbull Co., Ohio, sixty-one years ago, but was reared in Mercer Co., Pennsylvania, to which his father removed while he was yet a child. When twenty-one years of age he became anxious concerning the welfare of his soul and went to a minister for conversation. The minister told him that he could not spend time to talk with him then, but that if he would return he would see him on the subject. Notwithstanding this experience he was converted and united with the Free Presbyterian church.

He was married Feb. 3, 1859, to Miss Mary Watson, who survives him. To them were born six children, five of whom, three daughters and two sons, survive him. He was a spiritually-minded man and when he settled in Illinois united with the Wesleyan church, which was nearest to him, though he had been a Presbyterian. In 1874 he was ordained to the work of the Gospel ministry at Brush Point, near Sycamore.

He continued his labors on his farm and preached acceptably for years, laboring at the Hopewell church where he held his own membership, at Bethel and at Camp Creek. Of his home church he was pastor for two years, riding thirty-five miles per week to reach his appointments. He was intelligently attached to the reform principles of his churches and antagonized slavery, intemperance and secret societies, the three great evils of his day.

He educated his children at Wheaton College, a son and a daughter having received degrees from that institution. Many colleges were nearer but he followed his convictions rather than his convenience and at the last meeting of the Board of Trustees he was elected a member of that body.

He was on Saturday with his sons attending to the watering of his cattle when he was struck in the back and knocked down by an angry bull. He was immediately rescued, but the one blow caused paralysis and thirteen hours after he was struck he fell asleep quietly without a groan or a movement of a limb. His eyes closed and he was at rest.

The funeral services were held on Wednesday, the 31st, being conducted by Rev. O. C. Bedford, pastor of the church, and Pres. C. A. Blanchard of Wheaton College. The presence of Pres. L. N. Stratton, an old friend of the family, was specially desired but he was unable to be present. A large assembly of friends and neighbors gathered to testify their respect for his great and many excellencies of character and their sympathy with his afflicted family. "The righteous shall be in everlasting remembrance." C. A. B.

LITERATURE.

The mysterious virtues of "Household Remedies and Sure Cures" are examined by Dr. Yale in the September number of Babyhood, which also contains interesting articles on "The Disadvantages of Lying on the Back," and "Early Regularity in Diet and Sleep." No less valuable is a paper by Dr. C. L. Dodge, in which the senseless exposure to contagious diseases, the belief in crookedness as a symptom of improvement, the imaginary distinctions between scarlet fever and scarlatina, and the efficacy of "rubbing a tooth through," are shown to be popular fallacies. There are many other topics of a practical and helpful nature discussed in the various departments.

In the Swiss Cross for September among articles of especial note are "Some Curious Young Folks," "The Red Arrow Gate of Korea," "Ice-bergs and Ice floes," "Hibernating Animals," and "The Chemical Elements." The Swiss Cross is a popular scientific monthly for young people and the organ of the Agassiz Association.

The Missionary Review opens with a brief history of Jesuit missions in North America by Frederic Vinton, librarian of Princeton College. The conclusion of William Duncan's address on his Melankhista mission follows. The missionary tables this month give statistics of a number of foreign societies.

The English Illustrated Magazine contains a beautiful frontispiece for the volume—a study of a human face by E. Burne Jones. The illustrated articles are the second part of "A visit to a Dutch Country House" and "Westminster School." The publishers announce that in the new volume special attention will be given to illustrated articles.

Sing the Reform
Into the Hearts of the People

One of the most popular books against lodgery is the latest compilation of

George W. Clark,

The Minister of Reform:

A forty-page book of soul-stirring, conscience-awakening songs, appropriate for lectures, conventions and the home circle. What can add more to the interest of a meeting than a song well sung! What means will more quickly overthrow the power of the secret lodges than to sing the truth into the popular consciousness?

FIFTY YEARS AND BEYOND;

OR,
Old Age and How to Enjoy It.

A most appropriate gift book for "The Old Folks at Home."

Compiled by REV. S. G. LATHROP.

Introduction by

REV. ARTHUR EDWARDS, D. D.,
(Editor N. W. Christian Advocate.)

The object of this volume is to give to that great army who are fast hastening toward the "great beyond" some practical hints and helps as to the best way to make the most of the remainder of the life that now is, and to give comfort and help as to the life that is to come.

"It is a tribute to the Christianity that honors the gray head and refuses to consider the old man a burden or an obstacle. The book will aid and comfort every reader."—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

"The selections are very precious. Springing from such numerous and pure fountains, they can but afford a refreshing and healthful draught for every aged traveler to the great beyond."—Witness.

FREEMASONRY AT A GLANCE.

BY

E. RONAYNE,

Past Master of Keystone Lodge,
No. 659, Chicago.

Illustrates every sign, grip and ceremony of the Lodge and gives a brief explanation of each. This work should be scattered like leaves all over the country. It is so cheap that it can be used as tracts, and money thus expended will bring a bountiful harvest. 32 pages. Price, postpaid, 6 cents.

IN THE COILS; OR— The Coming Conflict.

A NEW AND STRANGE STORY BASED ON STARTLING FACTS, VIVIDLY PORTRAYING A MYSTERIOUS AND DANGEROUS POWER AT WORK IN THE GOVERNMENT, THE CHURCH, AND THE HOME.

"All will agree that this is a powerfully written story."—Evangelist, (Chicago, Ills.).

"A book which we trust may have a wide circulation."—National Baptist, (Philadelphia).

"So intensely interesting did I find it that it was hard to pause until the last sentence was read. This work places the author high among the writers of fiction."—W. W. Barry, D. D. in Christian Instructor, (Philadelphia).

"Unless we are greatly mistaken, the work will do more to awaken the American church and people to the evils of Freemasonry than any other book recently published."—Evangelical Repository.

"The book will create a sensation in Masonic circles, and evoke criticism of a most interesting character. The courage of the author in attacking such a rock-rooted bulwark as Freemasonry is something to admire, Fanatic though he be."—Nebraska Watchman.

"Light is needed on this subject and needed badly, and we welcome this contribution to the literature of anti-secrecy, and cordially commend it to the favorable attention of our readers."—United Presbyterian, (Pittsburgh).

"A charming work, fit to be classed with 'Uncle Tom's Cabin.' It is linked less a work of fiction. The volume is as valuable as a work of reference as it is agreeable, truthful and useful. Our young folks will not leave the book, if they begin it, till they see how it turns out."—Cynosure, (Chicago, Ills.).

FARM NOTES.

SUMMER FUEL.—This is the season when every rural housewife appreciates good fuel. Wood is the common summer fuel in most farmers' homes, even in the East, and on many accounts it is more desirable for hot weather use than coal. But the wood should have been prepared for use during the winter, as it takes too much valuable time to do it during the season for active work. Dry wood, even if not very solid, is excellent summer fuel, and much rubbish on every farm may thus be disposed of to advantage.

UTILIZE THE RUBBISH.—Every farmer should have a compost heap, and keep adding to it through the season. Some one well says that many times in cleaning up around fence rows and vacant spaces on the farm great quantities of weeds and grass are cut and allowed to go to waste, which, if hauled to the manure heap and incorporated in it while yet green, would make a vast amount of excellent manure. This, of course, makes work, but it will lead to increased productiveness of the land, and this will increase the crops and the profitability of farming.

A TIMELY POINT.—Remember that greensward plowed in August will get well rooted before winter, and will be fit to plant next spring to almost any farm crops. If plowed early the weed seeds will start, and they can be killed with the cultivator, or possibly will be destroyed by frost before they can go to seed again which will leave so many the less enemies to contend against in next year's crops. Good farmers say that land plowed this month will grow better crops and can be taken care of with much less labor than the same land plowed in the spring, or even in the late fall.

ECONOMY IN FUEL.

One of the most difficult things to teach a girl is economy in fuel. Nothing seems to satisfy but a continual piling on of coal. As soon as a little gas is burned off, a vigorous shaking and raking out of ashes follows: then the stove filled anew, touching and lifting the covers, which soon become red hot, and the process is repeated from morning till night. Teach her that in order to obtain a good draught the coal ought never to be above the lining; and in this connection I am reminded of another practice which seems to come to kitchen girls by intuition, or is handed down by tradition; that is, to put sad irons or flat irons, as generally called, on the stove over the hottest fire, hours before use; consequently they are ruined; for if once heated to redness, they ever after retain heat but a short time, and lose their smoothness too. I would rather lend almost anything else to a neighbor than a flat-iron. In ironing have two holders to use alternately, thereby lessening the heat of the hand, and insuring a greater degree of comfort.—Ex.

COAL OR WOOD FOR FUEL.

In actual heating power it is difficult to obtain exact figures of comparison between coal and wood, because the quantity of moisture may vary to the extent of twenty-five or thirty per cent. This would reduce the value of the wood to about the same extent. The most careful experiments show that a ton of anthracite is equal to about one cord and one-half of mixed hard woods, chiefly oak. This supposes the wood to be well seasoned. A ton of anthracite, in some cases, may be fully equal to two cords and one-quarter of soft wood, such as hemlock, white pine, etc. In Massachusetts a number of experiments made a few years ago showed that a ton of hard coal was equal to one cord and six-tenths of hemlock.

One ton of some of the poor Western coals is not equal to a cord of good hard wood. Taking all the estimates together and the same in heating power a cord of the best bituminous coal is equal to 2,000 pounds of either kind may be taken as equal to about one cord and one-half of what may be called good, dry, merchantable, hard wood.

When wood, cut and split, sells for $4.00 per cord, it is equal in price to coal at $6.00 per ton. But when the price of wood in four foot lengths is two-thirds that of coal, then the coal is much cheaper, because the sawing and splitting must be added.

Economy of handling must, in a great many instances, be taken into account. A coal fire in a magazine stove will burn all day in ordinary weather without attention. An ordinary fire needs attention perhaps twice a day. For an equal amount of heat two or three times as great a weight of wood has to be lifted as would be required if coal were used. The following is a safe rule by which to ascertain when to buy coal: Add one-half to the cost of the wood, and if the amount equals the price of coal per ton, coal is the cheapest, besides being more readily handled. The wood should be measured in the stick, and not after it is cut and split.—American Agriculturist.

PERSECUTION

By the Roman Catholic Church.

A Moral Mystery how any Friend of Religious Liberty could consent to "Hand over Ireland to Fenellite Rule."

By Rev. John Lee, A. M., B. D.

General Viscount Walsley: "Interesting." Chicago Inter-Ocean: "A searching review." Chattanooga Advocate: "An avalanche of argument."

Christian Cynosure: "It deserves a wide circulation at the present time." Bishop Coxe, Protestant Episcopal, of Western New York: "Most useful publication; a logical sequel to 'Our Country,' by Josiah Strong."

Rev. C. G. McCabe, D. D.: "It is a useful book and ought to have a wide sale. You are dealing with a question which will soon dominate every other in American politics. The assassin of Nation is in our midst and is approaching the Temple of Liberty with stealthy tread. The people of this country will understand the Belfast frenzy some day better than they do now."

The Right Hon. Lord Robert Montague: "I have read it with the greatest pleasure, and with amazement at the intimate acquaintance with the acts of Romanism in our midst which you have evinced. I only wish that, instead of publishing your pamphlet in Chicago, you had seen it broadcast over England, Scotland and Ireland."

NATIONAL SUICIDE, AND ITS PREVENTION.

BY OSCAR F. LUMRY, PH. D.
Prof. Lumry's book, "National Suicide and Its Remedy," will be read with profit even by those who do not accept its doctrine, that taking interest for money loaned, one or more per cent, is sin, taking something for nothing. For is Goldsmith said of his friend of Wakefield, "Even his fallings leap to virtue's side."

—Cynosure.

Dr. Lumry is a man of ideas and never fails to make his readers understand just what they are. Every sentiment he writes has such an air of honesty that it will in a measure disarm those who read to criticise. It is a good book to set people to thinking, whether they believe his theories or not. The book is well worth a careful reading and study.—Inter Ocean.

On all the points named they differ radically from those which prevail in the organization of society. Either they are true or false. It is a curious fact that all of them have been stigmatized as crazy, and yet nearly all of them have been for some years steadily gaining the adherence of men of intellectual ability.—Times.

The Christian's Secret OF A Happy Life. 28th THOUSAND.

Baptist Commendation.

"We are delighted with this book. It reaches to the very core of Christian experience, and is eminently experimental in its teachings. It meets the doubts and difficulties of conscientious searers after the bread and water of life. It is a steady aid in all alternate failure and victory. The author, without claiming to be a prophet, stands on the results of a happy and rich experience to help others into a happy Christian life."—Baptist Weekly.

Presbyterian Endorsement.
"The book is so truly and reverently devoted in its spirit that it disarms criticism. It contains so much that is sound and practical, so much that, if heeded, will make the lives of the reader more useful, that the intelligent reader who really wishes to lead a life 'hid with Christ in God' can scarcely fail to derive profit from its perusal."—Interior.

Methodist Word of Praise.
"We have not for years read a book with more delight and profit. It is not a theological book. No effort is made to change the theological views of any one. The author has a rich experience, and tells in a plain and delightful manner."—Christian Advocate.

United Brethren Approval.
"We have seldom met with a more interesting volume, abounding throughout with apt illustrations; we have failed to find a dry line from title-page to end."—Bellows Falls.

Congregational Comment.
"It contains much clear, pungent reasoning and interesting incident. It is a practical and experimental treatise on the word of God, and is worthy of universal circulation."—Church Union.

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Andromeda Jail, his subsequent conveyance by freemason to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his name to the letter, but signs it as APPROPRIATE.

In closing his letter he writes: I now look back through all the history of fifty-six years, and wonder at the course of having been governed through the 'Anti-Masonic excitement' by a sincere desire, first to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of 'secret societies.'

F. Ronayne.

Past Master of Keystone Lodge No. 634 Chicago.

Explains the true source and meaning of every ceremony and symbol of the Lodge, thus showing the principles on which the order is founded. By careful perusal of this work, a more thorough knowledge of the principles of the order can be obtained than by attending lectures. It is founded by Mason, every person contemplating becoming a member, and even those who are indifferent on the subject, should procure and carefully read this work. An appendix is added of 32 pages, embodying

Freemasonry at a Glance,

"which gives every sign, grip and ceremony of the Lodge together with a brief explanation of each. The work contains 22 pages and is substantial and elegantly bound in cloth. Price, 75 cents.

THE SECRET ORDERS OF WESTERN AFRICA.

BY J. AUGUSTUS COLE, OF SHAINAGA, WEST AFRICA.

Bishop Flickinger of the U. B. church says that, "This volume will well repay a careful reading not only for its discussion and exposition of these societies, but because it gives much valuable information respecting other institutions of that great continent."

J. Augustus Cole, the author of this pamphlet is a native of Western Africa, and is of pure negro blood. He has given much time and care to the investigation of the secret societies and heathen customs of Western Africa. He joined several of the secret orders for the purpose of obtaining full and correct information regarding their nature and operation. His culture and superior powers of discrimination render what he has written most complete and reliable.

Talks ON THE Labor Troubles.

BY REV. C. C. BROWN.

The Danger—The Laborer's Grievance—The Laborer's Foe—The Laborer's Hope—Mind and Muscle—Co-Laborers.

TIMELY TALKS ON AN IMPORTANT SUBJECT.

The Papers Say of this Book:

"It is well to remind the world of the great law of human brotherhood, but how to make the more general application of it? 'The laborer is the rule'! Our author contributes his mite in that direction, and his voice and reasoning will reach some ears and perhaps touch some understandings and move some selfish hearts that are buttoned up very closely and heaped around by over much respectability and comfortable prosperity."—Chicago Tribune.

"The writer does his work in a way remarkable alike for its directness, its common sense, its impartiality, its lucidity and force. He has no theories to support; he deals with facts as he finds them; he fortifies his assertions by arrays of demonstrative statistics. His work is among the best of the kind if it is not the best that we have seen. While it is scarcely possible for it to be put in the hands of all our wage-workers, we wish it could be read by every one of them."—Chicago Interior.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

Secretary Bayard believes that the final adjustment of the fisheries dispute between the United States and Great Britain is near at hand. Joseph Chamberlain, the antagonist of Mr. Gladstone, has been selected by the British government as commissioner to treat with the United States.

The State Department in Washington has ordered an investigation into the circumstances attending the arrest of Edward T. Doane, the American missionary at the Caroline Islands, by the Spanish authorities.

Indian Commissioner Atkins has ordered the removal forthwith from the Ute reservation of all persons found thereon whose presence in any way tends to disturb the peace and quiet of the Indians, and if found necessary to carry out this order to call upon the military for assistance. The Government has no faith in the Colorado stories about the Indian uprising.

COUNTRY.

A preliminary contract was signed Friday whereby the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad passes under control of a syndicate composed of J. S. Morgan & Co., Baring Brothers & Co., and Brown, Shipley & Co., of London, and Drexel, Morgan & Co., Brown Brothers, and Kidder, Peabody & Co., of New York, and Drexel & Co., of Philadelphia. The latter agree to supply $10,000,000 to liquidate the floating debt of the road. It is stated that the sleeping car system will be controlled by the Pullman Company, and that Western Union will take the telegraph business, and that the road will be operated practically by the Pennsylvania Railroad.

Suits for damages amounting to $140,000 have been commenced in Peoria county against the Toledo, Peoria & Western Railroad Company—all growing out of the Chatsworth disaster.

After Sept. 15 the rates of the Commercial Cable Company to the British Islands and France will be reduced to 12 cents a word and to Germany to 15 cents a word. The directors have resolved to increase the capital stock from $4,000,000 to $6,000,000.

Prof. John Avery, late professor of Greek at Bowdoin College, died suddenly Thursday morning at North Bridgeton, Me. Prof. Avery was connected with Bowdoin College and was widely known among the alumni of the institution.

The authorities of Atlanta, Ga., prohibited as sacrilegious the representation of Christ and the virgins in a passion play by the colored people.

Chinatown in Los Angeles was completely burned out four weeks ago, and a new location was decided upon. The people gathered in such force at the site of the proposed new Chinatown and used such stormy language that the owners had to promise not to locate the Chinese there. It is expected that the Chinese will find great difficulty in securing any locality in the city.

Justice Field of the United States Supreme Court, rendered a decision at San Francisco declining to make an order compelling Senator Stanford and others to answer questions propounded by the Pacific Railroad Commission, and also refused to give the commission access to the books of certain construction companies. The decision declares that that part of the act creating the commission which refers to courts is unconstitutional.

The new tunnel, to secure a supply of water in Chicago in case of accident to the crib, is being pushed forward rapidly, the force of men having been doubled and work prosecuted during the night.

A telegram from Glenwood Springs, Col., is to the effect that five whites were killed in the battle with Colorow's Indians. Seven bucks and two squaws were killed and five wounded.

Governor Adams and General Crook reached an agreement at Meeker, Col., Thursday, by which two companies of United States troops will be kept on the line between the Uintah reservation and Colorado, for the protection of settlers and to keep the Utes out of the latter State.

A mortgage for $16,000,000 on all the property of the Central Pacific Railroad was filed Wednesday at San Francisco. The interest is 6 per cent per annum, payable half yearly; and it is believed the money is to be used by the company to complete projected roads.

In the South the corn crop will exceed that of 1886 by over fifty million bushels, and that section will be nearly self-supporting in the matter of corn.

An assignment was made at Philadelphia Tuesday morning by the extensive coal mining firms of Robert Hare Powell & Co., and Robert Hare Powell, Sons & Co. The liabilities are estimated at $1,578,000, while the assets are said to exceed $4,000,000. The suspension was caused by the failure of Charles E. Pennock & Co., iron plate merchants at Coatesville, to take up paper endorsed by the Powell firms.

A colored servant in the family of Dr. H. H. Holmes of Cranberry, N. Y., died suddenly. On examination it was discovered that the woman's heart had split about three-fourth of an inch from the top. It is the first case on record. She lived three days with a severed heart.

Michael Butler, recently discharged from the position of keeper in the insane asylum on Ward's Island, has petitioned the Supreme Court for the release of a number of patients as sane. He declares that of the 1,750 inmates no less than 300 are perfectly sane, and that 1,000 others are entirely harmless lunatics.

Frank C. McNeilly, a clerk in the Saco and Biddeford Savings Institution, at Saco, Me., decamped Monday afternoon, taking $3,500 in cash and United States and other bonds amounting to $276,000, belonging to the bank.

Israel Lucas, the county treasurer of Auglaize county, Ohio, has fled, leaving a shortage of $31,644. A reward of $2,000 is offered for his arrest.

An oil well was shot Tuesday near Cygnet, Ohio, that flowed 5,000 barrels in twenty-four hours, being the largest well in the Ohio oil territory.

Captain Daniel Dennsaler, late of the Fourth Michigan Cavalry, which captured Jeff Davis near Abbeyville, died near Coldwater, Mich., late Sunday night.

Two men tried to force their way into the residence of Mr. John Bott, of Chadron, Neb. Mrs. Bott was alone in the house, and she told the men to go away. They forced the door and rushed toward her, but the intrepid woman shot them down and they will die.

Early Monday morning an attempt was made to burn the bridge over a culvert one mile east of Wabash, Ind. A freight train narrowly escaped destruction.

Oak Grove Seminary, a Quaker school at Vassalboro, Me., was burned early Thursday morning. A 16 year old son of Stephen Jones perished in the flames.

The city flour mills of Brodhead, Wis., were built on a disused water way. Monday there was a shifting of quicksand and the massive structure shook, tottered and fell, burying all the valuable machinery out of sight. The loss is about $20,000.

Forest fires have again broken out in Cheyboygan county, Michigan. Late vegetables and fruit are drying up, as there has been no rain for two months.

Henry Pletcher, of Elkhart, Ind., was blown to pieces by an explosion of dynamite, Wednesday, near La Porte. Parts of the unfortunate man's body were found a quarter of a mile from the scene of the accident.

When near Weldon, Ill., Tuesday, a freight train on the Illinois Central Railroad was almost totally wrecked. J. C. Coleman, the fireman, and Wm. Weson, brakeman, were fatally injured.

An attempt to wreck a train for the purpose of robbery is reported from Lebanon, O. About 2 o'clock Thursday morning, as a train of eleven cars with 500 passengers was returning from Cincinnati, the engine encountered, at a point about a mile from Lebanon, an obstruction made of railroad track, ties and fence rails. The passengers were shaken up, but no one was hurt.

While thrashing operations were in progress Tuesday on the farm of Lyman G. Curtis, near Flint, Mich., fire broke out among the straw, followed by an explosion of the boiler. One man was killed, two others were seriously hurt and three young women badly wounded. The fire destroyed the barns and the season's crops.

FOREIGN.

In the House of Commons on a motion to grant £763,315 for the purpose of completing the credit for the Irish police service, Mr. Dillon protested against the constant increase of the police in Ireland. Although the population had decreased 200,000 since 1880, the cost of police service had increased over £250,000. This waste of the public money was not due to crime. A monstrous and corrupt police force was kept up to evade the provisions of the mutiny act by maintaining a larger military force than was sanctioned by Parliament.

The fourth international conference of the Red Cross—an association for relieving or preventing the sufferings incident to warfare—will be opened Sept. 22 in the Royal Chambers of the Grand Ducal Palace at Karlsruhe, Germany. This is the fourth international conference held by this association since its formation in 1864.

We hear good news from the Wisconsin Good Templars. At the meeting at Madison last week they decided finally to favor prohibition and vote for it. Through the influence of Mr. Samuel Hastings, an influential member of the order, this result has come about after some struggle. A year or two since there was much division of opinion and condemnation of political prohibitionists. It is also good news to learn that with the revival of true temperance issues the order is sinking in spite of strenuous efforts to establish new lodges. This is only the natural and reasonable course of things. The temperance cause is so far beyond Good Templarism and its companion lodges as to be nearly out of sight. They must drop their needless load of secret obligations and secret, despotic worship before they can catch up. Honest members see there is no more use for Good Templarism except to give Finch and his kind a kingdom.

Sioux City is not through with Haddock, nor is the law done with Arensdorf, his slayer. A crafty motion was made in court the other day to dismiss the case against Arensdorf, on the ground that the jury would have found for acquittal if they had not so soon been dismissed. It will be remembered that only one, a farmer, stood for justice upon the murderer. The motion was not granted, and next day another of the conspirators, Munchrath, was put on trial on the charge of murder and conspiracy. An excellent jury, seven of them farmers, was soon obtained, and the examination of witnesses began last week. The evidence of Leavitt was repeated more clearly than ever, and the cross-examination did not shake him. It strongly convicts Arensdorf. There will be no new witnesses for the State, and there is great confidence that justice in Iowa will be redeemed from the former disgrace.

From Mexico and Arizona come reports of remarkable meteorological phenomena. A rain flood last week swept away some twenty miles of the Southern Pacific railway between Tucson and Benson, blocking travel for two weeks. Similar floods and waterspouts have occurred along the line of the Central railway which connects the City of Mexico with El Paso, Texas, and so frequently as to warrant the theory that there is some peculiar attraction about the rails and telegraph lines. Further south, on a branch line to Guadalajara, it has been observed by the engineers that rain follows the building of the road. In the vicinity of the construction trains the fall is heavy while drouth prevails a few miles away in every direction. Here in the North whole States have suffered from unusual and severe drouth, which those who are inclined to observe providences believe is a judgment due in great part to these very railroads which are the most considerable agency in the sin of Sabbath-breaking.

Senator Pomeroy has been summering at Swampscott, Massachusetts, but his retreat has been found out and the Boston reporters have been noting down his familiar, off-hand talks on the political situation, which have the merit of originality as well as shrewdness. A late number of the Boston Herald has a column and a half report of one of these interviews. Mr. Pomeroy does not believe Cleveland will run for a second term, or that the next candidate will come from New York. His observation among leading men of the new South is that a prejudice has arisen against the Empire State, whose influence they regard as too strong with the present administration to the injury of the Gulf States and seaport cities of the South. These interests find allies in the Northwest and will make a combination too strong to be overborne. Petty questions of tariff which agitate the North will go down before the greater interests of commerce, and the party which ignores the natural alliance between the United States and Mexico and the Central and South American republics will get left. The new movement, mis-called "American," has also attracted Mr. Pomeroy's notice, and he has been invited to attend the convention at Philadelphia. He promises to do so and speak for an American platform with three planks—all solid as oak: 1. Equality of rights for all citizens, native or adopted. 2. A God in human government and a Bible in all free schools. 3. Prohibition and no secret orders—all to be open as the day and in secret nothing. Bravo! We can raise a flag on that platform, and if the Senator can build it strong enough to hold himself, it will the rest of us.

Senator Kasson and the committee for the Centennial of the Constitution could not persuade the two great Englishmen, Gladstone and Bright, to visit this country and draw the crowd to Philadelphia, but they received from them letters that are worth reading in all our American homes. The former was assured of a welcome as cordial as was given the brave and generous La Fayette, but he replied that all his reserve strength was needed at home. "I regard the Irish question as the most urgent and most full of promise of beneficial results to my country that I have ever been engaged in." The letter closes by saying that the prayer of Englishmen shall be that we as a nation may by God's help worthily meet our high responsibilities and that the nations may be more closely joined in their moral relations. The sturdy old Quaker, while not having public duties to plead, puts age and his natural dislike of great assemblies and ceremonies forward as reasons for declining; and he closes with this noble sentiment: "As you advance in the second century of your national life may we not ask that your country and mine may march in line in the direction of freedom and a policy which the moral law will sustain. May we not comfort ourselves with the belief that your country under a succession of noble Presidents, with their ministers and your Congress, and my country, under a succession of patriotic sovereigns, with their ministers and Parliaments, may assist and guide the growing millions for whom they act to nobler ends than have hitherto been reached? May we not ask that our two nations may be one people; that in years to come and years not very remote, the millions with you and the millions with us, while growing in numbers and strength, may grow in wisdom, and may enter more fully into the enjoyment of the boundless blessings which are offered to nations in perfect freedom of human industry in the establishment of a perpetual peace?"

A MASONIC MENAGERIE.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "SELLING DEAD HORSES."

In this age of research, investigation and illumination, there appears to be one system which cannot be discussed. It is something which not only hides itself in the darkness, it also flaunts itself in the bright daylight. It comes before us as a benevolent institution—though in matters of charity its left hand rarely is able to find out what its right hand doeth. It absorbs millions of dollars, and neither the men who pay it nor their families and friends have any definite information of the manner in which it is disposed of. It builds its gorgeous temples from which the public are excluded; it practices its religious rites in which no outsiders are permitted to unite. It comes forth "terrible as an army with banners," and parades the streets with barbaric pomp and show. It lays the foundations of court-houses, postoffices, and public buildings with pomps and prayers and mummeries; but yet no government has the slightest right to investigate it, or power to control it. It claims to be a sublime and divine institution, but it must not be talked about, and its true character must not be exhibited.

And why? If Freemasonry is a charitable institution, why may not its principles of charity be published wide as the world? And why may not its accounts and reports be made public for inspection like those of other charitable institutions? If Freemasonry is a sublime system of morality, why may not its influence be made universal? Is there any good reason why a one-legged soldier shall be debarred from learning its sacred principles in full? And is there any good reason why a sensible woman cannot be instructed in the elements of virtue, wisdom and truth?

What body of men has an exclusive patent upon principles which are necessary to the well-being of society? An inventor or the discoverer of some valuable principle, process, device, or machine has the exclusive right to make, use and vend his article for a specified number of years on condition that he disclose its character and secure a patent. But this is only for a few years, at the end of which time his invention, discovery or art becomes the property of the public, for their benefit. If the institution of Freemasonry has anything of importance about it, has not the period of the patent expired long ago? If they have had the exclusive benefits of it for a hundred or a thousand years, is it not time that the public should be permitted to participate in the benefits arising from it? No man can secure the protection of patent law unless he discloses the character and object of his invention. He must place it within the reach of the people in the patent office, and so explain it that any man can investigate and understand it. If these men claim such privileges, why should they not conform to these obviously equitable principles? Any man who chooses to conceal his inventions or processes may do so; but if he does this, while he has a right to conceal, others have a right to discover, and he can have no claim whatever to prevent their discovering and appropriating his invention. If he refuses to disclose his secret and avail himself of the protection of the law, they have a right to help themselves to the information in any lawful and legitimate manner. But here is something which men declare must be always concealed and never revealed. Not only this, but it must not be discussed. When persons undertake to speak concerning its character they are promptly informed that they know nothing about it. When they undertake to inform themselves they are contradicted, abused and belied.

All political parties and organizations are fair subjects of criticism; all religious societies, churches and creeds in this country may be examined and discussed. There may be a single church that objects to free discussion, and which by the horrors and tortures of the Inquisition has sought to crush it out, but in this country even that church cannot lock its doors and defy public opinion and criticism. Free speech is guaranteed by the very Constitution of the Government under which we live. Men may go into any hall in our great cities, and discuss any thing. An excommunicated priest may denounce the pope; a reformed drunkard may denounce the rum traffic; an atheistic orator may denounce the Bible and rail at Christianity by the hour, and nobody interferes with, mobs or disturbs either of them; but when a man proposes to exhibit before the public the "works of darkness" which are done in Masonic lodges throughout the city and country, at once he finds that he is treading on ground so holy that he cannot even obtain a hearing. He will be hissed and hated, cursed and contradicted, and an organized effort will be made to prevent the accomplishment of his purpose.

Who are these men who so hate the light? What have they been doing of which they are so thoroughly ashamed?

Freemasonry was thoroughly illustrated at Music Hall, Boston, Massachusetts, on the 25th day of March, 1880. It was illustrated by Mr. Ronayne, some time master of a Masonic lodge, who worked the degrees in due form. He illustrated how Masons were made; and several hundred Masons seated in the hall illustrated the character of the fraternity after they were made. He showed how men were initiated; they showed how men were trained after they were initiated. The assembly which, that night, hooted, and stamped, and roared, and whistled, and cursed, and swore, and blasphemed, were no mob. They were a very respectable looking body of men. Some of them were aged, gray-headed, and bald-headed men, and sat directly in front of the speaker and kept up an unceasing roar, so that he could not be heard. They were no mere rabble gathered from the slums, they were thoroughly trained; and one or two high-toned gentlemen sitting in the rear controlled and directed the tumult. When the police came very near them they were quiet; the moment their backs were turned the rattling of canes, the stamping of feet, the clapping of hands commenced again. The whole band of men were under control; at a signal given they would stamp with their feet, keeping time as accurately as ever a Masonic body did when circumambulating the lodge or marching in a public parade. They were thoroughly drilled, and their maneuvers were artistic; their whistlings were in concert. Whenever there was nothing of importance being said upon the platform the tumult would lull, but the moment that Mr. Ronayne commenced the recital of some oath or the disclosure of some Masonic secret, which they had sworn to conceal, before he had uttered a word their din and racket would rise, making it impossible for him to be heard. Thus those hundreds of Freemasons endorsed the correctness of his representations. They had sworn to conceal certain things, and when they knew he was about to repeat them they created such an uproar that nothing could be heard.

We have heard much said of the superiority of Freemasons over ordinary mortals. We had on this occasion a practical illustration of the excellence of this institution. Though many who wished to be present were frightened away by Masonic rumors of meditated violence, yet hundreds of persons paid their money to hear an illustrated lecture on Freemasonry. The best hall in Boston was hired at an expense of $125 for the night. Hundreds of well-dressed, sober, intelligent Freemasons entered that hall and deliberately trespassed on the rights of their fellow-citizens, drowned the lecturer's voice in a continuous and tumultuous roar, which the police of Boston could not or did not suppress. Over twenty policemen in uniform, besides others in citizens' clothes, hired and paid by the promoters of the meeting, patrolled that hall all the evening, but could not quell the din. Right under the eyes of those guardians of the public peace and the rights and liberties of the people, these hundreds of Freemasons violated law, order, and decency, and by continuous tumult prevented their fellow-citizens from hearing what was to be said, and what they had paid their money to hear; and if a score of policemen could not even insure a hearing, we may judge what would have been the result had no policemen been present! The spirit that murdered Morgan was rampant in Boston Music Hall, and had there been no protection, it requires little foresight to perceive that they would have repeated the crimes which have already blackened and cursed their institution.

The crowd was apparently a good-humored crowd.

This was a part of the programme, but the close observer could see in the flashing eye and the flushed cheek, the evidence that the darker passions were rankling beneath the jovial surface. We noticed on the countenances of some a sickly laugh, like the grin of a man who knows that he is a liar but thinks to brave it out. Well might they adopt the poet's language,

"Why, I can smile, and murder while I smile,
And cry 'content,' at that which grieves my heart."

One lady, the daughter of a thirty-third degree Mason, who had previously entertained a favorable impression of the institution, after witnessing that performance, said she wanted to know no more of Masonry. Another man, a Mason, left the place in disgust before the close of the proceedings, saying to a friend, "Never tell anybody that I am a Mason."

But this was not all. When the tumult was over, and this Masonic menagerie was driven out of the hall, the men who dared not use violence with the officers of the law around them, waited in a mob about the entrance, cursing and swearing and seeking opportunity to wreak their vengeance upon the lecturer. Some of them were seen looking into the windows of his hotel, and not seeing him there they concluded he still remained in the hall, and accordingly the mob waited about the entrance till midnight that they might execute their threats and wreak their vengeance upon Mr. Ronayne, he meanwhile resting quietly in his lodgings.

Nor was this all. On the platform during the lecture sat the venerable Samuel D. Greene. He had been a Mason, and was a member of the lodge in Batavia, New York, to which William Morgan belonged. William Morgan was a boarder at his hotel before his abduction; and his body, after being found, was brought to the house of Mr. Greene, recognized and identified by unmistakable marks, and from thence buried. This old man, nearly blind, when passing out of Music Hall by the Tremont street exit, accompanied by one or two friends, was brutally assaulted by one of the worthies who had taken such an interest in the lecture. The old man had been slandered, pursued, threatened, prosecuted, and annoyed for more than fifty years by members of the Masonic fraternity, but there was reserved for him one honor, the honor of being brutally assaulted by Masonic emissaries. The Masons of Boston did themselves proud on that occasion, in assaulting a man nearly blind and ninety-three years old at eleven o'clock at night, and in spattering the garments of a lady who was with him with eggs! This is that noble, chivalrous institution, the praises of which are sung in hymns like this:

"Hail Masonry divine, Glory of ages shine."

Thus we had the privilege of attending an illustrated lecture on Masonry. The Master Mason's degree was worked from beginning to end, and the correctness of it was endorsed by several hundred stamping, whistling, howling, hooting Masons, and the penalties of it were sought to be illustrated by a band of ruffians lying in wait to mob a seceder from Masonry, and by brutally assaulting a venerable seceder Mason ninety-three years old. How many more such exhibitions as that would be necessary to make such a stench that the man in the moon would hold his nose, and every decent Mason would abandon an order which resorts to such methods to stifle free speech and deprive men of their rights?

Suppose it be granted that Masons have a right to conceal their proceedings, it must also be granted that every other man has an equal right to investigate them. The world is large. Freemasons are not obliged to hear what they do not wish to; but a system which turns truthful men into liars and deceivers, which makes them deny things which they know to be true, and grin a smile of hypocritical incredulity, when known facts are presented before them, must of necessity be corrupting in the extreme. No wonder a thirty-third degree Masonic minister said not long ago, that Freemasonry was the greatest enemy the church had; but when asked to take a public stand against it he replied, "You don't know what it is to be a thirty-third degree Mason!"

BOSTONIAN.

I meet with a great many persons in the course of the year, and with many whom I admire and like; but what I feel daily more and more to need, as life every year rises more and more before me in this true reality, is to have intercourse with those who take life in earnest. It is very painful to me to be always on the surface of things; and I feel that literature, science, politics, and many topics of far greater interest than mere gossip, or talking about the weather, are yet, as they are generally talked about, still upon the surface—they do not touch the real depth of life. It is not that I want much of what is called religious conversation—that, I believe, is often on the surface, like other conversation; but I want a sign which one catches as by a sort of intuition that a man knows what he is about in life, whither tending, in what cause engaged, and, when I find this, it seems to open my heart as thoroughly and with as fresh a sympathy as when I was twenty years younger.—Dr. Arnold.

IF NOT THE LAW, WHAT OF THE PROPHECIES?

BY REV. C. E. WALKER.

This is an age of skepticism. Men are willing to let go truth and embrace error if truth is unpleasant to them. The Unitarian un-faith finds a response in many un-Unitarian minds; especially as pertaining to the Old Testament law.

I believe in the "Bible, Old and New Testaments, as the Word of God." I am called a fanatic on a good many questions and don't care if the learned world "smiles" for my firm belief in the Old Testament. If I must surrender the law I cannot keep the promises. If there is no rule of life for man how may he know how to live? (I speak of the moral law and not of the ceremonial law, which prefigured Christ.) True, a man filled with the Holy Spirit needs no outward law manifestation, but until there is a freeing from "the old man with his deeds," and the Holy Ghost within to direct and fashion the ways of man, there is need of a law.

Law is a rule of life. When was the law given? Part of it was made known to Adam at the time he was given charge of his little farm which held all the beasts of that community. But I believe there was a law in the nature of that forbidden fruit and of man, which, upon being violated by eating the fruit, brought on the tremendous penalty. Part of the law may have been revealed from time to time as God saw the need for the revelation, but the fact that it was so revealed is no argument that the same law did not exist from the time of the council of the Trinity when it was agreed to make man.

Then I believe that the law has its existence in the very relation between man and God, and man and man. When Moses received the tables from God with the "Thou shalt not" to engrave upon the door-posts and upon the minds of men, it was not the first existence of those laws with their tremendous penalties attached.

If the foregoing be correct, then it will not be necessary to spend time and space to prove that the moral law was not given to the Jews alone. Verily it must be that the law was and is for all who need the law. Take, as proof, Christ's statement concerning the Sabbath: "The Sabbath was made for man." No limit. And for the Jew to violate the Seventh Commandment could be no worse than for the Gentile. As further proof that the God of the Jew and Gentile alike (Rom. 3:29) made a law (in the nature of the creation of the human family, we take it) which was binding, whether written or unwritten, we will quote from Paul, Romans 4:15, "Where no law is there is no transgression." Rom. 5:13, "Sin is imputed where there is no law." The conclusion drawn from these quotations is that if there was at any time no law there could be no sin at such time. But read Rom. 3:23, "All have sinned." Death is the consequence of sin, and in Romans 5:14 we read that "death reigned from Adam to Moses, even over them that had not sinned after the similitude of Adam's transgression." These sinned, though not as Adam did. They broke other laws. Therefore we must agree that the law existed before and after the flashes of lightning around old Sinai.

But it is argued that "Christ is the end of the law." (Rom. 10:4.) True, "for righteousness to every one that believeth." When a soul sanctified (the "old man with his deeds" removed), filled with the Holy Ghost, and thus robed in the righteousness of Christ, "goeth about doing good," there is no law-breaking done by that soul. A man does not sin while filled with the Holy Spirit, inasmuch as God can not lead into sin, and Christ has thereby become "the end of the law for righteousness" to him that is righteous even as he (Christ) is righteous." 1 John 3:7.

"The law was our schoolmaster to bring us unto Christ." Gal. 3:24. The seeker to-day who finds Christ finds him by reason of the fact that there is a law with a terrible penalty: he has violated the law and must meet the penalty unless a Saviour can interpose for him. He feels condemned and that justly, believing the law reasonable and righteous, and repenting, implores the Father to give him Christ.

I think, with Paul, "we establish the law." Rom. 3:31. I also think that if you wrest from me my Old Testament that with it you may take the New. In the New Testament I read of the historic Christ; in the Old Testament I read of the Messiah of prophecy. As I look upon the historic Christ I know him because he is just like the Christ of the prophets, and I can see the truth of the one by the statements of the other. Christ Jesus said he came to fulfil the law and the prophets, but not to abolish the commands he himself had given, nor to make of none effect the prophecies concerning himself.

I love the Bible for various reasons. It is the Word of God, and reveals my origin, tells where I am, where I may go, and how I may get there. From Genesis to Revelation inclusive it shows me "the way, the truth and the life." Then, skeptics, remove your hands from that sacred Book; tear not from it a single leaf, nor allow a finger-print to soil it. Beware how you mouth it. It is God's Word, and is not only precious to the thirsty soul but terrible to the unbeliever and to the ruthless hand.

MASONIC M'GARIGLE.

[From the Inter Ocean of Sept. 1.]

The region of the Sheriff's office was pervaded by an air of deep mystery last night. Gentlemen who won notoriety in connection with the recent boodler trials walked along Clark Street in apparent unconsciousness of the county building until they were exactly opposite the doorway, when there was a sudden disappearance which would have done credit to Herrmann himself. Nic Schneider, who once before disappeared so successfully, repeated his act last night. Other gentlemen, not so well known, nearly all wearing Masonic emblems, slipped into the lobby of the building and were lost in the darkness which happened to fill the hall in front of the entrance to the Sheriff's office. An old man, his snowy locks covered by a silk skull cap, opened the door when a visitor hesitated outside it for a moment, sized him up, and, in response to a question, was sure that nothing was going on. From the outside everything seemed to confirm his assertion. Heavy curtains shrouded all the windows save one, and through this there shot a narrow gleam of light. Men could be seen inside who were evidently not deputy sheriffs. Opposite the window sat Furthman, the assistant State's Attorney, puffing a cigar with the complacent assurance of a man who has just had his salary raised. Architect Faber, of the Normal School job, sat solemnly in one corner, and Thomas Middleton, who cleaned carpets for the county, toyed nervously with his Knight Templar charm. A short-hand writer was busy at a table, and Colonel Nate Reed, Henry Gleason, chief clerk of the Sheriff's office, and Deputy Sheriff Spear were visible at times. Colonel A. C. Potter and Nic Michaels, the former messenger of the County Board, were seen to come out of the office. The session lasted until after 10 o'clock, when the crowd came out into the darkened corridor, and the electric light on the street revealed the presence of H. G. Hamilton, Past Grand Master, and several of the officers of Lincoln Park Lodge, No. 611, A. F. and A. M. This happens to be the lodge of which the late departed McGarigle was a member. Several of the members were armed with volumes of Masonic Jurisprudence and the Masonic Monitor, and the indications were that the meeting had to do with the craft. The fact is that W. J. McGarigle was on trial for unmaasonic conduct, and the array of witnesses shows how conclusive the evidence was. It may seem strange that a Masonic trial should be held outside a lodgeroom, but the Monitor explains that. Giving the procedure in case of a trial, it says: "After the charges of unmaasonic conduct have been presented in writing and accepted by the lodge, the Master shall appoint the time and place for the trial and shall notify the accused. If he shall refuse or fail to appear, the lodge shall appoint a competent brother to act as the attorney of the accused. Witnesses who are not Masons shall be examined by a committee appointed by the Master, and when the committee has concluded its labors it shall report its proceedings and all the evidence to the lodge. A vote of two-thirds of the members present shall be necessary to decide the degree of punishment, which is either expulsion, suspension, or reprimand. Expulsion involves an absolute deprivation of all the rights, privileges, and benefits of Masonry, to the delinquent and his family." Expulsion by a Blue Lodge would expel a Mason from any higher grades of which he might be a member.

This is the explanation of the mysterious gathering last night in the inner sanctum of the Sheriff's office. The committee of Garden City Lodge was present, the principal witnesses of the boodler trials testified anew, and the organization will soon have purged itself of uncleanness, and W. J. McGarigle will be no longer a Mason and one of the Princes of Jerusalem.

It may seem strange to the uninitiated that the verdict of a civil court is not accepted as conclusive in Masonry. But in 1877 the following decision of M. W. Joseph Robbins was affirmed by the Grand Lodge: "When a brother is on trial before his lodge for an alleged Masonic offense, the record of his conviction for the same offense in a civil court is not sufficient to warrant the lodge in finding a verdict of guilty."

It is understood that an effort will be made at the session of the Grand Lodge next month to rescind this ruling.

THE DECLINE OF THE KNIGHTS OF LABOR.

The fact can no longer be concealed that the organization of the Knights of Labor is going down with appalling rapidity. A score of assemblies are lapsing every week, whole crafts are threatening to withdraw altogether, and no corresponding additions to the membership are gained to make up the losses. The rank and file of the order seem to have become supremely indifferent as to whether it prospers now or not, and under these circumstances it is not surprising that, with all the forces of employers and capitalists arrayed against them, the Knights of Labor should be losing ground. It is safe to say that the paid-up membership of the order is not half as large now as it was one year ago.

The dissatisfaction with the present condition of things extends all over the country, and is nowhere more plainly manifested than in Philadelphia, the headquarters as well as the cradle of the organization. The process of disintegration has made its severest inroads right here in the head and center of the organization. The members are supremely indifferent as to the welfare of their organization. They do not attend the assembly meetings. They do not pay their dues. They do not enforce boycotts as they are urged to do. They do not respond to appeals for financial aid. They do not obey the mandates of their general officers, and what is worse than all for them, they cannot be awakened from the deep slumber of indifference into which they have fallen.

The causes which have led to this state of affairs are not far to seek. The Knights of Labor have exhausted themselves and impoverished their treasuries through innumerable strikes and labor dissensions. They have suffered defeat in almost every recent fight which they have waged against their employers, and consequently they have come to place but little confidence in the advantages and capabilities of their organization. Besides this, and notably since the Richmond Convention of the General Assembly last October, a deep-seated conviction has entered the minds of the thinking members of the order that the management of affairs is not at all such as it should be. These thinking members say the general officers are running things for their own benefit, and not for the good of the order at large. Knights who have visited the General Headquarters here have invariably gone away divested of that awe and reverence for the members of the General Executive Board which their single-minded brothers in the provincial districts are so proud to cherish. The remarkable indifference everywhere in the order, even as to matters which virtually concern the interests of the members, is shown emphatically in the statement which comes from the General Headquarters, to the effect that not half the whole number of local assemblies voted at all upon the adoption or rejection of the new constitution. They evidently did not care whether it became the law to govern the Knights or not, although the new provisions, placing the most arbitrary powers in the hands of the General Executive Board, are really appalling to those who have the future well-being of the order at heart.—N. Y. Times.

THE MORMON DANGER.

JOSEPH COOK IN THE NATIONAL REFORM CONVENTION, SARATOGA.

Reform, unpopular reform, may be a pillar of fire through which God is looking, troubling the host of his enemies and taking off their chariot wheels. Let us see to it, in taking position on public questions that we be not fighting against God. In our great civil war we were blunderers together, the North and the South, but God had a plan. Are we not dropping into barbarism if we believe that we can float reforms without God. The society in whose behalf I have the honor to speak to-night advocates the idea which floats all reforms. The wild geese in their migrations fly wedge-shaped through the air, and if one bird flies another takes its place; but whoever is the leader all float in their sustaining element, the air. So in the onward movement of reforms, now one question is foremost and now another, but all reforms must float in God.

To take now what seems to me to be for the moment the foremost bird in the flock of great questions now floating in American skies: Political exigencies seem likely, within the next few months, to bring the Mormon question, in a new phase, before the nation. Dakota is about to press for admission as a State. So is Washington Territory. Both these Territories will, probably, send Republican representatives to Congress. The balance of power is not exclusively a European idea. It has place in American politics. Where will the opponents of the Republican party look for the vote to balance the electoral votes of these new States in the coming Presidential contest?

Twenty-five years ago polygamy and slavery were denounced together by the Republican party as "twin relics of barbarism." For twenty-five years we have been firing paper pellets at the Mormon abomination, and waiting for results. Many of us thought that when the Pacific railroad was built and the isolation of Utah was broken up, polygamy would disappear. The road was built and the isolation was diminished, but polygamy remains. It was thought the death of Brigham Young would mark the downfall of the system, but the Mormon power is stronger to-day than in the hour when Brigham Young was laid in his grave. The noble legislation introduced by Senator Edmunds was relied on to put the upholders of polygamy to flight, but the most that can be claimed is that they are in a flutter; they are not in flight. The American Bluebeard stands to-day with one hand on the door of his harem, while with the other he knocks for admission into the American Union. And the question is asked, Is it reasonable that Utah should be kept out forever? Nevada had only one-fourth of Utah's present population when she was admitted. Are we establishing a good precedent by this perpetual exclusion from Statehood of one section of the American people? These are some of the arguments by which her admission will be pressed.

Mr. Cook read extracts from the new Constitution which Utah has just framed, nominally abolishing polygamy and providing that this constitutional prohibition shall be operative without the aid of further legislation, and shall never be repealed without the consent of Congress and the President.

These provisions, he maintained, will not bear discussion. There is no lawyer who does not know that the assumed claim to tie up all posterity from legislation on this subject will not hold in law. Besides, who is to enforce this novel legislation against polygamy? Mormons. If they are sincere in their professed change of purpose, why have they, to this moment, resisted the laws of Congress to the same effect? Utah has not reformed, but she promises to reform if admitted into the Union. Why should we believe these promises? Why believe that she will surrender polygamy as a State when she clings to it with the tenacity of despair while she is a Territory?

I said to the proprietor of the Salt Lake Tribune, the leading Gentile paper of the Territory, What would your paper be worth if Utah were admitted into the Union with a Constitution nominally abolishing polygamy? "Not a penny," was his reply. The step proposed would leave the despotic power of the priesthood unbroken. We all know how unscrupulously they have used their power in the past; how social proscription, and injury to business interests, and, it is to be feared, even assassination most foul, have been employed against unwelcome immigrants. I have said as frank things against polygamy in Salt Lake City as I have said to-night. But I left the hall with a Judge of the United States court on one side, and a Captain from Camp Douglas on the other. And, but for Camp Douglas, I could not have spoken at all. I do not anticipate disorder or bloodshed while the nation's soldiers are there. But give Utah the powers of a State, withdraw the national authority, and freedom of speech and action will be at an end.

But you say, "What is this to us? Utah is a long way off." Remember, gentlemen, we are one nation. New York is governed from the Potomac. Are you willing to assist in putting men with half a score of wives as law-makers over you and your children? Utah and its vicinity contain the volcanic ridges where lie the bulk of our precious metals. Tickle the earth there with irrigation and she laughs with a harvest. If the roots of the Mormon cancer should spread five hundred miles from Utah on every side they would strike into thirteen States and Territories. Already in some of these Mormons hold the balance of power. And, in the face of these facts, we are asked to allow political parties in the race for power to treat with these rebels with arms in their hands.

I met with thirty leading gentlemen in the parlor of the Rev. Dr. McNeice of Salt Lake City, to receive their views. They did not believe that the Edmund's legislation would suffice. Far more stringent legislation than the East asks for is demanded by the Christian population of Utah who have studied the question on the ground. And they did not favor the anti-polygamy amendment to the national Constitution, because like this proposed constitution for Utah, they conceived it would be used to facilitate the admission of Utah as a State. But they did believe that the Idaho statute depriving polygamists of the right of suffrage ought to be extended by Congress over Utah.

Transparent as this fraud is, I am not sure it will not succeed. You will hear it this winter discussed in Congress. Listen to the whispered consultations of political tricksters, to the voice of some newspapers already lifted to favor it, to the clink of gold in the hands of a Mormon lobby of great wealth and thorough unscrupulousness, and you will agree with me that the situation is not free from danger. And how can we ever justify ourselves before heaven and the world if we allow the non-Mormon population to be trampled under foot by a tyrannical and unscrupulous priesthood, many of whom ought to be in jail? For years I had studied this question at a distance, and thought I understood it. But when I took my wife with me, and we met the many-wived Orson Pratt, and he expected an introduction to my wife (which he did not receive) I obtained a new view of the abomination. And when I sat down with broken-hearted women and heard from their lips as much as a woman can tell a stranger; when my wife heard from them revelations which no man can properly hear except from his wife, my blood boiled with a heat which it could never have gained by a distant view of this system of abominations. Let us arouse ourselves. Let Christian men and women everywhere write to their representatives in strenuous protest against the consummation of this grievous wrong. Stir up your editors on the subject. And let us resolve that, if our influence can prevent it, Utah impudent and unreformed shall not be admitted as a State.

—Rev. C. W. Pritchard, editor of the Christian Worker, has sent to the daily press a notice of the General Conference of the yearly meetings of Friends to be held September 23d at Richmond, Ind. The proposition for the conference arose at Indiana's yearly meeting, which met at Richmond, Ind., in 1886. This is the largest yearly meeting of Friends in the world, having by last year's report 21,002 members. The invitation to meet as proposed has been accepted by every yearly meeting in the world, which has met since that time. Indiana will have twelve delegates, and other yearly meetings will be represented as follows: Kansas, with 7,071 members will have six delegates; Baltimore with 838, eight; New York with 3,846, nine; New England with 4,460, nine; Canada with about 1,500, five; North Carolina with about $6,000, four; Ohio with about 6,000, fourteen; London with 15,453 members has six delegates, and Dublin, 2,835, three. Iowa yearly meeting, which has 9,546 members, is now in session at Oskaloosa, and Western, with 13,038, will meet at Plainfield, Ind., on the 16th inst. The former on the 8th inst. appointed twelve delegates, and if the latter should send the same number there will be just 100 in the conference. Philadelphia Friends have not been in correspondence with the other yearly meetings for nearly forty years, but there are some members of that yearly meeting who are in unity with the church, and some of these may be present and invited to take part in the deliberations. This conference is looked forward to with unusual interest by Friends throughout the world. A like assembly was never before held. Conferences on Sabbath-schools, education, etc., have met, and committees from all these branches of the church have worked together on peace, Indian civilization, etc., and delegate conferences have met on other occasions, in which most of the yearly meetings in America were represented, but there was never before a general gathering of delegates from all the yearly meetings in the world, nor was the interest in any meeting ever so deep and widespread as in this.

MUSIO AND PATRIOTISM.—We have for years, says the Musical Herald, advocated the playing of a national air, "Hail Columbia" or "The Star-Spangled Banner," at the close of every musical and dramatic entertainment given in the United States. Such a movement would be calculated to promote a feeling of patriotism among the people, especially among the younger element of the community. No concert or dramatic performance is given in Great Britain that is not closed with the singing or playing of the national anthem. Who will begin the movement here in the United States?

OUR CINCINNATI LETTER.

CINCINNATI, O., Sept. 7, '87.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—Christleib, in his "Modern Religious Thought," quotes an old mythological story. In a public place in ancient Rome there was opened, in consequence of an earthquake, a deep chasm which no amount of rubbish could fill up. The soothsayers were consulted, and they answered that "the most precious thing in Rome must be cast into it." This was interpreted by a young hero as applying to manly energy and weapons; and, courageous to the death and fully accoutered, he sprang into the yawning abyss, which immediately closed over him. The liquor traffic in America is such a yawning chasm. Into it we pour twice as much wealth as the banks of the United States represent every year. Every six years the amount of money spent in the war of the Rebellion is thrown into it. Sixty thousand men fall into it every year and perish, as Korah, Dathan and Abiram were swallowed up when the earth opened her mouth. There is only one power that can close this pit, and that is in the hand of the King of kings. It is hopeful to see the Prohibition platforms with one accord make their appeals to him as their only hope.

The Knights of Labor made a great demonstration in this city last Monday. It is said 15,000 men were in the line of march. The Labor vote is becoming an important item in politics. The contest this fall is quadrangular.

Lane Seminary opens to-morrow with an address from Prof. E. D. Morris, D.D., chairman of the faculty; Prof. John DeWitt, D.D., will also read a paper on the first General Assembly. They expect fifty students.

The city ministers are generally back from their vacations. The Cincinnati M. E. conference has made its appointments. Drs. Joyce, Reed and Pearne and Vancleve remain; Dr. Fee goes to McKendree, and Dr. Lease to York St. Drs. Payne of Delaware, Leonard of Piqua, Bayless and Joyce of Cincinnati, were appointed delegates to the General Conference in New York next May. Dr. Leonard read the report on temperance. By his skill, manliness and courage he is making prohibition popular in that body.

The programme for the celebration of the centennial of our National Constitution in Philadelphia has been announced. The President has a conspicuous part. It will attract the attention of the whole nation. It is well for us to examine our National Charter. It is in many respects an admirable instrument. The wonder is that under their trying circumstances they did the work so well. But morally speaking it is a secular instrument. It does not contain the name of God, makes no reference to the King of kings, or the supremacy of his law. It is silent as the grave as to the higher powers. It contains provisions that are directly contrary to the Word of God. The first clause you meet with is, "We, the people." They are the highest authority, the ultimate appeal in our land. Had it read, "We, the people, in subjection to the King of kings," etc., there would have been no objection. But as it stands, it contains the germ of political atheism.

Again, the Constitution says that when the President is installed into office "he shall swear or affirm." Every President after George Washington and before R. B. Hayes, as far as known, took the oath without an appeal to God. The Bible form is clear, "Thou shalt fear the Lord thy God and shalt swear by his name." There is a clear case of violating the divine law on the part of our chief magistrate in the most solemn act he can perform; and the Constitution directs it. Is not that an open insult offered to the nation's King?

Again, the Constitution says, "No religious test shall ever be required as a qualification to any office or public trust under the United States." The intention of this provision cannot be misunderstood. "It was designed to so frame the compact of government that no irreligious man would be ineligible to office, that even an avowed and practical infidel or atheist might have no obstacle in the way of reaching the highest position in the land." Justice Story, in his Commentaries on the Constitution, describes that instrument as "a compact according to which the Christian, Jew, Mohammedan and infidel, all sit down in common at the table of our national councils." The Bible rule is, "Choose out from among you able men, such as fear God, men of truth, hating covetousness, and place such to be rulers over you." "He that ruleth over men must be just, ruling in the fear of God." "Rulers are God's ministers to thee for good." Here a distinct class of men are designated as eligible to office. They must have the talent for representing the divine ordinance of civil government; they must be loyal at heart to God; they must be good, upright, and true. But this provision in the Constitution sets aside the divine standard, and adopts another which admits the enemies of God. Is that not rebellion against God?

But still farther: "Congress shall make no laws respecting an establishment of religion, nor prohibiting the free exercise thereof." The treaty made with Tripoli about eight years after the adoption of the Constitution, and never called in question as to its constitutionality, declares: "The Government of the United States is not in any sense founded on the Christian religion; it has in itself no character of enmity against the laws, religion or tranquility of the Mussulmans." A number of New England ministers petitioned President Jefferson to proclaim a fast in view of a great calamity in 1808. He replied: "I consider the Government of the United States as interdicted by the Constitution from intermeddling with religious institutions, their doctrines, discipline or exercise." In 1858 the Sabbath laws in California were tried. Chief Justice Terry held that the enforced observance of the Christian Sabbath is a discrimination in favor of Christians, and a violation of the religious freedom of others; and that "the Legislature has no right to forbid or enjoin the lawful pursuit of a lawful occupation on one day of the week, any more than it can forbid it altogether." Judge Burnett held in the same case that "Our constitutional theory regards all religions, as such, equally entitled to protection, and all equally unentitled to any preference." In 1871 the Bible was on trial in Cincinnati. Judge Welch decided that it had no place in our public schools because "the Christian religion," or "the Bible religion is not known in the Constitution." "Neither the word 'Christianity,' 'Christian,' nor 'Bible,' is to be found in either State or National Constitution. When they speak of religion," they must mean the religion of man, and not the religion of any class of men."

Here is a powerful array of interpretation to the effect that all religions, natural, unnatural and supernatural, shall receive a like constitutional protection—a repetition of the Roman Pantheon according to the young American idea. Furthermore, "This Constitution and all the laws made in pursuance thereof shall be the supreme law of the land." In 1830 Congress ordered the mail to be carried on the Sabbath. Since that time the Fourth Commandment has been violated by "law made under pursuance of the Constitution." The Government collects $95,000,000 revenue on whisky annually, making the whole people a partner in the wicked traffic. How shall we designate such an instrument? Dr. Woolsey, ex-president of Yale College, said in the Evangelical Alliance in New York, "The Constitution would require no change to be adapted to a Mohammedan nation." The Constitution of the United States, framed by a convention, which, as Franklin says, "with three or four exceptions thought prayers unnecessary," is a compact of political atheism. Let us mend it at once.

Last Sabbath morning and evening I preached in the York Street M. E. church, and found quite enough Psalms in their hymnal to answer the purpose of worship. They relish our National Reform ideas there, for they cordially invited me to return. They gave five dollars to the cause. There is a strong and lucid article in the Century for September on the "Framers and the Framing of the Constitution," which is worth a careful reading.

J. M. FOSTER.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

The simultaneous presence in this city of such leading Democrats as Speaker Carlisle and Congressman Mills, at this dull season, has given rise to a good deal of tariff talk. Color is given to the report by the fact that the Speaker and his wife are on a prolonged visit to the President and Mrs. Cleveland at their country place. The substance of the tariff measure agreed on by the Administration is said to be a heavy reduction in custom duties, the removal of tobacco taxes, and non-interference with the general internal revenue system, as a compromise for cutting the tariff rates on the necessities of life. In this connection it is somewhat significant that the Bureau of Statistics has been called upon for figures on customs duties, to show where the most effective reductions can be made and how the revenues of the Government would be affected thereby.

An International Commission, composed of three Americans and three Englishmen, the former to be chosen by Secretary Bayard, will meet in Washington ere long to discuss the vexatious Canadian fisheries dispute, with the purpose of solving the troublesome problem of the boundary line between Canada and the United States, over which there has been a controversy about one hundred years. If this matter can be satisfactorily settled from an American standpoint, it will naturally be regarded as a great diplomatic triumph for the present Administration, which the whole country would regard with patriotic pride.

During August the Government receipts were very heavy, aggregating $35,619,115 against $32,195,326 for the same month last year—fully two millions more than in August 1886. Internal revenue and miscellaneous receipts show a corresponding excess and the disbursements a large decrease comparatively. A statement prepared by the Treasury Department shows that during the month of August there was a decrease of $737,870 in the total circulation and an increase of $10,216,200 in the total cash in the Treasury.

The Civil Service Commission is considering a plan for a more uniform classification of the Department clerks so as to include within the rules the clerks of lower grade—for instance, copyists at $600—who are not now embraced. It is the commissioner's desire to remove the indiscriminate now existing by which places in one Department are exempt from civil service rules while precisely similar positions in another Department come under the rules.

The great Medical Congress met in several sections, as one, or even two or three buildings were not large enough to accommodate the thousands of physicians in attendance from all civilized nations, and whose presence imparted an air of bustle and animation to the city at its duldest season; for, as one walks the streets of the Capital, strange, foreign faces were seen in unusually large numbers on every side. This Congress is doubtless the most interesting and important of the kind ever assembled. It adjourned to meet in Berlin in 1890. *

OUR BOSTON LETTER.

AN ADVENTURE AMONG THE SPIRITS.

The room into which we were ushered was large and dimly lighted. The lower portion of the walls, all around, were covered with stout manilla paper about six feet in width. The windows were screened with thick green material tacked to the casings. Extending around the room were two rows of chairs, nearly fifty in number, which when filled represented fifty dollars, the admission fee, as I have said, being one dollar. In one corner stood the cabinet, curtained with garnet colored cloth. Surmounting this was a funnel-shaped arrangement, the purpose of which I did not ascertain. I surmised that it might be a magic lantern contrivance.

There were only three persons in the room when we entered, two men and one young lady, who were busily engaged in frivolous conversation. The gentlemen were exceeding lavish of their attentions, which the lady seemed to highly appreciate, as she repeatedly invited them to partake of the contents of a well-filled candy bag. Judging from the sweet remarks interchanged, and the manner in which the bag was being patronized, I concluded they were having a very sweet time of it. The conduct of the girl finally became so silly that I was forced to think that she was slightly demented. Spiritualists would, probably, have ascribed the cause to the influence of spirits. One thing in particular attracted my attention, and which subsequently led me to look on the girl with suspicion—the peculiar style in which her hair was arranged.

In a short time nearly every chair was occupied, and I estimated that if there were present no "dead heads" save the spirits the concern was making money about as fast as the folks who deal out spirits from behind a bar. And one intoxicates about as much as the other.

My uncle requested me to examine the interior of the cabinet, but to his disappointment I refused, on the ground that it would really be useless, because, if there was anything to be detected, those in charge would not invite examination so willingly. I expressed this opinion aloud, and I think it had some effect. Nevertheless, he succeeded in persuading my mother to peep into it, the result, of course, supporting my argument.

By and by a pompous female waddled into the room and ordered every one out of the chairs near the cabinet and seated others in their place. I thought it a strange manoeuvre, but said nothing, thinking that possibly they might be friends, which I have no doubt they were, now.

At the appointed time the medium, one of the tallest in this city, a sanctimonious appearing, tall and slender, entered, and after pleasantly greeting a number of friends, she addressed the audience or "circle" in broken English nearly as follows:

"Lady and shentleman: I can never tell vhat vill takes place at dese seances. Much depend upon your conduct. I know dat ev'ry shentleman vill abide by de condishon, or leave de room. No vone must handle de spirit rudely, for it vill affect de medium, an' I cannot endure de strain. If all are villing to abide by dis condishon, I vill enter de cabinet and vate de result."

No one replied, pro or con, so with a low bow she entered the cabinet and the lights were turned out, with the exception of a small blaze in a lamp on an organ standing in an alcove at one end of the room. I thought that spirits must dwell in a very dark place, since they could not bear our dim, earthly light.

CORRESPONDENCE.

FROM THE MISSIONARIES IN GREECE.

DEATH OF MRS. SAKELLARIOS.

ANDROS, Greece, Via Syria, Aug. 13, 1887.

DEAR BRO. K.—I take the opportunity to let you know that our dear sister, Mrs. D. Z. Sakellarios, wife of the Baptist missionary in Athens, Greece, died about three weeks ago and left her poor husband in a desolate condition. We also feel very sorrowful, for she was to us as a mother and a good Christian woman. She loved her Master and gave her life for him. She left relatives, friends and country to come to Greece to die for Christ and his cause.

Now if her friends and her Board, the Baptist Union, which sent her out with her husband to preach Christ, wish to know what they were doing so many years in Greece, we quote from two Greek daily papers of Athens—not Protestant, but papers of the oppositionists. Their Board cut them off two years ago and left them to their fortunes.

She died with a sorrowful and broken heart, and now she is with her Saviour and her sorrows are at an end; but what a pitiful story for the Christians in America to read. A little more than two months before her death I was in Athens and spent a few days, and she was exhausted and was using severe economy in everything, and she said to me, "What shall be our condition?" I told her to trust in her Saviour. She said, "I do; but all have left us." Thus Jesus took her to himself before she was reduced to actual want.

We wrote for him to come and stay a time with us for a change and that we might give him consolation. He is to be pitied for he lost his dear companion, and he has no children and nobody to give him consolation in his great sorrow. He has decided to stay at his post, for life or death, and preach the Gospel.

A. D. ZAPAPHONTES.

The following are the translations from the Greek newspapers:

(From the New Ephemeris, Athens.)

A virtuous lady, the American Adelaide Josephine, the wife of the preacher of the Gospel, Mr. D. Z. Sakellarios, died after a fifty days' illness, and her funeral took place yesterday. Best co-operator of her most Christian husband, the deceased, having lived here about twenty-two years. She attracted the esteem, love and admiration of the families she was acquainted with and she was to them a pattern of a Christian housewife by her sensible conversation, by the excellent management of her household and by her incessant kindness to those that were in need of help. We sympathize with Mr. Sakellarios for the loss of a precious companion of his life and an excellent co-worker in his godly work. On the tomb Mr. M. Kalspethakes spoke at length and also the husband himself of the deceased.

(From the Kathemerine (the Daily Paper), Athens, of the 21st July and 2nd August.)

Solemn and imposing was the other day the funeral of the American lady, Adelaide Josephine, the wife of our fellow-citizen and for many years preacher of the Gospel here, Mr. D. Z. Sakellarios.

The deceased, belonging to a conspicuous family of Boston, a city in America, followed her husband here some twenty-two years ago, having made his country hers and proved herself a helper to the work he is engaged in. This virtuous lady for many years taught a great many young ladies the divine and sacred precepts of the Gospel, and inspired into their tender hearts those evangelical graces and godly life in Christ by which she was herself adorned and which she in all her life did practice. Being naturally of a benevolent and tender disposition she never ceased doing good without tumult or display.

When she at first came to Athens, not long after the Cretan revolution was at its highest point, then her heart was full of sympathy for the sorrows of the Cretan refugees and she caused considerable contributions to be sent them from America; besides she formed a school for the poor children of Crete and she always gave her own ready help to those that were in need of it.

Being of a sweet and gentle heart and manners the deceased was loved and honored by all those that were acquainted with her. She was enduring and hoping only in God, upon whom she waited for all things and in whom she ever found all peace and joy.

Being a true friend of Greece—because she loved Greece as her own second country—she had only one desire and she breathed only one wish, namely, to see Greece in a happy state and the Greeks living in Christian virtue and increasing to the glory of God. To this end she faithfully worked.

Mrs. Sakellarios caused also a Temperance Society to be set up among us, the members of which are obliged to abstain from intoxicating beverages and narcotic articles.

Such was the life this precious lady led and so it was she was preparing herself daily for heaven, whither she went some days ago, having left unspeakable sorrow to her friends and to her husband, to whom may God grant patience and comfort for the bitter but temporary separation from such a virtuous and precious wife.

May the tomb be light to thee, Adelaide Josephine D. Z. Sakellarios.

OUR REFORM AS POLITICAL OR RELIGIOUS.

ST. JOHNSBURY, Vt.

As to the best methods of work and the best lines of work I am not able to decide with any great satisfaction to myself. I have thought for some time that the political line was not a good one. For one thing, I do not think the political objection to secretism a very strong one; at least nothing like as strong as the distinctively Christian objection, that the lodge teaches salvation without Christ. So I have thought for some time that every objection should be dropped but that one, and that one used over and over everywhere. As it is, men catch onto the political anti-secret movement and get the impression that the only objection, or at least the great objection, we have to the lodge is a political one. Thereby, our chief arguments are lost sight of, and, moreover, our motives not recognized.

I, of course, am not as able to judge of the line best to be followed, but, as a friend to the movement, believing that it is keeping thousands from Christ, I have taken the liberty of writing these suggestions. I would like to see the work carried on in this one line, with this one object in view, to show that the lodge is claiming to do the work of the Lord in saving men.

The National Reform work is political in the lines that must be followed, and in my opinion should be left to do that particular work under that name. Then let the N. C. A. labor to open the eyes of individuals and churches in regard to this other matter. The same men, however, could labor in both departments, under the one name in this work, and under the other name in that.

W. R. LAIRD.

A CONFESSION.

LINCOLN, Kas., Sept. 2, 1887.

EDITORS CYNOSURE:—In a recent conversation with a wealthy gentleman from Denver, who had joined the Masons in Peoria, Ill., about fifteen years ago, and therefore knew whereof he affirmed, he gave his views on secret societies, as follows:

He said that he did not doubt the condition of society would be much improved if there was not a secret society in existence. He had personally known men who had become so infatuated with the lodge as to let it entirely take their attention from the church, and to a great extent from their family. The lodge injured the church by taking from it much of the benevolence and "brotherly love" that would otherwise be found where it should be, in the church; and if a man made no professions to religion, his ties to his family were stronger, or certainly should be, than any other relations that possibly could exist between man and man. Although he had occasion to travel considerably and do business with many different men, he had never found his lodge investment to pay him very big returns. He said that men usually wanted refreshments at the time their meetings usually closed, and there was nearly always wine and beer on hand. He thought if every fair-minded man, and especially those who are church members, had their experience and money back, they would not care to have it re-invested.

Secret societies have obtained a strong hold here in the West. How men can be led when appealed to through their vanity and for a purely selfish motive. A few years since, near Des Moines, Iowa, some of the young folks made an effort to establish a public library, which was quite successful. Twelve volumes from the N. C. A., (including such interesting works as "In the Coils," etc.) were donated by Mr. D. R. Mitchell, a man who has convictions and stays by them. These gave us the benefits of secret societies in all their glory. If such literature was to be circulated more extensively, there would certainly grow up within the minds of the young a strong aversion to the lodge system. I have been mailing some Cynosures to some of the lodge brethren who are members of the M. E. church, with the request that after reading they return them to their pastor, who is anti-secret. This places them on their honor to preserve them for redistribution. Surely it is only a question of time when your teachings will be universally followed. The right shall prevail. Yours for complete reform, no compromise,

BYRON HULL.

THE SABBATH QUESTION.

CHICAGO, Sept. 5, 1887.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I thought surely every reader of your paper would understand every word of my communication of July 28; but Bro. Milligan has entirely misunderstood a considerable part of that article. In his reply of August 25 he says: "I, therefore, thank my good brother that he has confirmed my argument that the first day of the week is seven times called the Sabbath in the New Testament, and that he has so honestly admitted that Pentecost was on the Christian Sabbath." Now I admitted no such thing, and the very contrary might be inferred from what I said. True, I did not say in so many words what day of the common week the first day of the Sabbath (he mia toon Sabbatoon) was in the year of the resurrection; but if the place that I assigned to the preceding weekly Sabbath was correct, that day could not have been Sunday, but must have been Tuesday; and Pentecost in that year must also have been Tuesday. Bro. Milligan's object and mine are quite different. He is discussing the "Sabbath question;" I am not. I do not write as a Seventh-day Baptist, but simply as a Bible student, trying to ascertain the meaning of a phrase of infrequent use, whose meaning, as I believe, can be ascertained only from the Scriptures. Whatever that meaning may be, the weekly Sabbath rests securely on its broad foundation, the Fourth Commandment, where it will remain "till heaven and earth pass away."

In speaking of my "attempt" to refer the phrase in question to the first day of the feast of weeks, my good brother says: "It would also argue the re-institution of the 'feast of weeks' and its continuance during the new economy." Is this really so? What about Pentecost? That feast, which is the closing up of the feast of weeks, is mentioned three times after the resurrection of Christ, and was certainly observed by the apostles and other Christians: is it re-instituted as a Christian ordinance? Be it so. What, then, about what Bro. M. calls "the Jewish Sabbath?" That Sabbath is mentioned several times in the Acts of the Apostles, and all admit that apostles and others, Jews and Gentiles, worshiped frequently on that day. I can prove that Paul met with others for public worship not less than eighty-five times on this Sabbath, after his conversion to Christianity. Is that Sabbath re-instituted as a Christian ordinance? It must be according to my brother's argument. I know that he cannot get away from this conclusion, and I believe he is too honest to attempt it. I shall, therefore, set him down from this time forth as a "Seventh-day Covenantor," and I congratulate him on his having at last found a home under the sheltering wing of God's unchangeable law.

In conclusion, permit me to state my theory—not on the Sabbath question, but in reference to the closing events of Christ's earthly life—in a nutshell.

Our Lord instituted his supper in the evening following Wednesday, the 10th of Nisan, in the year 32 A. D. This was the first day of the "Preparation of the Passover," which continued till the 14th. (Ex. 12: 3; Matt. 26: 17-19; Mark 14: 12-16; Luke 22: 7-13.) This day was commonly called "the first day of unleavened bread" (Matt. 26: 17; Mark 14: 12; Luke 22: 7); the entire festival, from the 10th to the 21st of Nisan, inclusive, being called, indifferently, the Passover, or the feast of unleavened bread. (see Mark 14: 1; Luke 22: 1.) That night, which belonged to Thursday, the 11th of Nisan, he was betrayed and arraigned before the members of the Council. (Mark 14: 53-72, and parallel passages.) Early in the morning, "as soon as it was day," the whole Council was convened, and Jesus was adjudged to be worthy of death. (Luke 22: 66-71.) Immediately afterward he was taken before Pilate. His trial before the latter, including the episode of sending him to Herod, mentioned only by Luke, chapter 23: 7-12, occupied the forenoon of this Thursday, the 11th of Nisan, which was the second day of the "Preparation of the Passover." (John 19: 14.) Just after the sixth hour (noon) Pilate delivered him to the soldiers to be crucified. (John 19: 14-16, and parallel passages.) The afternoon was spent by the soldiers in maltreating him. (Matt. 27: 27-31; Mark 15: 16-20.) The next morning, Friday, the 12th of Nisan, they led him out to Golgotha and crucified him at the third hour (9 A. M.). (Mark 15: 25 and context, with the parallel passages.) At the ninth hour (3 P. M.) he expired. (Mark 15: 34-37 and the parallel passages.) This Friday was the third day of the "Preparation of the Passover;" but it was also the "Preparation of the Sabbath," and is spoken of as such by all the evangelists. (Matt. 27: 62; Mark 15: 42; Luke 23: 54; John 19: 31, 42.) Just before the close of the day Joseph of Arimathea came and took down the body and laid it in his own new tomb. (Mark 15: 43-47 and the parallel passages.) The burial was completed just as the Sabbath drew on. (Luke 23: 54.) At some time during this weekly Sabbath, the 13th of Nisan and the fourth day of the "Preparation of the Passover," the chief priests and Pharisees sealed the stone and set the guard. (Matt. 27: 62-66.) This Sabbath day, the 13th of Nisan, was the first day that Jesus lay in the tomb. The following day, Sunday, the 14th of Nisan, the proper day of the Passover, was his second day in the tomb. On this day the women bought and prepared spices for the anointing or embalming of the body, which was to be attended to as soon as they could have access to the tomb. (Mark 16: 1; Luke 23: 56.) The next day, Monday, the 15th of Nisan, was a strict Sabbath, on which they rested, according to the commandment recorded in Leviticus 23: 7. (see Luke 23: 56.) This was his third day in the tomb. Just at the close of this day, seventy-two hours from the time of the burial, Mary the Magdalene and the other Mary came, "as it was drawing on into the first day of the Sabbath," Tuesday, the 16th of Nisan, to view the tomb. (Matt. 28: 1.) They found the tomb open, and saw the angel who had rolled away the stone sitting upon it. He announced to them the resurrection of the Lord, and gave them certain instructions. They had a short interview with Jesus. (Matt. 28: 2-10.) The next morning, the day of the wave-sheaf, the first day of the first of the seven Sabbaths of the feast of weeks (Lev. 23: 15, 16), these same women, with others, came to the tomb about sunrise bringing the spices they had prepared. (Mark 16: 2 and the parallel passages in Luke and John.) There is nothing parallel to this in Matthew. As we have plain sailing from now on it is unnecessary to pursue the narrative farther, except to say that Pentecost, in the year 32 A. D., fell on Tuesday, and that the Ascension was probably on the Sabbath.

If Bro. Milligan, or any other Bible student, wishes to understand the writings of these evangelists, he should, if possible, put himself in their place, become, as it were, a Jew with them, surround himself with their circumstances, and become penetrated with the same habits and modes of thought.

JOS. W. MORTON.

Belgium annually spends 450,000,000 francs for spirituous liquors. Throughout the kingdom there is a beer or liquor saloon to every 44 inhabitants. The amount consumed per annum is, for every person, women and children included, 12 litres of whiskey and 240 litres of beer. The number of suicides has recently increased 80 per cent, of insane 104, of criminals 141.

The Pall Mall Gazette, of Aug. 17, contained the following: "The attention of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of the United States should be turned without delay to the statement made by Lord Onslow in the House of Lords last night. Lord Onslow said that the attempt to establish an international compact prohibiting the sale of strong drink to the South Sea Islanders has broken down, owing to the refusal of the United States Government to enter into the agreement. Our government, therefore, reluctantly abandoned the attempt, but held themselves ready to renew it the moment the American government showed a disposition to remove its interdiction on a Maine law for the Pacific." Clearly this is a case in which all the temperance people in the States should be set to work at once, to bring the government at Washington to a due sense of the enormity of its attitude in the southern seas.

LETTER FROM BAVARIA.

The weather predictions are not very favorable for sketching; they say there will be only fifteen days without rain this summer! Since the first of May we have only had ten days of pleasant weather. It has interfered badly with our water color sketching lessons. The country about Munich is very level and looks very much like our fields at home; except for the houses and people I might think I was in Illinois. On clear days the Bavarian Alps are plainly to be seen covered with snow. On cloudy or rainy days they are invisible or not to be distinguished without a glass. Have I written that our little delicate harebells grow in clusters a foot high here and the flowers are frequently considerably more than an inch long? They grow in the fields of hay with the white daisies and buttercups, and you cannot imagine how beautiful they look. The scarlet poppies are just beginning to blossom out and the blue "corn-flowers," as they call our old-fashioned "bachelor's buttons." Sweet-william, is also wild in the fields, but never in such large clusters as it grows in our gardens, and rosemary is very common. There are at least twenty kinds of plants belonging to the "Leguminosae" family which I have already found, some of them lovely ones.

About two weeks ago was a great holiday here (Corpus Christi) and a procession of priests, children, young girls and schools, that lasted two hours. We started out at half past seven to see it and walked about over two hours trying to come within seeing distance of it, only succeeding at last in having a view of the banners that were carried by the priests at regular intervals. People began going at five o'clock. At seven all the sidewalks of the streets through which the procession was to pass were completely blocked. A row of small birch trees was placed on each side the street, and a double row of soldiers stood on guard all the way, which must have been over a mile. In the squares were the cavalry. Out of every window along the route hung a square of blue or red cloth. We never would have seen these things only that we attached ourselves to the crowd of old women and peasants who went counting their beads and chanting behind. We were nearly crushed to death in the crowd, but it was worth seeing.

Since the last letter I wrote Miss E—and I have made a little excursion (a two hours' trip) to the "Tegern See," a lake about the size and something similar to Crystal Lake in Benzon, Mich., except that it is surrounded by mountains instead of hills.

We made the experiment of climbing one mountain, the Gindel Alp, to get some idea of what it would be in Switzerland. We did get a good many ideas that we will not very soon forget, I think. I am glad we tried it before going further away. We started with thin shoes, long dresses and no Alp-stock, parasols and a package in a shawl-strap; but when we go again it will be with hob-nailed shoes with soles half an inch thick, short skirts and big hats and whatever we carry in a knapsack on our backs. We lost the path, too, coming down and had to find our way through a gully filled with cobble stones where they slide logs down in winter and at an angle of forty-five degrees. We came faster than by the usual path—that was one advantage.

The view from the top was beautiful. We stayed over night to see the sun rise. The accommodations on the mountain are limited; there is no one except the shepherdesses to entertain benighted travelers and they do it in a very primitive way. On this mountain were three shepherdesses. It takes the romance all out of the poetry about the "Sweet Shepherdess" to see them. I always imagined them in some kind of picturesque costume with bright colors, but the fact is their costume consists of blue overalls, such as our farmers wear, and a dilapidated basque. Such a ridiculous combination of garments I never saw, but it is not to be described.

Their houses are on a simple plaff, with cow-stable, kitchen and bedroom on the same floor. The kitchen is usually about eight feet square and the chamber smaller. One corner of the kitchen is built in with brick into the shape of a range, perhaps an oven is inside, and they build a fire on top of that for their cooking, which is done in the style of several centuries ago—in pots hung over the open fire. Where the milk is kept I did not discover. The first shepherdess we went to offered us her hay-loft to sleep in; the second ditto; but the third was prevailed upon to let us share her little room and furnished us with a bed like her own—a great box of fresh hay. Some young men who came later were obliged to occupy the hay loft; one of them felt ~~cham-~~ during the night into the cow's departure has been

It was very amusing for once, but once will last us both some time, for staying on mountain tops with shepherdesses. There were whole fields of little wild pansies and scarlet poppies in the way—and in damp places beds of the large blue forget-me-nots.

R.

AN APPEAL

SHALL WE STAND FOR

Our Christian Liberties

UNDER OUR NATIONAL AND STATE BILLS OF RIGHTS; AND FOR OUR DUTIES UNDER THE GOSPEL COMMISSION?

All Christians who desire to show their interest in the cause of religious liberty, by aiding to meet the expense incident to publishing a full, authentic, and concise history of the attempts made within the past five years to suppress the free public preaching of God's Gospel on Boston Common, are invited to send in their free-will offerings, without delay, for that object.

Let us remember, if the free public preaching of Christ can be prevented on common grounds of Boston, where the people have a right to freely assemble, by the device of a City By-law, then it can also be logically prevented anywhere on the round globe, by a copy of that device.

It is estimated that the principal facts of arrests and trials to date, including evidence in court, arguments, opinions of lawyers, judges and press, together with full text of laws and by-laws involved in this question, can be put into type at an expense not exceeding $500.

Author's work will be done freely, but the printer must be paid.

God willing, if in 15 days $400 shall have been received for accomplishing this work, postpaid copies of the book may be had 30 days later at 25 cents per copy, prepaid.

Offerings received will be promptly receipted for to the donors, and in case of donations by mail, any undue delay in the receipt of a proper acknowledgment, should be inquired into by the sender at once.

Prejudice is our worst foe in this conflict, and ignorance is his mother. But it is entirely within the power of Christians to drive back into the crumbling dungeons of old night in Spain the inquisitorial spook, which, robed in a city ordinance, has tried to scare Boston ministers at noon day in this nineteenth century, out from under the tree of Christian liberty, which our Revolutionary Fathers planted on Boston Common more than a hundred years ago.

Dear brothers and sisters of our Lord Jesus Christ, whose letters the past week have lighted up my cell in Charles-Street Jail, dry up your tears, and let the streams begin to flow from your pockets, so that we can float out upon the tide of public opinion the convincing evidence which is in our possession, that there is, and can be, no valid law against the free public preaching of God's Gospel on common lands of Boston, where the people have a right to freely assemble.

If more than the $500 needed to put the proposed book in type are contributed, every additional dollar received will be used in sending copies of the book to legislators, libraries, religious newspapers and ministers in different parts of the land.

The right settlement of this question is vital to Home and Foreign Mission Evangelization. Bro. H. L. Hastings, at 47 Cornhill, Boston, who has also been in jail and paid fines for preaching a free Gospel on Boston Common, will gladly receive, receipt for, and safely forward any free will offerings handed in at his store for this fund.

Christians everywhere who desire to make this an accomplished fact, may forward their donations, large or small, by bank draft, money order, or in postage stamps, at once, to your brother, now under $1,100 bonds for Christ's free Gospel in Boston, Wm. F. Davis, Mt. Washington, Chelsea, Mass.

AMERICAN PLATFORM.

ADOPTED AT CHICAGO, JUNE 20, 1874

1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.
2. That the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.
3. That God requires, and man needs a Sabbath.
4. We demand the prohibition of the importation, manufacture, and sale of intoxicating drinks.
5. We hold that the charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.
6. We are opposed to putting prison labor or deprecated contract labor from foreign countries in competition with free labor to benefit manufacturers, corporations or speculators.
7. We are in favor of a revision and enforcement of the laws concerning patents and inventions, for the prevention and punishment of frauds either upon inventors or the general public.
8. We hold to and will vote for woman suffrage.
9. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by Articles 13, 14 and 15 of our amended National Constitution should be preserved inviolate, and the same equality should be extended to Indians and Chinamen.
10. That international differences should be settled by arbitration.
11. That land and other monopolies should be discouraged.
12. That the general government should furnish the people with an accurate and correct survey.
13. That it should be the settled policy of the government to reduce tariffs and taxes as rapidly as the necessities of revenue and vested business interests will allow.
14. That polygamy should be immediately suppressed by law, and that the Republican party is censurable for the long neglect of its duty in respect to this evil.
15. And, finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of electoral colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice President of the United States.

The Christian Cynosure.

J. BLANCHARD.

EDITORS. HENRY L. KELLOGG.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 15, 1887.

THE APPEAL of Rev. Wm. F. Davis, in another column, will be read with interest. We refer to our last week's editorial for our views of the principles involved. The Cynosure has never endorsed the use of military titles by men, and especially by women, in the Salvation Army; though there seem to many judicious persons a preponderance of good in that eccentric movement. But preaching in Boston Common by such men as Gordon, Hastings and Davis, is not only inoffensive, but it is literal obedience to Christ to go into the "highways." Drs. Beecher, Wilson, Stowe, and the Cincinnati clergy practiced the same identical sort of preaching in Cincinnati, and no one moved a lip or lifted a finger against them. We hope Mr. Davis will be sustained, and the ordinance repealed. Moneys sent for him to Treasurer Phillips will be carefully forwarded and acknowledged.

THE GERMAN CATHOLICS (425 delegates) met last week in Chicago in their Central Verein (Union). A number of priests co-operated. They denounced "Anarchists, Socialists, and Prohibitionists," and warn all German workmen to keep away from "Knights of Labor Assemblies." A New Orleans Verein was censured for using only the English language, and despising the German. They declare that the Romish church has no nationality, but (like Masonry) is cosmopolitan, aspiring to rule the world. So while they denounce Powderly's "Knights," they are careful to say nothing disrespectful to members of a common faith, but different nationality.

The best judgment we can form of this German Catholic movement is, that it really has little significance—a sort of safety-valve to let off the surplus activity and intelligence of American Catholics who wish to hold conventions and make speeches like other Americans; and the priests join in to keep their activity from harming the church.

REV. W. R. LAIRD, president of the Vermont Association, writes Secretary Stoddard from St. Johnsbury: "I should be glad to give assistance to further the work of the N. C. A. in New England; am glad to know that the work is to be put forward in this part of the country." In 1832 Vermont gave her electoral vote solid for Wirt and Ellmaker against the lodge. The slave question then became the Aaron's serpent, swallowing all other questions; and Vermont never cast a pro-slavery vote. It is the Switzerland of America. It is a delightful region, and there are no more slave questions now, which Satan can hold up as a shield to protect his religions; and we too are glad that Secretary Stoddard is moving in that direction. This is an off year in politics, and we hope the religious aspect of the question will be pushed with vigor before 1888 is upon us. Why could not the Vermont meeting immediately precede that of New Hampshire, which is set for the last three days of October, at Manchester, N. H. We hope Solon Burroughs, Esq., of Vergennes, is by this time in active correspondence with Rev. Mr. Laird.

"AN AMERICAN COLLEGE FOR THE TRAINING UP OF PRIESTS."

Under the above heading the Chicago Herald gives at length the proceedings of the Board of the Romish university at Washington. The Board met at Cardinal Gibbons', Baltimore. A letter from the Pope was read, and the action of the trustees conformed to his instructions. The university is to be located at Washington; be "under the authority and protection of the bishops;" and the Pope says he has no doubt that "the study of the sciences" and "other branches of human learning" will "redound to the advantage of civil society."

The ignorance, superstition, and squalor which surround the Romish universities in Italy, and in all cities where they are found, throughout the world, is a universal refutation of the Pope's proposition that they have "benefited civil society." And, that a single Italian priest should be placing a university, which superstition is endowing with millions, at our national metropolis, brings forcibly to mind the saying of La Fayette, that if our free institutions fall, it will be by the hands of priests. Certainly, La Fayette had the means of knowing whereof he affirmed.

A Romish school resembles a prison. You enter the grounds through a prison wall; and the economy inside is in strict keeping with the aspect at your entrance. We asked a priest in Santa Clara College, San Jose, California, who had been there some fifty years, without salary, or any property but his bread and clothing from day to day: "Suppose your Superior should order you to leave this beautiful scene of your toils, where you have seen every building erected, and every tree and flower grow up, and go to squalid Indians on the headwaters of the Columbia River, to spend the remnant of your life?"

"I should obey at once," was his reply!

Now to put the minds of youth under faculties habituated through life to such unquestioning, unlimited obedience, is to make them, so far as they are molded by their teachers' ideas, the veriest slaves of slaves! And this would be and is the actual influence and effect of Catholic universities on the minds of their pupils but for the irrepressible forces of genius, and counter-influences from without.

And such a school is as false as it is despotic. This Washington university, says the Pope, "must remain under the authority of the bishops." Now a bishop of Rome is a priest. And since Christ, whose priesthood is perpetual, there are no priests, but counterfeiters and usurpers. The whole system is fallacy and falsehood. There is not knowledge enough in Christendom to explain the chief performance in its ritual, the meaning of the word "Mass," which is never spoken but in one of three dead tongues, the Latin, Armenian and, Greek. The system operates on its believers' minds like an extinguisher on candles. Here and there a strong spirit like Luther, and a handful more, have escaped its choke-damp, and benefited the world. But from Dollinger, and Pere Hyscinthe, down to McGlynn, all who have retained priesthood in their creed have given a momentary flash and gone out in obscure darkness—

"Or, like the snow-flake on the river,
A moment white, then gone forever!"

The only thing that ever did, can or will make head against popery and its mind-darkening methods, is the force which Luther met on Pilate's staircase, and which reached us through Nottinghamshire and Scrooby Manor; the system which rejects the inventions of men in religion as abominations to God, and fatal to men in both worlds. "Other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ," "the same yesterday, to-day, and forever!"

RELIGION AND POLITICS.

The state is religious as well as the church. "The powers that be are ordained of God." A two-thirds or three-fourths part of the Bible deals with men in their civil capacity, and so is political writing. The solemn league and covenant which gave name to the Covenanters, was a political document signed in Gray Friar's church-yard by thousands, as the parchment lay on a tomb-table. It was signed by people on their knees, some of them opening their veins and writing their names with their blood, many adding "till death." Two years after (1645) the British Parliament adopted and signed the same. This covenant was a league or bond to bind the three kingdoms together. In it, "with hands lifted up to the Most High God," they "do swear, to endeavor the extirpation of . . . superstition, . . . profaneness and whatever else shall be found contrary to sound doctrine, . . . to preserve the liberties of these kingdoms, . . . and to endeavor the discovery of evil instruments making factions or parties among the people," with much more of like effect. And they also swear "not to give ourselves to a detestable indifference or neutrality in this cause."

The things which the masses objected to and swore to extirpate were "rites and ceremonies," as the "sign of the cross," the ring in marriage, priests' robes, titles, etc., etc., which were used as substitutes for religion, and gave power and authority to those who performed those rites and ceremonies which they taught the people had saving virtue.

Now a slight glance at Masonic rituals, even such portions as are enacted in public and published to the world, will convince any Covenanter that they exceed in frivolity, turpitude, despotism, and superstition all that his fathers in their solemn league and covenant, swore to "endeavor the discovery" of those who were secretly forming such "factions and parties" among the people against the welfare, peace and liberties of the three kingdoms.

Now that Mason lodges are inaugurating "secret factions and parties" among our people, viler and more dangerous to our civil and religious liberties than those which the Covenanters swore to oppose and extirpate, is obvious to the slightest glance. One term, "popery," included all the ills against which they protested. But popery taught of the Father, Son and Holy Ghost, while lodgery sets the God of the Bible aside, and substitutes an imaginary "Grand Architect" in his place. If popery is despotism, Albert G. Mackey, a chief Masonic authority says, "The government of a Grand Lodge is completely despotic." And no tortures of the Spanish Inquisition ever excelled or could excel those which the candidate must give his sworn assent to in the penalties of the Blue Lodge. And while the murders of Pritchard, Miller, Morgan, and others which have come to light, duly attested by oaths in courts, though sufficiently horrible, lack some of the manglings and torments which Masons swear to consent to, there are numerous cases where Masons have been put out of the way, whose death no witnesses have come back to describe.

The point we make is that every Covenanter who assents to the oath of his fathers, who believes their solemn league was just, Scriptural and Christian, is by that sublime and solemn oath bound to political and religious opposition to the lodge. And we rejoice that so far as their personal views of duty permit, they are all now with us in "endeavoring to extirpate" these secret foes of God and goodness.

We have been assured by the beloved brothers Milligans and others, that propositions of reform may be submitted to the people in such shape as not to involve the points to which they object. We hope the Covenanters will aid us in formulating such propositions. The loved and learned Prof. J. W. R. Sloane said in their Philadelphia organ, the Christian Statesman, that "the platform of the American party was the best ever submitted to the American people." To us the first article is as sublime as it is simple: "We hold that ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation; and that the God of the Bible is the author of civil government." And if this be true, all the rest follows: the Sabbath, the Bible in schools, and justice and equality between men.

The enunciation of this grand, simple and obvious truth, has already cast its reflected brightness over other platforms, whose framers have not yet found courage to face the false worship of our "high places." Some of the best and bravest of the reformers kings, as Asa and some of his descendants, shrank from these dens of anti-Christ which were the national brothels and endowment houses. Though Asa degraded his own mother from being queen, because she had set up one of these shops, yet "the people still sacrificed and burnt incense in the high places." But it is said of Christ, "the idols shall be utterly abolish." And he himself has promised that every civil and religious root of upas "shall be rooted up."

M'GARIGLE, K. C. B.

The escaped boodler has come to his doom. The Chicago Masons have cast him out of their company as an oath-breaker, and now he wanders like Cain afraid that every corner conceals the avenger of Masonic oaths ready to inflict the multitudinous hackings, slashings, burnings, throat-cuttings, disembowelings, etc., etc., which he has invoked in the lodge.

It was last week intimated that such was the Masonic plan with the unfortunate runaway. The report of the preliminary investigation appears on the third page of this number. The announcement of the end of the matter is also from the Inter-Ocean as follows:

A special communication of Lincoln Park Lodge, No. 611, was held last night for the purpose of taking action on the charges of unmasonic conduct preferred against William J. McGarigle, a member of that lodge, and also to receive the report of the committee appointed to take the evidence of non-Masonic witnesses. The attendance was large, and every precaution was taken to prevent the decision arrived at being made public, even visiting brethren being informed that only members of the lodge could be admitted. The report of the committee having been read, the evidence in the case was ably presented pro and con, and after spending over three hours in the consideration of the matter, the lodge unanimously voted to expel the accused member. The decision arrived at will be communicated, under the seal of the lodge, to the Chapter of Royal Arch Masons, the Commandery of Knights Templar, and the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, of which he was a member, and they, at their next meeting, will order the communication inscribed on their minutes, and proceed to remove McGarigle's name from the roll of membership. Having been expelled by the Blue Lodge, he, by that action, ceases to be a member of all the other bodies, but each body will proceed to expel him formally to prevent the possibility of his visiting any other chapter, commandery, or other body connected with the Scottish Rites.

McGarigle is, therefore, no longer "brother," "companion," "knight," or "noble." He has, however, a title founded on fact, not on lodge frippery—K. C. B., Knight of the order of the Bath. Is it not of equal honor, even in his case, with the pompous, mouthing titles of the lodge?

But for what is this poor fellow cut off, he has been friend to speak for him? Unmasonic conduct. But what the specific crime? It was not treason against the state, for Mackey, Past General Grand High Priest, says: "Treason and Rebellion also, because they are altogether political offenses, cannot be inquired into by a lodge; and although a Mason may be convicted of either of these acts in the courts of his country, he cannot be Masonically punished; and notwithstanding his treason or rebellion his relation to the lodge, to use the language of the old Charges, remains indefeasible." And the Royal Arch oath puts murder along with treason, as a crime which may be vindicated.

Was it for boodlerism, conspiracy, robbery? That was the verdict of the civil court. But there are Varnell and others of the gang also condemned. The lodge does not try them; it even in the G. A. R. is making every effort to release McLaughry. But we have it in the Evening Mail report that "charges of violating his Knightly word to Sheriff Matson" were first brought up, and that fact of his leaving his "brother" Matson in the lurch was the real crime for which he is expelled.

But see what encouragement Sir Knight Grinnell, prosecuting attorney, and Sir Knight Matson, sheriff, gave him. The first sent for him to meet him at club rooms, and at his home miles from the jail for long conferences. It was as if he had said in so many words, "Why don't you run? The Sheriff sent the boodler with a single deputy to see his family often, and sometimes for hours. It was a notice to run. Finally, after so many invitations, he accepted them. Was he followed? The question suggests the most ridiculous chase ever published. McGarigle is—no one knows where—and Matson, Grinnell & Co. care little where. The last is that he is in Switzerland. If he is to suffer Masonic penalty, why do not these officials share the dreadful fate? Possibly when the matter is reported to the Grand Lodge this will all be plain. Masons are apt to have such tricks all cleared up. We shall see.

THE N. C. A. FOREIGN FUND.

How many are saving up their Lord's portion to answer the calls for tracts and books for foreign distribution? Shall brethren in India and Africa ask in vain for this little help? Read this letter from Bro. J. A. Cole from the Michigan Conference, which was meeting last week at Rives Junction:

"I am here travelling through the Wesleyan Conferences in the interest of the African Mission. The Lord has been with me in my feeble effort, and I am succeeding in collecting some funds. I received yesterday a letter from Bro. Case, the anti-secret worker in Sierra Leone, stating that the anti-secret tracts that I forwarded him while in Chicago have been distributed amongst some of the ministers and intelligent classes in Freetown, and that many applied for them in vain as they were all distributed. He wishes me to appeal to the friends of reform for some more tracts, and believes that they will do much in weakening the power of the beast, whose temple is about to be set up by professedly Christians in Sierra Leone. I will plead very earnestly that you kindly forward him a good number of tracts and testimonials. Africa is in need of them. They will strengthen the hands of those who, even in that Dark Continent, have determined not to serve the god nor worship the golden image which Christian nations have set up against Christ."

—Bro. E. Hanson, noticed in the Minnesota call, is a devoted friend of the reform and will do every thing possible for the success of the meeting. He sends for tracts and other documents for distribution.

—Secretary Stoddard started Friday with his own horse and carriage for a two-weeks' trip lecturing in northern Illinois. Mrs. Stoddard is with him, and there will be some good reports ready for our next paper.

—Bro. M. N. Butler experienced some check from rain storms last week, but filled a number of appointments with satisfaction to the people. At Milton Junction he found Rev. N. Wardner, who heartily co-operated with him. The State meeting will be held in Milton, and there Bro. Arnold will pitch his tent right away after the Belvidere meeting.

—Bro. W. O. Dinius of Morenci, Mich., is in earnest about the State convention, and wishes to correspond with the State secretary, Rev. H. A. Day, whose address is at Williamston, as may be seen on the 7th page in the list of State Associations. It is a good time for friends in other States to look up their leaders and begin correspondence with them.

The mail on Saturday brought us the sad news of Dr. J. G. Clark of Cambridge, Indiana, a member of the Friends church, and a reformer whose heart warmed to every Christian brother, and every movement which endeavored to exalt his Saviour and Lord. He was the "Quaker-boy" of our contributors. A full notice of his life and death will be published soon.

—The late New York State convention of the Prohibition party in Syracuse, is accounted one of the most enthusiastic meetings of the kind ever held. While the letters of Prof. Hopkins of the literary bureau of the party are very laudatory of Finch and his Good Templars, we are happy to note there was the counteracting influence of seven or eight Wesleyan pastors, who were doubtless accompanied by many others from that church. The prayers of these brethren are worth infinitely more than the grips, winks and eloquence of Finch.

—The Home Circle page will interest many of our readers this week. Probably all will not agree with the sentiment of the selections, but perhaps there will be an approval in proportion to the musical culture of the reader, and the depth and strength of devotional feeling. It would have been a pleasure to add an article on the chanting of the Psalms as a praise service in divine worship. There is no sacred music like it for strengthening the character and inspiring a deep devotion in the heart. The efforts of Rev. George Warrington of Birmingham, Iowa, editor and publisher of the Palm Singer, in this direction are most commendable, and we hope will be as successful.

—The editor of the American annihilated the lodges of Washington, we hope, before making in his last issue an assault on the N. C. A., and nearly every one connected with that body, personally or in general. It is to be regretted that the personal interests of any one person, whoever he may be, are of such supreme importance as to demand an attempted ruin of a movement. The copies of the American containing this unwarranted attack reached our office Monday, nearly a week after publication, and five days later than usual, so, as we are ready to go to press, reply or explanation must be postponed. The action of the Board which gives occasion for this unfortunate article was taken August 10th, and a brief report of its action appeared in the Cynosure of the 18th. This gave Bro. Bailey time enough to have inquired into a number of matters in which he sadly misrepresents those who have endeavored to labor with him against the lodge. Take one or two items, from which the reliability of all his charges may be judged. "The Cynosure has four men with salaries aggregating $4,800 to look after its interests." It might as truly have been said four hundred men with $480,000 salary. The present salaries paid on account of the Cynosure cost the N. C. A. about $1,800 for clerks and editors. The Treasurer and General Agent have the same work and pay as when Mr. Cook owned the paper, the former assuming the duties of publisher without extra expense. Bro. Bailey says he went to Washington with the understanding that he was to receive the income of the Washington building. If there was such an understanding it was based on a private arrangement, of which the N. C. A. knows nothing. But enough; the Board has a clear record, which will settle all questions now badly mixed up in Washington.

REFORM NEWS.

THE AMENDMENT CAMPAIGN IN TENNESSEE.

Prohibition moving strong in the hill country.—The colored vote.—The exemplary Brethren.—All around Christian reformers.—The Butler bribery.

JONESBORO, Tenn., Sept. 5, 1887.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—The campaign in East Tennessee, for the Prohibition amendment, is well under way. The good men and women are with great unanimity and earnestness advocating the suppression of the evil traffic. Meetings are being held in almost every community, and there is much able speaking for prohibition. There are very few speakers on the other side, and I have as yet seen none of their literature. But there is a mass of ignorance, prejudice and power of appetite that is hard to overcome. There is little doubt but a very considerable majority in East Tennessee will go for the amendment, but the result in the State is certainly in doubt.

On Friday night, Sept. 2, the friends of prohibition had a meeting in the court house in Jonesboro, which was addressed by Dr. Hankle, a colored physician from Johnson City. There was a fair attendance of both white and colored, and considerable enthusiasm. The address was eloquent and effective, and I hope will influence the colored vote, which is more than anything else the uncertain quantity.

After the doctor concluded, I spoke half an hour. The speakers were introduced by Rev. J. M. Hall of the colored Presbyterian church, and other pastors were present and gave the movement their sympathy.

On Saturday night I spoke to a full congregation at Uriel M. E. church (South), four miles from Jonesboro. There was much interest in the meeting, and on a vote being taken every person but one rose to express his approval of the amendment.

Sabbath morning I attended a Presbyterian church in the country and addressed the Sabbath-school. Subsequently I attended the Bethesda M. E. church and heard a good sermon and a good prohibition lecture from the pastor. However, it drove some of his people out of the house.

At 3 P. M. I preached in the Dunker church to a congregation that will endure sound doctrine on both temperance and secret societies. Of all the religious denominations in the South, none have adhered more closely to Christian principles than "The Brethren," as they call themselves. They opposed slavery and war; have steadfastly set themselves against secret societies, and are with entire unanimity in favor of the Constitutional amendment. Some of them do not vote at ordinary elections, but they will probably do so at this.

I preached Sabbath evening at the Bethesda M. E. church to a small congregation. It was rainy and muddy. I had expected to remain in the vicinity of Jonesboro but a few days, but I have already been here a week and may stay a week more. I have several appointments for prohibition lectures during the week, and am invited to speak in the Dunker church next Sabbath on secret societies.

The defection of Judge Butler will have but little effect. If the charge of bribery is sustained it will probably kill him politically. This is a strong Republican district, but the majority of Republicans, especially the more intelligent, are for the amendment. Party ties are being broken, and the independent voter is coming to the front.

ILLINOIS STATE MEETING.

The State Christian Association of Illinois will meet in convention in Belvidere, Sept. 21st and 22nd.

The place has been deliberately and wisely selected, and the occasion will be important in the highest degree. The object is "to expose, withstand and remove secret societies, Freemasons in particular, and other anti-Christian orders, to save the churches of Christ from corruption, and the administration of justice from perversion."

Let the friends of light, liberty, and equal rights rally from all parts of the State. Never has there been a time when there was a greater demand, or more encouragement to work in this cause. Come, then, dear friends, in the name of the blessed Saviour who said nothing in secret, and who by the mouth of his Apostle commanded his followers "to have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them." Come to vindicate his claims and prerogatives as the only true God and the only proper object of worship, and to testify against the infidelity, idolatry and profanity of the lodge. Come to vindicate that liberty wherewith Christ hath made his people free, and to testify against that implicit faith and blind obedience which is imposed and demanded by the lodge. In a word, come to testify to all the professing followers of Christ in Belvidere, and elsewhere, who may hear your testimony, that there can be no communion between light and darkness, and no concord between Christ and Belial. "Ye cannot drink the cup of the Lord and the cup of devils; ye cannot be partaker of the Lord's table and the table of devils."

WM. WISHART, Vice President.
HENRY L. KELLOGG, Sec'y.

HO! MINNESOTIANS!!

The "Minnesota Christian Association" will meet in convention in Minneapolis, Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, Oct. 4, 5 and 6, 1887. The church or hall will be announced later.

The convention will open Tuesday evening with an address by Rev. J. P. Stoddard, Secretary of the N. C. A. Rev. C. F. Hawley, lecturer for the Iowa Christian Association, will be present.

If any friend of the cause, man or woman, in Minnesota, Iowa, or Wisconsin, has sought to say on any phase of this great reform, he is hereby invited to be present and speak. Prepare yourselves well enough to speak briefly, and report to the undersigned at the convention.

The afternoon sessions will be devoted to these speeches, the morning sessions to business. The evening sessions will be occupied by brethren Stoddard and Hawley.

The local committee of arrangements, Bro. Elwood Hanson, says that either free or very cheap homes will be provided for all who come and report at his office, 15 Fourth Street, South.

Buy the excursion ticket to Minneapolis which the railroads are now offering at reduced rates. Come up, brethren and sisters, in the name and spirit of Christ, to do your best for the cause. E. G. PAINÉ, Pres. M. C. A.

N. B.—Will friendly pastors please announce to their congregations.

THE HOME.

TROUBLE IN THE "AMEN CORNER."

'Twas a stylish congregation, that of Theophatus Brown,
And its organ was the finest and the biggest in the town,
And the chorus, all the papers favorably commented on it,
For 'twas said each female member had a forty dollar bonnet.

Now in the "amen corner" of the church sat Brother Eyer,
Who persisted every Sabbath day in singing with the choir.
He was poor but genteel looking, and his head as snow was white,
And his old face beamed with sweetness when he sang with all his might.

His voice was cracked and broken, age had touched his vocal chords,
And nearly every Sunday he would mispronounce the words Of the hymns, and 'twas no wonder, he was old and nearly blind
And the choir a-rattling onward always left him far behind.

The chorus stormed and blustered; Brother Eyer sang too slow,
And then he used the tunes in vogue a hundred years ago.
At last the storm cloud burst, and the church was told in fine,
That the brother must stop singing or the choir would resign.

Then the pastor called together in the vestry-room one day,
Seven influential members who subscribe more than they pay,
And having asked God's guidance in a printed prayer or two,
They put their heads together to determine what to do.

They debated, thought, suggested, till at last "Dear" Brother York,

Who last year made a million on a sudden rise in pork,
Rose and moved that a committee wait at once on Brother Eyer
And proceed to rake him lively "for disturbin' of the choir."

Said he, "In that 'ere organ I've invested quite a pile,
And we'll sell it if we cannot worship in the latest style.
Our Philadelphia tenor tells me 'tis the hardest thing
To make people understand him when the brother tries to sing.

"We've got the biggest organ and the best dressed choir in town;

We pay the steepest sal'ry to our pastor, Brother Brown;
But if we must humor ignorance because it's blind and old,
If the choir's to be pestered, I will seek another fold."

Of course the motion carried, and one day a coach and four,
With the latest style of driver, rattled up to Eyer's door,
And the sleek, well-dressed committee, Brothers Sharp and York and Lamb,

As they crossed the humble portal took good care to miss the jamb.

They found the choir's great trouble sitting in his old arm chair,

And the summer's golden sunbeams lay upon his thin, white hair;

He was singing "Rock of Ages" in a cracked voice and low,
But the angels understood him—"twas all he cared to know.

Said York, "We're here, dear brother, with the vestry's approbation,

To discuss a little matter that affects the congregation;"

"And the choir, too," said Sharpy, giving Brother York a nudge;

"And the choir, too," he echoed with the greatness of a judge.

"It was the understanding, when we bargained for the chorus,
That it was to relieve us; that is, do the singing for us;
If we rupture the agreement, it is very plain, dear brother,
It will leave our congregation and be gobbled by another.

"We don't want any singing except that what we've bought;
The latest tunes are all the rage; the old ones stand for naught;
And so we have decided—are you listening, Brother Eyer!—
That you'll have to stop your singing, for it furrates the choir."

The old man slowly raised his head—a sign that he did hear,
And on his cheek the trio caught the glitter of a tear;
His feeble hands pushed back the locks, white as the silky snow,
As he answered the committee in a voice both sweet and low:

"I've sung the psalms of David nearly eighty years," said he;
They've been my staff and comfort all along life's dreary way;
I'm sorry I disturb the choir, perhaps I'm doing wrong;
But when my heart is filled with praise I can't keep back a song.

"I wonder if beyond the tide that's breaking at my feet,
In the far off heavenly temple where the Master I shall greet—
Yes, I wonder, when I try to sing the songs of God up higher,
If the angel band will church me for disturbing heaven's choir!"

A silence filled the little room; the old man bowed his head;
The carriage rattled on again; but Brother Eyer was dead!
Yes, dead! his hand had raised the veil the future hangs before us,

And the Master dear had called him to the everlasting chorus.

The choir missed him for awhile, but he was soon forgot;
A few church-goers watched the door; the old man entered not;
Far away, his voice no longer cracked, he sang his heart's desires,

Where there are no church committees and no fashionable choirs!

DO NOT SING THEM AT MY FUNERAL.—Rev. J. B.
M'Ferrin, D. D., book agent of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, died in Nashville, Tenn. He was a chaplain in the Confederate army and a very useful one. Since the war it has been said of him that "every particle of sectional and denominational bitterness had been exorcised from his heart." A few evenings before his death, after prayer by Bishop M'Tyrie, his nephew, Dr. J. P. M'Ferrin, led in singing some familiar hymns, among others Charles Wesley's,

"And let this feeble body fall,
And let it droop and die;
My soul shall quit this mournful vale,
And soar to worlds on high."

Before it was finished the venerable man became very happy, and after it was done he said, "Tell the Hymn-book Revision Committee not to rob us of our grand old hymns. Such little songs as, 'Shall we know each other there?' may be very pretty, but I don't want them sung at my funeral."

AMERICAN CHURCH-MUSIC.

Rev. Mr. Aitkin, an evangelist of the Church of England, who visited this country last year, has this to say about the music he heard in certain American churches:

"A female contralto voice murmuring inarticulate utterances, sustained by an organ accompaniment, scarcely more audible than would have been the tones of a musical snuff-box, heard at equal distance, made me aware that something was happening as I rose from my knees; I knew not what then, and I know not what now. Soon the organ put on a crescendo, and a soprano voice broke in with equally inarticulate utterances, which presently culminated in a blood-curdling shriek, a bass and a tenor by this time assisting in the performance, which lasted about five minutes, and concluded without conveying any single idea to my mind, except that I had been listening to very indifferent oper-singers, which I afterward found to be the fact."

Mr. Aitkin describes a considerable more of the same sort, and adds:

"This description may read like a caricature, but it is really a description of what one obtains in a great number of American churches to-day. I have mentioned it to relieve myself of a little indignation against an evil thing which I had thought had died a quarter of a century ago in conservative England, but which I was mortified to find in a state of full vitality in progressive America."

To this Dr. Gray, of the Chicago Interior adds:
"Mr. Aitkin's description is not in the least overdrawn. Not long since, in a certain fashionable church, at the close of the long prayer, a noise proceeded from the organ which led many to believe that one of the keys had failed to close, and the wind had been let on accidentally. But the peculiar noise increased in volume until it became the dismalist howl ever heard outside of a ship in the storm, and then a dreadful female was discovered with her mouth wide open at the rail of the organ loft.
If Jennie Geddes had been there, she would have knocked that frightful soloist creature out of that with her stool, and all the people would have said, Amen."

SONGS FOR THE CHILDREN'S WORSHIP.

In arranging lately for the review of a new hymn book for Sabbath-schools, the Advance did an excellent service in counteracting some of the vicious tendencies of the music provided for children's worship, by securing an article from Prof. W. S. B.
Mathews of this city, widely known as among the first of our American musicians as a teacher and lecturer. The portion selected below deserves a careful reading:

The rapidity with which Sunday-school hymns and tunes wear out and pall upon the ears of those who sing and hear them, would be ludicrous if it were not almost pathetic. When we turn from the beautiful and sublime conceptions of the inspired Psalmist; or from the hallowed heart-songs of such medieval writers as Bernard of Cluni, or from the modern Watts, Toplady and Wesley, to the childish triviality of current Sunday-school hymnology, the contrast is something enormous. It is not difficult to discover a reason for the evanescence of these modern hymns. All that we have to do is to reverse the question, and ask, Why should they last?
Why? indeed! The familiarity, not to say irreverence, one might almost say profanity, with which the Sunday-school muse meddles with the tenderest and deepest springs of Christian feeling, is of itself enough to render this hymnody obnoxious to every delicate and sensitive soul. Even when not open to sweeping charges of this kind, the better part of this irresponsible, volunteer crop of hymnody has the character of stony-ground growth, where the earth is shallow, the roots weak and the stock a hollow stem—the whole wanting in every element of noble persistence and beauty. All this has been so generally admitted as no longer to be worth insisting upon, except in so far as it bears upon this that follows.

The music of this current hymnody is, if possible, still more trivial, shallow, commonplace and vulgar than the words. That such necessarily would have been the case, was involved in the circumstances under which this music has been composed. For the most part, it is the production of mere amateurs —persons not versed in music, generally ignorant of and without taste for the finer elements of the art, as represented in the writings of the great masters, and at the moment of composition blindly seeking a plausible melodic vehicle for certain hop-skip-and-jump words. Taking the country as a whole, it must be apparent to every reader, upon intuitive grounds, that our new theology is far more advanced than our music. In the line of religious feeling and conceptions of God, heaven, salvation and Christian conduct, we have the benefit of a heredity representing several generations of God-fearing, Christian men and noble-hearted women.
Preachers have urged, poets rhapsodized, and dying saints have testified with such unanimity of effort, that there is no man in the church but finds his Christian way made easier by help unconsciously derived from these sources. There is a great under-current of Christian aptitude upon which our entire modern civilization, enlightenment and progress in science rest without knowing it. It is only necessary to stir the feelings deeply to bring this to the consciousness of every thoughtful observer. But in music this is not the case. Instead of the thousand years since Bernard of Cluni first sang of "Jerusalem the Golden," or the three hundred years since Luther rejoiced in God as his "Strong Castle," we have for the longest reaches of our church music, periods only equal to those which separate us from Watts and Wesley, with the added difference that the music of Mozart and Beethoven had no such heredity to appeal to and to orientate itself in relation to as the beautiful ideas of the great English hymnists already mentioned. Music, in our modern sense of it, has only lately become the universal art.

It is true that the average choir singer or leader is not repelled by the so-called music sung in our Sunday-schools. Neither was Blind Bartimeus troubled with the light before Jesus saw him. This proves only that there is yet one more individual needing conversion. But that the vulgarity is there, or at least that the music is wanting in all the nobler elements of beauty and impressiveness, is proven by the facility with which it wears itself out.

It is quite proper to say that the current manner of singing some of these hymns is one reason why they so quickly become stale and offensive. Sunday-school superintendents and many clergymen appear to think that noise and speed are the two main ingredients in acceptable praise-songs. A cornet is used "to lead," as it is called. Lead what? Is the cornet also bound for glory? It is true that the same objection lies against the organ when this, in turn, undertakes to lead. Its business is to accompany. When the music contains expression, and when the hymn is reverential and true, what we want is to think it before we sing it; and to sing it only so much as we do think it and feel it. For this end the cornet is a hindrance, and not a help, as also an organ can very well be.

The music in this book generally is nobler than that in other books which have come under the notice of the writer, although it is entirely within the same line as that of one or two previous attempts on the part of American editors. Messrs. S. Lasar and Hubert P. Main published a collection a few years ago which was almost as good as this; but it happened, unfortunately, to come to the light before the dispensation of Doane, Lowry, Phillips and Sankey had run its period. All, or nearly all, of this has clear and strong melody, and vigorous but dignified rhythm. To say this is the same thing as to say that it lacks somewhat in the ad captandum elements, which appeal to the kite-flying, ball-playing, picnic-enjoying, Sunday-school mind. For this reason it will be wise to proceed prudently in introducing these new songs. Instead of inviting the whole school to picnic upon one of these beautiful melodies without ceremony, the proper way is to provide some way of properly representing it, in order that the school as a whole may enter into the singing in the reverential spirit appropriate to an act of religious worship. To this end it would be well to provide a select choir of eight or ten good voices, girls mainly, but if there happens to be a small boy who sings well and gently, let him also be added. Then train the choir upon one or two of the hymns and tunes which strike you as being the more enjoyable. Pay particular attention to the words and to expressing the sentiment of the hymns

Then introduce one of these hymns as a treat to the school; when it has been entirely sung through, invite the school to join in repeating the last verse. This process repeated from Sunday to Sunday, and the style of performance continually criticised and modified, so as to bring it out of the character of the ordinary scramble and impart to it the tasteful spirit of good choir singing, will result after awhile in giving a body of beautiful hymns and tunes which will continually improve in the regards of those who hear and sing them, just as long as this reverential and appreciative (which is to say reasonable) style is kept up.

SING AWAY—HEAVEN IS NEAR.

Dr. John Hall believes in rehearsing beforehand our celestial songs of praise. This is his exhortation, especially to aged saints:

Have a rocking chair in some large room at the top of the house all cosy, quiet and clean, and, in some of the old familiar tunes of the village church of your childhood, sing by the hour, with an open mouth and a loud voice—not on a penny-whistle pitch—the psalms and hymns and spiritual songs of Wesley and Watts, of David or Moses.

Sing away and rock away, and don't be afraid if your neighbors do think you are a Methodist; for, if you are alive one, the angels won't be ashamed of you; but while you are singing think what the words mean, and let your heart go out in that meaning; think, too, of the many who used to sing these same songs with you, but who can sing them no more now, for their lips are still in death, and their sweet voices are hushed in the churchyard grave, to be heard no more until you join together in singing the hallelujahs of the skies.

HOME BEGINNINGS IN MUSICAL TASTE.

The being brought up in a musical atmosphere is the first prerequisite of musical culture. Some minds may reveal their musical talent later than others, but for all it is essential that they live in a place where there is "music in the air." This is the case everywhere throughout Germany and Austria, and explains why the Germans are so vastly superior to all other nations in musical taste and skill. In Berlin, for instance, hardly an hour passes without giving residents an opportunity to hear a military band marching down the street; and, besides the numerous cheap concerts and operatic performances, there are, on every pleasant evening, dozens of open-air free concerts connected with the restaurants. Young children cannot very well be taken to regular concerts where absolute silence is imperative, but at open-air concerts the music is not so ethereal and classical as to be marred by an occasional childish exclamation. The Concerts for Young People given by Theodore Thomas in New York have shown however that children of five years can observe a silence in the presence of good music which adult audiences might occasionally imitate to advantage.

Where opportunities of this kind for becoming familiar with good music are wanting, the voice and the piano in the parlor have to supply the deficiency. A mother who can sing a cradle song has a gift of amusing and soothing her child which is often superior to toys and narcotics. And if, somewhat later, she can get the child interested in simple German or Italian melodies sung or played on the piano, the germ may be laid of a taste for which the child will, when it grows up, be always grateful. Nor is it at all difficult to get children's attention for good music, provided it is sufficiently simple and melodious.

But although with good compositions and an expressive performance a child's attention may be directed to music, it seems to be a peculiarity of young folks that they much prefer playing by themselves to listening to others. Whistles and toy trumpets are too noisy and unmusical to be desirable in the house; but music boxes are harmless and entertaining to children, especially if they are allowed to wind them up themselves. Many a child's love of music is crushed in the germ because it is obliged to play stupid scales on the piano for months before anything amusing is given to it. What the child wants, and should have first of all, is a few simple tunes. If these can be taught to birds, why not to children? A piano is somewhat too complicated, and a mouth-harmonica too monotonous and unartistic, for a young child; but in any toy store may be found several musical toys on which simple melodies can be played. One of these, which is also used in orchestras, is the glass or metal harmonica, or the xylophone, on which any child may be taught to play a melody after a few trials; and it is but little time to get them interested in such a little toy which will teach them melody and rhythm, leaving harmony for a later time. Much amusement may also be provided by making a simple kind of Molian harp, which is done by fastening a long horse-hair or thin thread to two nails, and placing it, tightened, below a slightly-opened window. Whenever there is a strong draught the tones produced will run up and down a harmonic scale in a weird and fascinating way.—Henry T. Finch, in Babyhood.

TEMPERANCE.

ALCOHOL'S LATITUDES.

General Greeley, the most distinguished Arctic traveler we have among us, tells us that in high latitudes the effect of alcohol shows itself in "diminished power for work," and in "impaired resistance to cold." For this conclusion he gives facts of his own observation and those set down by previous expeditions.

Henry M. Stanley, the most distinguished African explorer of the age, in an address which we published last year, showed by case after case how deadly a thing is alcohol in the tropical country of the Congo.

If alcohol is so dangerous in the regions of extreme heat and cold, it must be that it is wholesome and invigorating in the temperate zones, if anywhere. But Dr. Cyrus Edson, Chief Inspector of Food in the Sanitary Bureau of the New York Health Department, and Dr. Willard Parker, two of the most distinguished physicians in New York City, in articles just published in the Epoch, do not recommend alcoholic drinks, but warn people against them, at least at this season of the year. Says Dr. Edson:

"The first effect of alcoholic drinks is to cause a rise in temperature. The blood vessels of the brain are congested, the heart is stimulated. The secondary effect is to lower the temperature slightly. But you never find alcohol used in moderation; people who use it invariably use it to excess. When taken to excess, nothing could be used that would produce sunstroke or heat-exhaustion quicker. Lager beer and ale open the pores and cause perspiration. These drinks are not as bad as whiskey, because alcohol is the deleterious ingredient; and of course substances that contain more of it are more deleterious."

The italics are ours. Dr. Edson is not a "temperance crank," else these italicized sentences might be passed over as a fanatical outburst. The impartial observer knows that they speak sober truth. Dr. Willard Parker puts the case against alcohol quite as strongly as Dr. Edson. He says:

"I do not believe in the use of alcohol to any great extent. The first effect is apparently cooling, but then comes the reaction, and one becomes warmer and thirstier than ever. Those who indulge freely in alcoholic drinks in extremely hot weather are tempting Providence, and are likely to be among the victims of sunstroke."

The advice of these eminent physicians to those who want to "keep cool and well in summer," is to let alcohol alone. He who drinks freely of it, remarks Dr. Parker, is "tempting Providence," and according to Dr. Edson, those who drink at all, are apt to drink to excess.

The truth is becoming more and more clearly recognized that alcohol taken as a beverage is always injurious and never helpful. If taken at all it should be taken as a medicine. Those who disobey the rules which science lays down as the result of her disinterested investigation, tempt Providence in sunstroke and a hundred other physical derangements. Common sense tells most men all this; but appetite and selfishness make them reckless.

But the physical results, bad as they are, unfortunately are not the worst. The past five weeks of the "heated term" have been shockingly fruitful of crimes of personal violence, all inspired by the free use of alcohol. A father, maddened with drink, stabs his daughter to the heart; a husband, fited for the work in the saloons, kills his wife; two drunken men attend a christening party, and life is taken and serious wounds given in the affray which follows; in a drunken frenzy a laborer stabs an old man to death and severely cuts his wife—but why attempt to summarize the reports which come under everybody's eye in the daily newspapers? Every day, every hour, the saloon sends out its patrons to do crimes that make the heart of society sick.

If alcohol has its legitimate uses in the medical and scientific departments, let it be confined to those uses. Medical and scientific testimony give it no legitimate place among the beverages. Neither in high latitudes nor low latitudes is it aught but a physical foe; and no latitudes or longitudes have yet been found where it is anything but a curse and a scourge.—Independent.

OUR VOTE IS OUR CONSCIENCE.

Christianity is an individual affair, especially when deciding moral questions by and through our political opportunities. It is at the ballot-box that we illustrate most effectively our practical Christianity. Politics may have an odor of a secular character, and we may delude ourselves with the selfish conviction that we are not to be held responsible for our personal vote as a part of our religious obligations; but when we know the awful curse the liquor traffic is to our country and our Christianity, we cannot screen ourselves behind our old party, and pretend to hold it responsible for our delinquency in this emergency. In our government every man is a sovereign, and our vote is an expression of our conscience; and when we use this method to express our choice of rulers, we are bound by the most solemn obligations we owe to our homes, our country, and to our religion, that this duty shall be performed with the most sacred regard to their best interests.

To put a stop to the crime, pauperism and misery caused by the rum traffic, is a thousand times more important than the slight gratification that may be secured by the indulgence of a vicious appetite, or the gratification of our preconceived ideas or old-party prejudices.

We are, therefore, both morally and religiously bound to express our sentiments and convictions by our vote in favor of the destruction of this awful traffic, even if we have to utter an individual protest; and this vote, and all the influence that we can bring to bear, is imperative. However small may be the minority, it must be on the right side to have an approving conscience, or be entitled to the "Well done, good and faithful servant."—Demorest's Magazine.

About one-seventh of the grain produce of Great Britain is appropriated in the manufacture of strong drink.

The young women of San Diego, Cal., have organized a Christian temperance association and will build a $15,000 hall. The association has over two hundred members.

The other day there was found lying by one side of a ditch, a pig; on the other side, a man. The pig was sober, the man drunk. The pig had a ring in his nose, the man had a ring on his finger. Some one passing by, exclaimed, "One is judged from the company he keeps." The pig arose and went away.—Youth's Companion.

What can missionaries in Africa expect to accomplish when Christian nations continue to supply whisky and rum in unlimited quantities? The statistics show that during a single year there were shipped to the west coast of Africa from Germany 7,136,236 gallons of rum; and from Great Britain, 602,328 gallons; from the United States whisky and rum to the amount of 921,412 gallons. All the churches in the three nations could not overcome the evils inclosed in these shipments.—Inter Ocean.

An old copy of the New York Tribune has been resurrected that contains the following editorial by Horace Greeley, which, viewed in the light of subsequent events, amounts to prophecy: "No practical enforcement of the license system will ever sensibly mitigate the evils of intemperance. But let the law inflexibly forbid the sale of alcoholic beverages, and every youth is thereby warned from the cradle, that those beverages are harmful and dangerous, and that in drinking them he encourages the violation of the law. It would command the respect of the antagonists."

The jubilee of a temperance society started fifty years ago by Frederick William IV. was recently celebrated in Berlin. A special effort was made to secure an audience, and about 250 persons attended the meeting in the Dom, addressed by Court-preacher Stoecker. A few weeks ago the temperance organization of the Liberal (political) party held their annual meeting. The attendance was small and the exercises consisted chiefly of the reports of dry statistics. The membership is only a few hundred. Temperance here of course does not mean total abstinence, but moderate drinking. The various organizations are at least doing something to call attention to the great evils produced by excessive drinking, and the conviction is growing that effective measures should be adopted to check the progress of the plague. Maybach, Prussian Minister of the Interior, has been prevailed on to direct the railroad authorities to encourage the sale of coffee and to suppress that of poor liquor in the stations, and to aid as far as practicable the aim of the German Temperance Society. This is a national organization and is manifesting considerable activity.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—The Disciple church has now in employ or engagement 43 male and female missionaries. Of these 7 are in England, 2 in Denmark, 12 in Turkey and Asia Minor among the Armenians, all natives, 8 in India, 7 in Japan and 3 in China, with 4 commissioned for the same country.

—Rev. C. E. Walker of Grey Eagle, Minnesota, one of the correspondents of this paper, has received a call from the First Congregational church of Junction City, Kansas. If he shall leave the United Brethren, with whom he has held his connection, it will be another evidence that the policy of the Day-ton leaders is driving that body to wreck.

—Mrs. Frank Rand, who, with her husband, has been engaged in the missionary work in the Penape Islands for thirteen years, arrived at Carthage, Ill., lately, on route to Boston, to lay before the American Board of Foreign Missions the true state of affairs in Penape under Spanish rule. The Spaniards have taken the Caroline Islands and have seen fit to nullify all missionary work.

—If the 10,000,000 church members in the United States would pay each week the price of a glass of beer (five cents) to mission and temperance work, we would have an income of $26,000,000 a year.—Temperance Annals.

—There are one or two hopeful mission schools among the Chinese in Denver. Mr. Pettit, a successful young real estate dealer and mine owner, is deeply interested in the Presbyterian school. He is a graduate of Ann Arbor, and speaks with intelligence and enthusiasm of his pupils. The Chinaman, he says, eagerly receives instruction, and when he accepts Christianity becomes a useful and peaceable member of community,—surpassing in estimable qualities, in his judgment, all other foreigners of whatever nation.

—The Jerry McAuley Mission in Water Street, New York, is now under the charge of Mr. S. H. Hadley; the former superintendent, Mr. Shorey, being now engaged in evangelistic work in the South. Mr. Hadley is a convert from the Cremona Mission in Thirty-second Street. Four years ago no man seemed more unlikely than he to undertake mission work, but entering the Cremona Mission one night, as it seemed by chance, he was led to Christ, and became earnestly desirous to labor for him. Mr. Hadley has been rendering assistance at various missions since that time, and now enters on this hallowed sphere of Jerry McAuley's early labor with the best wishes and prayers of the Christian community.—Etc.

—The Moravian says: "When, a few Sabbaths ago, Dr. Howard Crosby celebrated his sixty-first birthday, as noted in our last number, and took up a collection of $2,100 for this Board (Home Missions), we could not but think it was a good thing for a man to be sixty-one years old once in his lifetime. But the people of our brother, Rev. Arthur T. Pierson, D. D., of Philadelphia, finding out he was fifty years old a few days ago, resolved that it should not be 'the dead line of fifty,' and celebrated his jubilee right loyally, and among other things, ten of his young people gave each $25 a year to keep a home missionary in the field, to be credited to the pastor's jubilee fund. We do not know to what proportions this may grow. We would not wonder if they should add one or two more home missionaries to the list. How can a man of fifty grow old under such treatment as that?"

—The Swedish Professor Schwerin, who has lately returned from a two-years' sojourn in Africa, during which he has traversed almost the entire Congo region, reports that before the completion of the Congo railroad, colonization cannot be successfully accomplished. The agents of the State never think of penetrating into the interior and familiarizing themselves with its resources.

—Portugal, like Spain, is Roman Catholic; but it is not entirely barred to Gospel influences. In Lisbon four evangelists are laboring under the leadership of Canon Pope of the Episcopal church. The Scotch kirk has in Senor Carvalho an active agent in the capital and neighborhood. The Methodist evangelist, Ventura, has his headquarters at Oporto.

—Melbourne, Australia, has a population of 350,000; of these 113,000 attend church on the Sabbath. The Church of England leads in number, the Presbyterians are next, then the Wesleyans, and fourth the Catholics.

—The Friends of England report a slight increase in membership the past year. In Madagascar it appears that there are now 33,000 adherents of the Friends' Mission, of whom 19,500 assemble every Lord's Day in places of worship.

—September 9 Chaplain C. C. McCabe, secretary of the Board of Missions of the Methodist Episcopal church, received in behalf of the board the largest private donation ever made to that body, or for missions in the history of the church. The gift consists of property in Warsaw, Ind., valued at $130,000, and the donors are Elijah Hayes and wife. The property comprises their entire possessions. Mr. Hayes asked only an annuity of $500, which, however, was made $1,000. The deed provides that the board shall have for fifty years the rents and profits of the property, and at the end of that time it shall be at the disposal of the board. Mr. and Mrs. Hayes are aged and have no heirs.

—At this time, 870,000 adult converts from the heathen world are in full communion with the church of Christ, as the result of Protestant missionary labor. These, with their families and dependents from Christian communities, are scattered over nearly every portion of the habitable globe, numbering in the aggregate at least 2,800,000 souls. The children of these converts, with a large number of the children of the heathen, are receiving secular and religious instruction in day schools.

—There are 672 colored preachers in the city of Raleigh, North Carolina.

—On the 15th of July, 1883, the nine hundredth anniversary of the introduction of Christianity will be celebrated in Russia. Preparations are being made on a grand scale in the city of Kieff, where Russians were first baptized. A great monumental cathedral is being erected and will be completed in time for the centennial.

—The two missionaries, Bach and Hoffmann, sent out by the Bavarian Lutheran Missionary Society to East Africa, reached their destination in September, 1886. They founded a station among the Wakamba, at a place called Jimboni or Jimba, where they appear to have been well received by the natives.

—The General Council of the Evangelical Lutheran church in the United States and Canada convened at Greenville, Pa., last Thursday. The Swedish Augustana Synod belongs to this body of the Lutheran church. Some of the most prominent members are: Drs. Joseph Seiss, B. M. Schmucker, A. Spaeth, and H. E. Jacobs, of Philadelphia; Dr. T. E. Seip, of Muhlenburg, Pa.; Dr. E. F. Moltke, of New York; Dr. R. F. Weidner, of Rock Island, Ill.; Dr. William Passavant, of Pittsburg, Pa.; Revs. J. Brezling of Canada, E. Norrell of Minnesota, and G. W. Meehling Lancaster, Pa. The Council represents nine synods, with two in advisory relations, 993 ministers, 1,835 congregations, and 258,408 communicant members. It is also in more or less intimate communication with all the branches of the Lutheran church in America, which ranks fourth in numbers of all Protestant denominations. The General Council was organized just twenty years ago. It supports about half of the twenty-six Lutheran colleges in the United States and four theological seminaries. It embraces five languages, English, German, Norwegian, Swedish and Danish. The home mission work extends from Nova Scotia to Texas, and from the Atlantic to the Pacific. Its foreign mission work is mostly in India. Friday the Council adopted a new form of marriage ceremony, being that in use in the 16th century. Rev. Mr. Weir addressed the Council in behalf of the National Reform Association.

LITERATURE.

"THE TRIUMPH OF LIFE." A Biblical study of God's way with our race. By Rev. Thos. S. Potwin. Pp. 193. Price 50c. John B. Alden, New York.

This is a work full of independent thought and ripe scholarship by a Congregational clergyman of Hartford, Connecticut; but its learning and logic are expended in maintaining the doctrine of conditional immortality, or annihilation of the wicked. The author finds the very plain and unequivocal teachings of the New Testament difficult of explanation. His argument is labored and lacks much of that convincing perspicuity by which so important a doctrine should be decided. We should not say, however, that the book does not contain excellent passages, as in the first chapter, where the penalty pronounced upon Adam for his disobedience was visited upon him: "What now took place upon him? It had been said to him: 'In the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die.' Did he die in that day? We think he did. If the death of the body merely was meant, Adam had a very long reprieve. But that he regarded himself as reprieved, or that God so regarded him, we have no evidence. He lost his oneness with the life-giving God. The spirit that breathed into him of God dissevered itself from its author and had gone forth of itself in a way of its own. The finite had let go its hold of the Infinite, and was in a way left to itself. In this was the beginning of all death. It was, therefore, death. All subsequent death was but the unfolding of that fatal change." But we must not judge the work wholly from brief selections. Its whole purpose is the establishment of a theory which must unsettle faith and confirm the worldling in his purpose to have his good things while he can. Elder J. L. Barlow some time since projected a volume in reply to this theory, but we have not learned of its publication. He would give the world an able argument.

ROBERT L. HARRIS IN AMERICA AND AFRICA. By Robert L. Harris. Printed for the author by Regan & Co.

Robert L. Harris was a young Texas rough, the son of a distiller, who learned early to drink and gamble. He tells the story of his struggles toward Christ, his conversion and early efforts as a preacher. He was at length led to turn toward Africa as a mission field, and his appeals to the Free Methodist churches inclined several to follow him. Miss Lizzie Cox, for a time a compositor in the Cynosure office, was one of the number. Miss Eunice Knapp, formerly an assistant of Mrs. Mumford in the Faith Mission at Philippopolis, Bulgaria, was another; and a young widow, Mrs. Torrence, the third. They landed in Liberia and began meetings in the churches of Monrovia with some success. Miss Knapp died in a few weeks, and Mr. Harris, after journeying about among the natives, returned to this country for other workers. He raised some hundreds of dollars for the mission, and returned in the fall of 1886. He finds much encouragement from Christian workers already on the ground. His theory of missions is good—self-support, and expecting immediate as well as remote results. This volume tells of the mission and his personal sketches of those engaged in it. The goodness of the cause will doubtless bring a measure of success to a work carried on evidently with much infirmity of the flesh. Mr. Harris appears in this account to be a young man of much ability and faith, but of an erratic nature, who will find it his greatest cross to stop long in a single place, maintaining a steady work for the evangelizing of any people.

"THE NEEDS OF AFRICA AND FAILURES OF FALSE Christianity" is the address of Bro. J. Augustus Cole, of the Egba tribe, West Africa, who has been eloquently pleading with his colored brethren of this country for several months to forsake their pagan lodges and fully accept the Lord Jesus Christ. This is the address which he gave before the General Assembly of the United Presbyterian church in Philadelphia, which aroused so much interest, and which he was urged to publish.

"RUM, ROMANISM, AND REBELLION" is a 72-page pamphlet by the French ex-priest, Rev. P. A. Seguin, in which he has combined several of his lectures upon the mother of spiritual harlots and abominations of the earth. The lectures comprise such topics as, "The Political Platform of the Romish church," "My Conversion from Romanism," "Is the Church of Rome Christian or Pagan?" The pamphlet shows lack of consecutive arrangement, and the bristling facts and earnest arguments lose something of their force thereby, but on the whole it is a book of much interest and power. The work is published by pastor Seguin at 271 West Taylor street, Chicago.

The illustrated papers of greatest interest in the current Century are two by John G. Nicolay, marshal of the Supreme Court, and by Frank Stockton on Thomas Jefferson and his home—Monticello. A fine copy of Gilbert Stuart's portrait of Jefferson, forms the frontispiece. The illustrations of these papers are by Harry Penn, and show with much completeness the interesting and curious features of the home that Jefferson designed for himself, as well as the University of Virginia, near by, in Charlottesville, also planned by Jefferson. The Lincoln History reaches a subject of special current interest, namely, Lincoln's nomination and election; the special topics being the two Baltimore conventions which nominated Douglas and Johnson and Bell and Everett respectively, the Chicago convention which nominated Lincoln, and the campaign which followed; after which comes a chapter on "The Beginnings of the Rebellion." In Professor Atwater's series on "The Chemistry of Food and Nutrition," we have the fourth paper, dealing with the much discussed question of "The Digestibility of Food," giving the results of the writer's experiments, as well as a summary of the latest scientific knowledge on this point. The subject of the present installment of the War Series is "The Siege of Petersburg," including four short untechnical papers fully illustrated, and presenting the two chief events of the siege.

Words and Weapons is a casket with many treasures from the pen of Dr. Pentecost. Other contributors also are excellent. It is a magazine for all real Christians, for all such are "workers."

A paper that will interest boys in the St. Nicholas magazine is the article on "Christ's Hospital," the famous "Blue-coat School" of London,—where the scholars never wear hats, dress very nearly as the boys of Canada when the school was founded, hundreds of years has been and have many quaint and curious customs. This school was founded for poor boys, but has become very aristocratic. "The Boyhood of William Dean Howells" is pleasantly treated by William H. Kiding, editor of the Youths' Companion, and will carry encouragement to many young literary aspirants; General Adam Badeau writes comprehensively of the "Battle of Gettysburg;" while George J. Manson shows the young man who is "Ready for Business," and wishes to become a "sea captain," the bright and seamy sides of a sailor's life and the best and safest way of accomplishing his ambition. He especially gives good advice and warning to boys who are inclined to run away to sea.

Vick's Monthly opens its September number with notes on the heat and dry weather of the past season, and has much good advice for the month bearing upon the weather difficulties. But Vick's cannot dwell long upon unpleasant themes, and the pages are full of notes of the flowers, the charmers of window and lawn.

The Farm, Field and Stockman, of Chicago, which, by the way, is one of the best and most reliable agricultural papers which comes to our exchange table, appears this week in an entire new dress, including a new heading. Typographically, as well as in the character of its contents, this journal is in the front rank. For several years the publishers of this paper have been engaged in the useful enterprise of collecting new and improved varieties of grain, vegetables, flowers, etc., and sending out the seed free to its readers for further trial and introduction, each yearly subscriber receiving twenty packets free. If any of our readers want a good, live, agricultural paper, we advise them to send to the publishers as above for a sample copy.

LODGE NOTES.

The composers employed by Gies & Co., Buffalo, N. Y., yesterday struck because a female compositor from New York had been given a case in the office.

A recent issue of a Michigan Labor paper said there were 50,000 Knights in that State, and that 45,000 never heard their platform read, 35,000 do not believe in its propositions, and 33,000 vote against it.

The order of America Firemen, which has lately been organized at New York, has adopted a constitution which restricts the membership to white men. The color line was drawn, it is said, in order to meet the wishes of firemen from the "new South."

The thirty second annual session of the Wisconsin Grand Lodge of Good Templars met in Madison last week. The secretary's report shows a gain of only fourteen members and two lodges for a year. The membership is 12,843, and the number of lodges is 379.

The United Clerks assembly 1,757 K. of L. of this city, raised the question of dealing with Knights of Labor clerks in the different lines of trade. After an animated discussion the members decided to deal with or buy goods of no clerks who did not wear the K. of L. button or emblem of the order.

District Assembly 49, Knights of Labor, at its last meeting voted on the question of giving financial and moral support to the condemned Chicago Anarchists. By a majority of but seven or eight votes it was carried. The resolution of support was introduced by Thomas B. McGuire, of the Home Club. The action of the District Assembly, it is said, is liable to cause its suspension, as it is in direct opposition to the orders of Grand Master Workman Powderly.

One of the Knights of Pythias who went to Canada to attend the national convocation of his order died there from excessive drinking. Such lodge gatherings as the G. A. R. meeting in San Francisco, the Knights of Pythias in Toronto, the Odd fellows in Boston and the Knights Templar and Freemasons in St. Louis are generally occasions of great drunkenness and revelry. It is hard to imagine that any Christian man could consent to be a part of such conclaves.—Christian Conservator.

The committee of Medinah Temple, Chicago, for the Mystic Shrine, is making plans for the great meeting of the 23rd. The meeting is expected to surpass any previous gathering of the order in this city or elsewhere, fully 600 being expected. Temples from Detroit, Grand Rapids, Louisville, St. Paul, and Minneapolis will be present, their members being escorted from the trains to the Grand Pacific by the drill corps of Medinah Temple in full Arab costume. There will be 100 candidates, the ceremonies being held in the First Regiment Armory, and a banquet will occur at the same place in the evening. Mayor Roche will preside. He is a member of this outlandish order, and it is no credit to the good sense which he is supposed to possess, nor to his honor as a man or citizen.

BIRNEY.

The sketch of JAMES G. BIRNEY, candidate of the Liberty Party for President, in pamphlet for 25 cents. A limited number of copies of this handsome pamphlet for sale at the N. C. A. office

PERSECUTION

By the Roman Catholic Church.

A Moral Mystery how any Friend of Religious Liberty could Consent to "Hand over Ireland to Farnellite Rule."

By Rev. John Lee, A. M., B. D.

General Vincent Wolady: "An interesting," Chicago Inter-Ocean: "A searching review," Chattanooga Advocate: "An avalanche of argument."

Christian Cynosure: "It deserves a wide circulation at the present time." Bishop Coxe, Protestant Episcopal, of Western New York: "Most useful publication; a logical sequel to 'Our Country,' by Josiah Strong."

Rev. C. C. McCabe, D. D.: "It is a useful book and ought to have a wide sale. You are dealing with a question which will soon dominate every other in American politics. The Assault of Nations is in our midst and is approaching the Temple of Liberty with stealthy tread. The people of this country will understand the Belfast frenzy some day better than they do now."

The Right Hon. Lord Robert Montague: "I have read it with the greatest pleasure, and with amazement at the intimate acquaintance with the acts of Romanism in our midst which you have evinced. I only wish that, instead of publishing your pamphlet in Chilton, you had sown it broadcast over England, Scotland and Ireland."

The Christian's Secret

A Happy Life.

28th THOUSAND.

Baptist Commendation.

"We are delighted with this book. It reaches to the very core of Christian experience, and is eminently experimental in its teachings. It meets the doubts and difficulties of conscientious seekers after the bread and water of life, but whose efforts result only in alternate failure and victory. The author, without claiming to be a theologian, sends out the results of a happy and rich experience to help others into a happy Christian life."—Baptist Weekly.

Presbyterian Endorsement.

"The book is so truly and reverentially devoted to its spirit that it demands criticism. It contains so much that is sound and practical, so much that, if heeded, would change the theological views of anyone. The author has a rich experience, and tells in a plain and delightful manner."—Christian Advocate.

Methodist Word of Praise.

"We have not for years read a book with more depth and profit. It is not a theological book. No effort is made to change the theological views of anyone. The author has a rich experience, and tells in a plain and delightful manner."—Christian Advocate.

United Brethren's Approval.

"We have seldom met with a more interesting volume, abounding throughout with apt illustrations; we have failed to find a dry line from title-page to end."—Religious Telescope.

Congregational Comment.

"It contains much clear, pungent reasoning and interesting incident. It is a practical and experimental lesson taught out of God's word and is a work of universal circulation."—Church Union.

The Tiger and His Den.

Cups of Flame.

The Scarlet Sin.

Embezzlement.

The Devil's Printing Press.

Etc., Etc., Etc., Etc.

A book that is sensational, not from excited rhetoric and figures of speech, but from the facts that flow like melted lava from the pen of the writer. It is a book of timely warnings, where sin and crime are shown of their mark, robbed of the glamour with which they have been surrounded by the purulent literature of the day and related to the real life of the true right, not as a life that, though wicked, has its terrors, but as a thing of death now and in future life to be abhorred.—WESTERN CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

The Master's Carpet

BY

F. Ronayne.

Past Master of Keystone Lodge No. 634

Chicago.

Explains the true source and meaning of every ceremony and symbol of the Lodge, thus showing the principles on which the order is founded. By a careful perusal of this work, a more thorough knowledge of the principles of the order can be obtained than by attending the Lodge for years. Every Mason, every person contemplating becoming a member, and every one who is indifferent on the subject, should procure and carefully read this work. An appendix is added of 32 pages, embodying which gives every sign, grip and ceremony of the Lodge together with a brief explanation of each. The work contains 422 pages and is substantial and elegantly bound in cloth. Price, 75 cents.

Freemasonry at a Glance,

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MOR-

GAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canadian gaol, his subsequent conveyance by Freemasons to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his name to the letter, but attaches his affidavit to it.

In closing his letter he writes: "I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the 'And-Masonic excitement' by a sincere desire, first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influence of 'secret societies'."

The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. (Chicago) Nations Christian Association. Single copies, 6 cents.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

CHICAGO.

Three indictments were found against Dr. St. John, two for conspiracy and one for perjury in the McGargile case, and two for conspiracy against Levi Dell. After spending at hour in the jail, the prisoners were bailed out.

The Inter-State Exposition made an unusually successful opening on Tuesday evening. The increase of attendance promises to continue.

COUNTRY.

Great distress from drought is reported to exist in Frio county, Texas. The people in the rural districts have been reduced to a state of absolute poverty bordering on starvation. So pressing is the need for help that the Farmers' Alliance of Frio has issued an appeal asking that contributions of corn and breadstuffs be sent for distribution to the sufferers.

The steel stern-post and stem of the new government cruiser now being built at San Francisco have been cast. The stem weighs 16,000 pounds, and is said to be the largest casting ever made in America.

At Harrisburg, Pa., representatives of ninety brewing firms met, effected a State organization, denounced the high license as a blow at personal liberty, and demanded the repeal by the next Legislature of all arbitrary and obnoxious laws, and the passage of an honest and equitable license law.

Delegates from about sixty labor and political organizations of socialistic tendencies met in New York, Thursday, and formed a new political party in opposition to Henry George. It is to be known as the Progressive Labor party.

The explosion of a threshing engine caused a fire on the farm of Thomas Bowen's, seven miles from Adrian, Mich., Wednesday night, that swept away barns, out-buildings and contents, crops, implements, etc. Loss, $5,000. Insured in the Farmer's Mutual.

Cardinal Gibbons gives as his reason for not handing the excuses of Dr. McGlynn for not going to Rome to Cardinal Senilioni, that he was not the intermediate between Dr. McGlynn and his Archbishop. Yet he admits he was requested by the Pope to see Dr. McGlynn to come to Rome.

Near Afton, Iowa, Wednesday, the Creston express train on the Kansas City, St. Joseph and Council Bluffs Road ran into a local passenger train, and five persons were instantly killed. Others were wounded.

Seven out of nine Missouri counties Wednesday voted in favor of local option. There are now thirty pronounced prohibition counties in that State.

Thirteen business houses, 30 residences, the Nepanee & Quebec Railway station, and the Mechanics' Institute at Newburg, Ontario, were burned Wednesday. The loss is $250,000. One man was burned in such a manner that he cannot live.

Wind and rain storms of extraordinary violence swept portions of New York and Massachusetts Wednesday, destroying crops and trees, unroofing houses, and blowing down barns, etc. A man at Worcester was dashed against a barrel and killed. Several persons were partially paralyzed by lightning. Hailstones of a great size fell at Saratoga.

The vein of salt struck yesterday in the well of the Ellsworth Mining Company at Ellsworth, Kas., at a depth of 730 feet, has now reached a thickness of 155 feet, and the bottom not yet reached. It is pure rock salt, and is claimed to be the thickest vein in the world.

Alpheus Austin's family at Janesville, Wis., had a narrow escape from death by burning late Thursday night. A tramp set fire to the residence, and the flames had such a start when discovered that the inmates of the house had to get out by the roof.

A disaster occurred on the Kansas City, St. Joe & Council Bluffs Road near Afton, Ia., by which four persons were killed and twenty wounded. The freight was standing on the main line, and the local passenger train was run into by the Creston express which was making about thirty-five miles per hour.

The schooner Niagara, of the Australasia tow, broke the tow line, eleven miles from Whitefish Point, in Wednesday's terrible storm on Lake Michigan, and foundered with all hands, thirteen in number.

The banks of the new aqueduct at North Yonkers, N. Y., caved in Friday and buried three men under 120 feet of earth. The bodies have not yet been dug out.

A threshing machine engine at Spring Garden, Ill., blew up and instantly killed two men. One was fatally wounded and another severely hurt.

FOREIGN.

A true bill was found by the Montreal Grand Jury Thursday against William J. McGargile, William Allan Pinkerton, and Michael Hickey, who, on four counts, are charged with conspiracy against James Baxter. A warrant was sworn out for the arrest of McGargile and given into the hands of a detective, who has gone to find the knight of the bath-tub.

Dr. Kane, Grand Master of the order of Orangemen, recently wrote to Mr. Gladstone, asking him to state whether in his future proposals for home rule, representatives of Ireland as an integral part of the United Kingdom would be retained in the imperial Parliament. To this Mr. Gladstone has replied that the subject of the exclusion of the Irish members from the imperial Parliament is not involved in the question of home rule for Ireland.

The Manitoba Railway Extension reached Fort Assiniboine Station at sundown Thursday, the garrison and Twentieth Regiment turning out and welcoming the track-layers. The Manitobans are confident that they will succeed with their connection with the Northern Pacific.

Editor William O'Brien, not appearing at Mitcheltown, Ireland, Friday, for trial under the coercion act, laid himself liable to arrest, and a warrant was issued for him. An indignation meeting was held, and a conflict took place between the police and soldiers and the populace. The police attempting to protect the government stenographer, a fight took place, and the crowd repulsed the police, sixty in number. Several were struck with sticks and stones and severely injured. The police obtained reinforcements, returned to the scene, fired six shots, and two men were instantly killed. Several others were wounded.

The authorities of Madrid have discovered the existence of a well-organized and extensive anarchist plot, and have in consequence made several arrests in that city, Salamanca, and Cadiz, of persons whose connection with the conspiracy is beyond question.

The shooting at Mitcheltown, Ireland, by the police, caused great excitement and dismay among political circles. The Cabinet was hurriedly convened Monday, and all members of Parliament were urged to be present on the same day as a vote of censure would probably be moved by the opposition.

The press and all parties concur in saying Prince Bismarck went far enough toward humoring Russia, and he is now disposed to thwart Russian policy in regard to Bulgaria. The short truce between the Catholic church and the German government will soon terminate. The Catholic Social Congress at Liege was largely attended, but the German socialists regard the proceedings of the congress with contempt.

The Canadian schooner Alfred Adams was recently seized in Behring Sea by an American cutter, whose commander took away the sealskins and fishing tackle of the Adams, put a prize crew on board, and ordered the schooner to be navigated to Sitka. The captain of the Adams coolly headed the craft toward Victoria, B. C., where he arrived in safety a few days ago.

Fire broke out in a theater at Exeter, England, Monday night during a performance. In the rush to escape, scores were crushed to death and many others were suffocated. Over one hundred and thirty bodies were recovered.

An enormous gin, in the process of casting in the Vickers foundry at Sheffield, England, exploded, killing five men and injuring a large number of others, three of whom died in the hospital shortly after being taken there. The foundry buildings were demolished by the shock.

This powder never varies. A marvel of purity, strength and wholesomeness. More economical than the ordinary kinds, and cannot be sold in competition with the multitude of low cost, short weight, alum or phosphate powders. Sold only in cans. ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., 100 WALL ST., N. Y.

CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE,

A 16-page weekly journal, published by the National Christian Association,

Is an undimmed, ever-shining POLE STAR OF REFORM to lead the way of deliverance from the lodge evil.

THE SECRET LODGE SYSTEM

Is the source of greatest danger to the Christian Church. It religious rites, from the Sons of Veterans down to the Masonic, are anti-Christian. Following the advice of Rob. Morris, its members join churches to control or disintegrate them. The United Brethren, the Lutheran, the United Presbyterian, the Congregational and other denominations are learning that the history of the churches, in the weakness and dishonor caused by slavery, is being repeated by the encroachment of the secret lodges. There are in the United States

Some 200 different Lodges
With 2,000,000 members.
Costing $20,000,000 yearly.
This mighty world power confronts the church and seeks to rule and ruin every Christian Reform.

No Christian Reform Movement of the day is so necessary, yet so unpopular and beset with difficulties, as that which would remove the dark pall of oaths, dark-lantern meetings, secret signs, mysterious and pagan worship about altars unrecognized by the Word of the Living God.

Every Christian and Patriot should take the CYNOSURE.

Because it is the representative of the reform against the Lodge, with ablest arguments, biographical and historical sketches, letters from lecturers, seeders and suffers from lodge persecution. The ablest writers on this subject from all denominations and all parts of the country contribute. Special departments for letters from our metropolitan centers, on the relation of secret orders to current events.

The CYNOSURE begins its twentieth volume September 22, 1887, with features of special and popular interest.
